The comedy is a cartoon offering another of the "Silk Hat Harry" numbers. The program is closed with the organ solo, this week the selection being, "Sweethearts," Victor Herbert's favorite composition.

Rivoli Theatre

THE program at the Rivoli theatre marks an epoch in the history of the house in that the engagement of "The Miracle Man" is a new departure, the film going in for an indefinite engagement, whereas since the opening day, a policy of a weekly change has been in operation.

There are also other noteworthy happenings at the Rivoli this week. First is a discarding of the summer dress and proscenium arch and side wings for the orchestra pit and the installation of a new and novel setting which completely changes the appearance of the Seventh avenue end of the theatre.

On each side of the orchestra pit, large columns have been reared from a balustrade base beginning at about the height of the musicians' heads when standing. These columns have been set at an angle with the walls of the theatre with the apex nearest at the point where the screen opening is made. They rise to a shapely height and support a wall from their top to the ceiling of the theatre. Decorative scrolls have been twined about the columns which dress their bareness and back of them embroidered draperies are hung which hide back stage from view. The screen arch rises to the same height as the pillars and the wall mentioned is continued above the opening. The design of this new wall is that to represent finely cut marble blocks in two colors much the same as that used in constructing a certain type of stone floors, the technical name which the writer does not know.

The numbers presented on the Rivoli program for "The Miracle Man" engagement have been reduced owing to the length of the offering, and in consequence the usual pictorial, the news weekly, the strips of which are compiled from all the producers' offerings each week, the usual vocal and instrumental selections, the comedy and cartoon subject, have all been eliminated. The appeal to the public is made on the feature picture and a carefully prepared musical program which includes a very appropriate overture, not only in point of musical worth but from the fact that the story of the opera from which its number is taken, is somewhat similar to that told in "The Miracle Man." Dr. Reisenfeld's happy selection for this number is the prelude to "Parsifal," Richard Wagner's last music drama begun in his sixty-fifth year, and one of this great composer's most unique works noted not only for its semi-sacred character but for its wonderful impressiveness and musical beauty.

Wagner based his libretto on the famous legend of the Holy Grail and in this story of those who journeyed over great distances and amid almost unsurmountable hardships, in search of the great objective, we have the same thought, that of a sublime faith, which is the basic idea back of the story of "The Miracle Man."

The first part of the story of "Parsifal," or rather of the prelude, is a picture of the Grail ceremonial and the last portion has to do with the sufferings of Amfortas. Naturally the music of the composition is sympathetic in character and tunes the audience for the characterization scenes of "The Miracle Man," for this picture has its appeal in the sequences rather than in the direct pictorial narrative of the story.

The rendition of the overture, conducted by Dr. Reisenfeld himself, a colorful one, is followed by a single-reel offering a Paramount-Post subject entitled "A Night in June," being for the most part a series of pretty views of summer skys and scenic bits which prepare for the dramatic picture.

The screening of "The Miracle Man" is preceded by a stage setting and wordless prologue in which are shown two characters corresponding to two of those who have principal parts in the film, depicted as living amidst the degradation from which they are regenerated, through the influence of "The Miracle Man," as played by Joseph J. Dowling.

The scene is that of a room dimly lighted in scarlet with figures in silhouette and the walls of the place are shrouded. Two people are shown sitting at tables, one a woman corresponding to the girl of the film as she is at the beginning of the story, and the other that of the "dope" before he undergoes his reformation.

The showing of "The Miracle Man" at the Rivoli whose merits, cast and director are known to you, is given another artistic touch when the sequences of the story go from the locale of its beginning, Chinatown of New York to the country town where dwells the Miracle Man, by the stopping of the projection and a stage setting showing a country exterior, with a set piece in one, representing a hedge of beautifully colored giant carnations, is disclosed for a few moments, long enough to rest the eyes of the audience when the presentation continues in the usual manner until the last scenes where the Miracle Man has gone to his Maker. Here off stage voices sing appropriately as if to suggest that he whose faith was so great that he transformed those with whom he came in contact had passed into Heaven and that as the Gates opened for his entrance, the voices of the angels were heard.

The organ solo selected for this week is "Toccato," from the Fifth Symphony, an appropriate number for the music used by the choir which closes the last sequences of the film.

How the Song Tie-up Really Benefits and Brings in the Added Cash

MUCH is written and said regarding the manner in which songs "inspired" by motion pictures assist in putting them across. Proof in the shape of advertising and endorsements from exhibitors are, however, strangely lacking in most of these cases. The song written for "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" is one of the unusual cases on record where there is proof conclusive that it has been of great value to exhibitors who have shown the picture.

The song was published by Al. Piantadosi and Company, Inc., and when the picture was released the Woolworth five and ten cent stores which handle all the Piantadosi music were given instructions from headquarters to arrange special window displays of the music whenever the picture was playing in their respective localities. The results of this order are shown in the accompanying illustrations. The No. 1 store in Chicago fixed up an excellent display on the sheet music and gave credit to the source of the song by way of a special window card. During the time that the picture was playing in a number of the big Chicago houses, this display remained in the Woolworth window and also in the windows of several retail music dealers throughout the city, in most cases the displays being supplemented by announcement cards bearing the names of the theatres and the playing dates.

The tie-up with the Woolworth stores which has brought untold publicity to "The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

While the picture was playing at Lowell, Mass., both the Woolworth store there and an independent dealer, S. S. Kresge, brought out window displays of the music. The value of these displays may easily be seen if the reader takes a slant at the psychology of the thing. With fifty or a hundred or even more copies of the song displayed in a window, the title is firmly fixed in the mind of the passers-by. And even though there is no announcement card in the window along with the music, the title remains a fixture in the minds of the people at least until they see it over the front of a theatre. The proposition works the other way around as well with the results that both the exhibitor and the music dealer become beneficiaries of such means of exploitation.

The Piantadosi company goes about putting the songs across in a thoroughly business like manner. They put themselves in touch with exhibitors and offer the services of singers to render the song free of charge. Throwaways are also supplied and numerous other accessories, depending on the type of the song and the picture which inspired it.

J. S. Stone of the Regent Theatre, Kearney, New Jersey, wrote to the Piantadosi company as follows after the presentation of the song at his theatre in connection with the picture:

"I am highly elated at the splendid bit of cooperation on your part in helping me to advertise 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me.' Your singer rendered the song in a pleasing manner and was encored numerous times. The throwaways were an excellent medium which I used to good advantage. It is truly gratifying to learn what results can be obtained by unity. Your efforts are greatly appreciated."

In theatres of greater size than the Regent, many managers have called upon their own vocal staff or on local talent in the city to render the song. Thus at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, the management announced in the newspaper advertisements that the song would be rendered during performances of the picture by a local favorite of the Cleveland Naval Reserve Band.

In fact the song "tie-up" with picture productions is being utilized more and more by the progressive exhibitor who wishes to get the most in every way from his productions.

A Simple Yet Inexpensive Lobby Display Which Did Good Work for Armstrong

THE lobby display which can be produced at an expense commensurate with the results which may be obtained from its use is a subject in which every live manager is especially interested.

A display which was inexpensive yet unusually attractive, suggesting coolness and cleanliness, was used by Walter Armstrong, manager of the Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., for his engagement of Dorothy Phillips in "Destiny."

Mr. Armstrong has not played a Phillips picture since "The Heart of Humanity," and was desirous of making his patrons realize that "Destiny" was a worthy successor to the first named feature. Therefore he used as many informal pictures as scene stills in his lobby. A large cut-out carrying out the idea of the lobby decoration and color was placed at one side of the lobby and a fountain with a small figure stood in the opening of the cut-out. The title of the production, "Destiny," suggests a question as to the character of the production. The figure in the fountain suggests that of a thinker. In short, the character of the picture was not given away nor was it necessary to go to extremes in arousing the curiosity of the public.

The use of the large photographs of Miss Phillips served to remind patrons of the theatre that this was a picture with the same star which they had seen to advantage in "The Heart of Humanity," and also fixed her name in their minds, as this was the first picture which some had seen with this star, and they had not come to know her as well as some other players.

The whole display made the lobby look very attractive regardless of its advertising value and seemed to tell the passersby that the Strand was as clean and nice looking inside as it was outside.

Manager Armstrong did an excellent business with "Destiny," and is of the opinion that much of it was due to the pains he took in decorating his lobby and in displaying so many of the star's pictures.

Doughboy Just Naturally Horned Into the Parade

ALTHOUGH advertising stunts are strictly tabooed in street parades in Denver, Manager Ellison, of the Rialto and Princess theatres in that city, had an imposing float in the huge Labor Day parade.

It happened this way: Mr. Ellison had a float on the streets the morning of the parade advertising "The Witness for the Defence." An ex-soldier was driving the float, with orders to trail the parade.

Seeing an opening between a band and a labor organization the ex-soldier horned his way in. "What's the use in trailing if you can be part of the show?" asked the doughboy with the same spirit that promoted an American officer in France to refuse orders to retreat.

"The Land of Strong Men"

"THE LAND OF STRONG MEN," by A. M. Chisholm, is a Western story full of action and excitement.

Angus Mackay, his sister, Jean, and his brother, Torquil or "Turkey," are left in charge of their father's ranch on the death of the elder Mackay, who is shot and killed by some unknown person. Isaac J. Braden, a scheming lawyer, is the executor of the estate. He plans to sell it, buying it in for himself through a dummy purchaser, Angus, with the aid of a drunken but honest attorney, "Judge" Riley, defeats this scheme.

Mackay acts as stakeholder in a bet between the French brothers—a bad lot of neighbor—and Sam Paul, an Indian, who has entered a horse in the local races. Together with Chetwood, an English visitor, he is waylaid and robbed. Chetwood, who is in love with Mackay's sister, Jean, offers to lend Angus the money, but Angus refuses to accept it and borrows it from Braden, who takes a mortgage on his property. The race is won by the Indian, and the Frenches lose their money, still further crippling their already shaky finances. There are four of these boys, Gavin, Blake, Gerald, and Larry—all reckless and only one with the real stuff of manhood—the eldest, Gavin. Their sister, Kathleen, endeavors in vain to keep them out of trouble.

The Frenches now begin to cause trouble between Turkey and Angus, and the latter finally quarrels with his younger brother, who leaves the ranch.

Braden tries to induce Angus to help him unload an unwatered ranch on Chetwood, but Angus refuses. Later he learns that this ranch is supposed to belong to Faith Winton, his sweetheart.

Chetwood tells Angus that his income has been temporarily suspended and applies for a position on the ranch, which he secures; this because Jean has reproached him with being an idler.

Braden forecloses on Mackay's ranch, but Chetwood buys it in, and hands it back to him as a loan without interest.

Old man French dies, and Braden rifles his safe. Turkey Mackay, who has witnessed this, in turn rifles the safe of Braden, where he discoverers that Braden has falsified certain deeds to steal the land which rightfully belongs to Faith Winton.

Faith and Angus are married, and a reconciliation is effected between Angus and Turkey.

Braden discovers the loss of the papers. The French boys go through Judge Riley's desk without result and then waylay Angus by stretching a rope across the road, throwing him from his horse. Leaving him they send Blake French and Garland, a tool of Braden's, to demand the papers from Faith. She declares that she has not what they want. Blake French chokes her, and she pulls the mask from his face. French covers her with his gun, as Angus, who has escaped, rushes into the room. French shoots Angus, and attempts to shoot Faith, but Garland prevents it. They flee.

Angus, who has been only slightly wounded, recovers, and starts in pursuit. Gavin French and the other brothers, meanwhile, are surprised by Braden robbing his safe. A fight ensues, and Gerald French kills Braden. They all seek refuge in their own ranch-house, where they are joined by Blake. They determine to get away. Gaven tells the sister, Kathleen, to watch for an advertisement in the Pacific Spokesman, which will tell her where to join them.

A sheriff's posse, with Angus, starts in pursuit. Blake quarrels with his brothers and leaves them. He is killed by Sam Paul, whose granddaughter he has betrayed. Gerald and Larry are killed in a fight with the posse. Angus overtakes Gavin alone. Gaven confesses that he killed Angus' father in self-defense. Angus believes Gavin and, believing him to be a man of finer nature than his brothers, decides to let him go on his way for the sake of his sister.

"The Yellow Lord"

"THE YELLOW LORD," by Will Levington Comfort, is a colorful romance of the Orient. Finding himself broke in Shanghai Jack Bowditch answers an advertisement in the North China News for young gentlemen of some military experience to manage a tea plantation on an island. He is met at the offices of the Tsui Tsing Trading Company by Mr. Guthrie Catten, who gives him instructions for reaching Magdalena Island, and states that he himself will come on the following boat.

Bowditch finds this island isolated with a rock-bound harbor—a sort of Lotus land filled with the scent of the growing tea. He is welcomed to the Island by Hoy Mun, right hand man of Tsui Tsing—the Yellow Lord. He finds that the other white inhabitants of the place are Col. John Holt, a feeble old man, his daughter, Chireen, Jerry Comitu, and his wife and daughter, Magda.

On entering the house of mystery—the abode of the Yellow Lord—Bowditch encounters Chireen, who is playing a piano. It is a case of love at first sight with both of them.

Unwittingly entering the room of the Yellow Lord Bowditch finds him a huge half-witted Chinaman, at the moment crazed with liquor, and, being attacked by this man-mountain, is forced to knock the Chinaman out to save his own life.

Thereafter Hoy Mun takes care to see that Bowditch is not brought into the presence of the Lord of the island.

Bowditch devotes his time to falling deeper in love with Chireen and getting acquainted with Jerry Comitu, who is a little mad on the subject of buried treasure, and who is constantly planning a treasure hunt in which he desires Bowditch to join him.

Bowditch finds that there are about six hundred Chinese on the plantation and many more Malay natives, all under the jurisdiction of the Yellow Lord, who is the last of a famous Chinese family, tea merchants for hundreds of years. The major interest in the concern has been bought by Europeans who maintain the half-witted lord as the head of the company, but sequester him on the island with Hoy Mun for guardian. They drug the Chinese laborers with opium to avoid the necessity of paying their wages.

Jerry Comitu plans to lead an uprising of the natives against the company, hoping to seize the auxiliary cruiser belonging to the Yellow Lord, make himself king of the island and then hunt treasure on a neighboring island. He invites Bowditch to join him in this enterprise and lures him from the castle. When Bowditch refuses to join him, Comitu attacks him, and Bowditch narrowly escapes with his life, but arrives at the castle in time to warn the others that the natives have already begun a massacre of the Chinese.

Catten takes command of the defense of the castle which Comitu attacks. Colonel Holt is killed in action. Magda, Jerry's daughter, is held as a hostage. She is attacked by the Yellow Lord as she attempts to reach a secret tunnel connected with the powder magazine. Catten shoots and kills the Yellow Lord. Magda, who is in love with Catten, is never-the-less working with her father, Jerry Comitu. She blows up the castle and Catten is killed. A steamer entering the harbor is first seized by the supporters of Hoy Mun but afterward captured, with the cruizer, by Jerry Comitu and his forces. Comitu bargains for the release of Magda, and she is permitted to depart with him on the steamer in search of treasure, Comitu deserting his native forces as soon as he secures the boat. As the boat is leaving the harbor Hoy Mun presses the button of a mine and blows up the ship.

Bowditch persuades Chireen to leave the island with him and seek a less exciting spot. Hoy Mun resigns his office with the Tsui Tsing Trading Company which passes, with the island, out of the hands of the Chinese and into the hands of the European stockholders.

"The Invader's Son"

IN "The Invader's Son," by William A. Kennedy, we are permitted to take a look into the future when the idea embodied in the League of Nations is carried into effect as an International Republic.

While Raoul Morestier is at the front fighting for his country, his chateau, together with the surrounding country, falls into the hands of the Germans under the command of Count von Essenhendal, who accounts Raoul's wife, Hermance, as a part of the spoils of war.

After the Count has departed for the front Hermance realizes that she is about to become a mother, and that her child will be of the hated German blood. She determines to kill the child as soon as it is born, and in this Dr. Joumonville, the family physician, encourages her. Father Pelletier, the priest, however, refuses to grant her absolution for the crime. She pleads her case—her shame before her husband—the fact that the child will be a German, an enemy of France. The priest finally consents to absolve her providing that she will keep the child three days and nurse it herself, well knowing that her mother love will then prevent the crime. This is the case, and when the doctor comes at the end of three days with chloroform, she shudders at the thought of the act she had contemplated.

By an accident of war von Essenhendel and Raoul meet in hand-to-hand combat in a trench and, having lost their weapons, fight with their bare hands until both are exhausted. They agree that if both guess the time thirty minutes wide of the mark they will part without further fighting, and that each will carry with him a message to the loved ones of the other. The messages are written in blood from a wound in von Essenhendel's wrist.

Count von Essenhendel is stricken with remorse when he discovers the identity of his foe. He determines that when the war is over he will claim the child and give it the benefit of his own high station.

Raoul, sent into his home country as a spy, learns of the birth of the child, and returns to his regiment without seeing his wife, believing that she has been faithless to him. At the end of the war he determines to go to America, but Dr. Joumonville persuades him that his wife is an innocent victim of circumstances, and that it is his duty to go home and raise the child as a loyal child of France. Raoul forgives Hermance her misfortune and returns home.

Here begins the second part of the story which concerns the fortunes of the invader's son. The German father plots to build up a business for Raoul of his business, and then to present it to the boy, Paul, at the same time acknowledging him as his heir. He finances a partner for Raoul.

Raoul, in spite of every effort to look upon Paul as his own son, is jealous of him and prefers his own two sons who are, of course, younger. He plans to marry one of these to Yvonne de Robincourt, but this young lady has already met Paul and fallen in love with him. Raoul warns Paul to drop his pretensions to the hand of this young lady, but Paul does not promise to do so.

Paul is sent to England, and there becomes an advocate of the International Republic and a leader of the party in France advocating the welding together of the great nations of the world. Monsieur de Robincourt opposes this movement, and he and Paul are pitted against one another as candidates for the Chamber of Deputies where de Robincourt has alrcady served.

Paul's father, meanwhile, has unsuccessfully endeavored to trap his affections with a German girl, determined to make a German of Paul, Paul defeats M. de Robincourt, who, nevertheless presents him with the hand of Yvonne.

Count von Essenhendel reveals himself to Paul on his deathbed, and offers Paul his fortune, but the young man refuses it and prefers to remain a son of France.

The story ends with the election of Paul as the first Secretary of State of the International Republic.

"The Trail of the Beast"

"THE TRAIL OF THE BEAST," by Achmed Abdullah, opens with the mysterious murder of M. Anatole Jarvet, radical deputy, and the arrest of Madamoiselle Angele Lantaigne, popular actress and daughter of M. Lantaigne, chief of the secret political police, who immediately secures his daughter's release by proving that she was with him and a friend, Lord Menzies-Kerr, at the time of the murder.

James Oliver Tennant, a celebrated American detective attached to the Agence Ducastel, is called in to solve the mystery. His investigation brings to his attention certain letters concerning a "man with a limp" which seem to implicate his friend, Lord Menzies-Kerr, a rather mysterious globe trotter, who is devoted to Madamoiselle Lantaigne. Tennant, though himself in love with the young lady, believes that she is engaged to Menzies-Kerr and desires, if possible, to clear his friend of suspicion.

Guillame Nordeg, a radical leader of the Saint Sulpice district, upon whose complaint Madamoiselle Lantaigne was arrested, disappears and Tennant sets himself the task of finding this man, believing that he alone holds the key to the mystery. Raoul Steynard, editor of a radical weekly, calls at the house of the murdered man and removes certain papers, but has his pockets picked by Doumay, an operative of the Agence Ducastel, who turns over to Tennant what purports to be a map of Indo-China, but which Tennant discovers is a cleverly disguised map of the fortifications of Paris.

Tennant receives an anonymous note offering him a large sum of money for the map, which is to be delivered in a disreputable cafe in the Saint Sulpice district. He is set upon and almost murdered, but saved by an Apache of his acquaintance who, although a ruffian, is a patriot and realizes that Tennant is working in the interest of France.

Tennant has the map altered by M. Ducastel, his chief, who was formerly a celebrated forger, and goes to see Raoul Steynard and offers to sell him the map for $500,000. The deal is made and the map and money change hands. Tennant, upon his return to his office, discovers that the money is counterfeit.

Tennant has scarcely left Steynard's house when the latter is murdered under much the same circumstances as Jarvet. Witnesses state that a "man with a limp" was seen to enter the place shortly before the murder. Visiting the scene of the murder Tennant encounters Nordeg, whom he does not recognize until the man has started away in his automobile. Tennant gives chase and meets with a serious accident, smashing his machine but escaping without great personal injury.

Tennant discovers that there is another man with a limp; also that Menzies-Kerr was at one time confined as a prisoner in New Caledonia, where he acquired his limp through wearing a ball and chain. Tennant suspects that the second man with a limp is a brother of Madamoiselle Lantaigne, who was supposed to have been accidentally killed in the Alps years before.

Lantaigne and Menzies-Kerr are lured to a house near the German Embassy by Nordeg, and there confined and threatened with death if they do not deliver the true map. Tennant rescues them, and discovers that both murders have been committed by young Lantaigne, who was convicted of giving or selling to the Germans certain papers which were really stolen by Nordeg. In the fight which accomplishes the rescue, Nordeg is fatally wounded, and admits his guilt. Young Lantaigne, who has also been captured by the German agents of Nordeg, admits that he killed Jarvet for blackmailing his mother years before and for sealing Lantaigne's lips by threatening to expose a love affair with his mother if he did not accept the blame for disclosing the military secret in question—the plan for an automatic spring increasing the range of the great guns.

With this confession is cleared away the barrier between Tennant and Madmoiselle Lantaigne, who had refused but now consents to marry him.

"The Ivory Trail"

"THE IVORY TRAIL," by Talbot Munday, is the thrilling story of a search for an ivory hoard in darkest Africa.

Lord Montdidier, Yerkes (an American) and three others start out to find the ivory cache of Tippoo Tib, ivory hunter and trader and governor of half the Congo. At Zanzibar, where they are quarantined for cholera they are joined by Georges Coutlass, a picturesque scoundrel, brave and unscrupulous, who being assured that he is not wanted, decides to trail along with the party. At Zanzibar also they make the acquaintance of Lady Isobel Saffren Walden, a woman of international lack of reputation, more than suspected of being a spy. She tries to induce them to sign an agreement with the Sultan of Zanzibar, by which they are to receive only 20 per cent. of the amount of ivory recovered. She declares that if they do not sign this agreement the Sultan, backed by the German government, will make their stay in Africa anything but safe.

Montdidier arranges that the rest of the party shall go on without him while he returns to London and approaches the hunt from another direction.

At Mombassa they experience the first result of the interference of Lady Saffern Walden, where they have great difficulty in securing licenses for their guns and ammunition, but this matter is arranged by Courtney, a celebrated explorer.

At Nairobi they encounter Professor Schillingschen, German agent, posing as a scientist and intent upon preventing their penetration of East Africa. An attempt on his part to detain them for shooting game without a license is frustrated.

They no sooner enter German East Africa than they are arrested, and while under arrest witness the barbarous practices of the German military governors of the colony. Lady Walden now comes to them with a proposition to betray the Germans and to help them escape. They set the village on fire and escape in the confusion that follows. It is not long after this that Lady Waldron conspires with Coutlass to rob our adventurers of their boat and money, but leaves Coutlass behind when she makes her escape.

From this point the adventurers plunge into numberless adventures and brushes with Schillingschen, who persistently pursues them and harrasses them though he is at one time made a prisoner and apparently rendered powerless, only to escape with ease and again trouble them. There is a tremendous duel between Schillingschen and Coutlass on top of a mountain, where they have both gone to recover a diary (containing important evidence of German machinations) which Schillingschen has dropped when driven from camp. Here a fight in the dark ends with the death of Coutlass in a hand to hand fight with a lion, who happens on the scene, and this fight is followed by a running battle between the two parties, resulting finally in the death of Schillingschen.

The adventurers at last reach their objective point—the mountain where Tippoo Tib's ivory horde is supposed to be hidden, guarded by a tribe of cannibals. A native, formerly in the employ of Schillingschen, acts as guide and after an encounter with a troop of elephants which nearly results in the death of the narrator of the story, they come upon Montdidier who reaches the mountain at the same time, and immediately thereafter discover the hiding place of the ivory which is stored in a cave in enormous quantities just as rumor has reported. All of the adventurers are made rich and the ivory, it is intimated, proves to be of tremendous use to the British when Germany finally lays her cards on the table and starts the great war.

Burton Holmes Up in the Rhineland

Burton Holmes of Travelogue fame is now in the Occupied Rhineland completing a long motor tour of Belgium, Northern France and such parts of Germany as are at present dominated by the Allied Forces. For weeks he and his party have been constantly on the move, making both still and motion pictures not only of devasted areas, shattered cities, towns and villages, but also showing what the people are doing to "come back" and the various phases of the gigantic undertaking of rebuilding their ruined homes, factories, bridges and railways, as well as cultivating their long neglected fields.

Pathe Feature Service Growing

THE rapid growth of the Pathe feature service during the past few months has been attracting marked attention in all quarters of the motion picture industry. The promises made by Charles Pathe during his recent visit to the United States to give exhibitors only the highest class of features is being fulfilled to the letter, according to a statement just issued by Pathe.

The works of several very prominent authors and directors have been added to the list of features scheduled for the next three months, and the high standard set for Pathe features is certain to be maintained.

During the last few weeks Pathe has issued such features as "The World Aflame," "The Thirteenth Chair," "Oh, Boy," "The Bishop's Emeralds" and "The Virtuous Model."

Listed for early release are J. Stuart Blackton's big feature, "The Moonshine Trail," "Twin Pawns," an Acme Picture Corporation special, featuring Mae Murray; "The False Code," starring Frank Keenan; "The Woman of Pleasure," Jesse D. Hampton's version of the great English melodrama, featuring Blanche Sweet; "A Damsel in Distress," a Capellani special, featuring Creighton Hale and June Caprice, taken from the Saturday Evening Post story by P. G. Wodehouse, celebrated writer of comedy dramas.

"Pathe is making every effort to give exhibitors the finest product it is possible for us to obtain," said Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe. "Within the next few days we will have some announcements of the utmost importance to make. We are now negotiating for several productions which are the best I have seen in many months.

Policy to Purchase and Offer Only Best Is Proving Popular

"There is no feature too good for Pathe to give its clients. It has been our policy, ever since we inaugurated open bookings, many months ago, to purchase the best independent productions on the market. In the last four months, it has been our good fortune to obtain a particularly high-class array of pictures.

"Productions like 'The Thirteenth Chair.' 'The World Aflame,' 'The Moonshine Trail' and others on our list, are the type exhibitors clamor for. This is not an idle statement, but is verified by our exchange reports. 'The Thirteenth Chair,' even before release date, had passed the half way mark in our minimum quota estimations. Today, the picture is exceeding all our predictions for it.

"'The World Aflame' is undoubtedly the most timely subject Pathe ever handled, and its message to the American public has been meeting with the hearty approval of Cabinet officers, Senators, Governors, and the foremost leaders of capital and labor alike. It is truly a great picture.

"Pathe has long been noted for its leadership in the field of short subjects. Its comedies, news reels, reviews, and other short features remain unsurpassed.

'Frisco Realart Head

Ralph B. Quivo has been appointed manager of the San Francisco branch of Realart Pictures Corporation. The announcement of his appointment follows the recent visit to the West Coast city of John S. Woody, now general manager of the company.

Exploitation Campaign Is Planned

Will Pilot Destinies of "Everybody's Business" and "The Lost Battalion"

THOSE who played "Mickey," and they represent a large share of the exhibitors, will be interested to know that the firm who handled the Norman film, the W. H. Productions Company is planning campaigns for two other productions which will rival if not eclipse the exploitation methods used in the past by this enterprising concern.

The films selected and which, by the way, are worthy of the campaign planned for their presentation throughout the country, are "The Lost Battalion" and "Everybody's Business," both subjects which the exhibitors have become somewhat familiar in pre-release advertising.

For "Everybody's Business" some unique possibilities are presented. The picture is an anti-Bolsheviki subject, or rather a strong romantic drama with a background of the kind mentioned and the announcement of its early release was met with much favorable comment from influential organizations who are interested in various uplift movements. One of these organizations which has interested itself in the film to the extent that it lends itself and its name to recommending the picture is the National Security League, Inc., whose civic secretary, is Etta V. Leighton. Miss Leighton is so impressed with the message the feature carries that she is personally attempting to secure the picture bookings through the many sister organizations of the Security League.

The W. H. Productions Company, however, is not content to allow the picture to gain in popularity through the ordinary mediums and consequently has gone to great expense and trouble in securing tie-ups which will be sure to bring the feature prominently into public notice.

One of these is the securing of H. C. Wittmer, the noted magazine author to write a thirty-five thousand word novelization of the film story. This will be syndicated and published throughout the country. The World will carry the stories in the New York district and is expected to place six hundred thousand copies before the public attention.

A song tie-up is planned and Louis Weslyn has been engaged to write the composition which will be made to figure in the exploitation campaign as prominently as did the "Mickey" selection. Other first-class advertising is being planned for the feature.

For "The Lost Battalion" equally as good work is being done. The film is getting a first-class showing at the Cohan Theater, where it is playing to big business at prices two dollars high and promises to hold up at the Broadway house for some time.

For this subject some very sensational paper has been prepared, which emphasizes the fact that this is a feature with a large historical angle to be considered inasmuch as the characters who enacted the famous page from American history really appear in the film version which, by the way, has been made excellent material by a journey into the fictional field for a romance and a general theme.

In fact this is one of the great angles from which the producers and from which the W. H. Productions Company expect the film will receive its greatest amount of public interest.

Everyone will want to see these famous people who are now enacting the same parts they really played in the episode of the war, when the battallion was lost.

There are a number of clever exploitation schemes being hatched for this picture and one of them will be full plans for getting local color into a managers' showing on the picture by securing one or more of the 77th Division of which the "lost battalion" was a part, to take part in the presentation, giving a lecture on the film as it progresses.

Owing to the fact that the 77th was a very cosmopolitan unit this will be possible, as nearly every city in the United States and nearly every nationality was represented in its personnel.

It will be interesting to watch the career of these two features, both so timely and constructed from subjects in which the people are so interested, and possessing so many good exploitation stunt possibilities. The merits of the films are also to be recommended according to advance reports, and this alone is expected to build business for the offerings.

"Anne" Tales in Educational Tie-up

Two announcements were made this week linking motion pictures with educational enterprises.

First, came a statement from the New York State Reconstruction Commission that pictures are to be utilized in its campaign to further highway development and the ship-by-truck movement.

Following this Realart Pictures Corporation made the announcement that "Anne of Green Gables," one of the four L. M. Montgomery books used as the basis of a photoplay starring Mary Miles Minter, has been put on the list of required readings by the State Board of Education.

The book is included in the English course of State schools, the reason for the selection, it is said, being because it is considered the highest type of stories of American girlhood.

Ragland General Sales Manager of Realart

Succeeding John S. Woody, who has just been promoted from the position of general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation to that of general manager of the same organization, Realart announces the appointment of John C. Ragland. At the time of Realart's organization, Mr. Ragland was appointed St. Louis manager and in the brief period since that date, he has, it is stated, produced remarkably fine results in St. Louis territory and its vicinity.

Mr. Ragland's career in the amusement industries is long and varied.

With the promotion of Mr. Woody to be general manager, Mr. Ragland, because of his fine record, was selected as his successor.

Roma-New York Ready to Produce

Newly Formed Organization Will Begin Activities

PLANS for the Roma-New York Pictures Corporation, recently organized under the auspices of General Giuseppe Garibaldi and the Universal Film Co., are certainly developing fast. P. A. Powers, president of the company, following close on the announcement of the formation of the corporation, now states that Mr. Laemmle, who arrived in New York last week, is already choosing and appointing the directors, stars, camera men, etc., that are to sail in the near future for Rome, Italy, where they are to co-operate with the Italian end of the company, and where work will be started on the company's first production as soon as they arrive. Casting for productions that are to be of the caliber of "Cabiria, "Quo Vadis," "Spartacus," and other big Italian successes is something that would prove very difficult for anyone having less experience and not having the wonderful advantage of the choice of Universal talent.

The Roma-New York, as previously announced, is going to produce only big, spectacular pictures in the artistic and wonderful way that the Italian producers alone can offer and inspire.

For the first picture it is almost certain that the lead will be given to a well known American star, who will sail for Rome, Italy, in the very near future, accompanied by the American directors that are to co-operate with the Italian directors, and who will acquaint them with the peculiarities and requisites of the American public. Work on the company's first picture will start as soon as the members of the American branch of the Roma-New York reach Rome.

The Roma-New York represents more than just an excellent business proposition. It has a deep motive that is almost sure to make it a success, and classes the company among the creme-de-le-creme of the higher type of Motion Picture producing companies.

It is aimed to open up a new field and a directive in the industry, a trend of thought that heretofore had never been considered in the art. The pictures of the Roma-New York will bring from over there a message to the people of America from the people of Italy; a message that will bring about closer and better understanding between the two people. In order to insure the commercial success of the undertaking, Italian directors will soon be here in this country to co-operate with the American production end of the Roma-New York company, to advise and acquaint them of the requisites and the subtle likes and dislikes of the Italian public. To the Roma-New York goes the privilege and the honor of being the first company to blaze the way to bigger things in cinematographic enterprise from an international point of view.

It may be said that aside from all the consideration and assets of a $5,000,000 capitalization, aside from the fact that the names of P. A. Powers in America and General Garibaldi in Italy, are guarantee in themselves of the success of such an enterprise, the great problems of production that confront many companies are absolutely non-existent in the Roma-New York organization.

Elk to Spread on "The Fatal Fortune"

Elk Photoplays, Inc., who are releasing the Helen Holmes serial, "The Fatal Fortune," report great business. The bookings are coming in in great numbers.

"There is going to be something doing on this serial," said a member of this company. "This is positively going to be the feature serial of the season in every respect. Besides the many advertising novelties that the S. L. K. Serial Corporation are getting out on this serial, we, too, are going to put out a number of unique stunts that will make our territory sit up and take notice.

Marmont at Work on Fourth Vitagraph

Percy Marmont, who has announced his decision to devote himself exclusively to the screen despite offers to return to the speaking stage, has just started on the filming of his fourth Vitagraph picture. This will be his third appearance opposite Alice Joyce—he sandwiched in a picture, playing opposite Corinne Griffith in "The Gamblers"—for he has worked with Miss Joyce in "The Vengeance of Durand," and "The Winchester Woman," both Vitagraph productions scheduled for early release.

Fox's Excel Program Opens Season

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, the young co-stars, will inaugurate the expanded 1919-1920 Excel picture program which William Fox recently announced, by offering the happy, snappy comedy, "The Lost Princess." J. Anthony Roach wrote the story and Scott Dunlap wrote the scenario and also directed the co-stars, whose popularity is growing with each picture.

"The Lost Princess" is a type of picture which has become popular throughout the country, mainly through the excellent work of these young artists. It is a polite comedy, not without heart interest and dramatic moments; and it offers Mr. Ray and Miss Fair the best opportunity they have had to display the refined art with which their names are linked.

A Typewriter Tie-up

Another tie-up of far-reaching effect was consummated last week by the Famous Players-Lasky Home Office Publicity Department, when arrangements were completed with the Corona Typewriter Company of Croton, N. Y., whereby more than eight hundred Corona agents and sub-agents throughout the country become auxiliary exploiters of Billie Burke's newest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Misleading Widow."

Step In Blanche Sweet Career

Her Screen Reappearance in "Woman of Pleasure" Will Be in "Different" Role

EXHIBITORS who have been in the habit of looking forward to the Blanche Sweet productions for character portrayals of an unique kind, associating all those previously done with the Griffith school of acting, will find it is said "A Woman of Pleasure" the star's first independent picture as a Pathe Special, marks the stepping stone of her screen career.

Up to the time she embarked on this venture, exhibitors and public alike, expected to see Miss Sweet in picture after picture enacting roles in which the manner of registering emotions was suppressed; in which the star, no matter how trying the situation, would exercise the greatest control of her feelings. In "A Woman of Pleasure" Miss Sweet does the unexpected. In fact the role is different from anything she has ever attempted or played.

The story, by James Willard, which was a success as a melodrama of the early nineties and ran for years at the Adelphi Theatre, London, is itself out of the ordinary, and different. "A Woman of Pleasure" is a combination story of sensational climaxes. It abounds in spectacular effects. The locale is shifting. The heart-pull is of a more fundamental character. The situations have vital interest.

The factors of uncommon strength in the story have contributed to Miss Sweet's out-of-the-ordinary delineation of the "Woman of Pleasure," coupled also with a desire to free herself and exhibitors of the impression that one style of acting and one style alone is to be expected from her productions in the future.

In "The Unpardonable Sin," her latest achievement after a two years' rest, the first efforts of the star are seen to depart from the style which clings. But departing is not forgetting.

A Drury Lane Drama Bought by Famous

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has secured the screen rights to "The Great Ruby," the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, which was one of Augustin Daly's biggest successes in this country and which has been presented by stock companies in practically every city in the United States.

Scenarioist Also Plays in Serial

The distinction of playing one of the most important roles created by the figment of one's own imagination is one which has been enjoyed by few motion picture scenarioists, but this is what is credited to Elsie Van Name in the production of the "Mystery of No. 13," the recently completed Francis Ford serial, produced under the supervision of Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Incorporated.

Miss Van Name, in addition to having one of the prominent feminine parts of "The Dominant Serial" made at the Francis Ford studio at Hollywood, California, supplied the detailed continuity for the serial.

Shorty Hamilton Western Dramas Go Well

From all indications, the fifteen, two-reel Western dramas featuring Shorty Hamilton, produced by the Monogram Film Company in 1914, and now being reissued and sold on a State-Right basis by the Sunnywest Film Company through the Elk Photoplays, Inc., will go very quickly.

Already some territories have been sold, and many more negotiations are going on.

Filming in The North Costs a Life

NORTH of the fifty-sixth parallel, with a temperature of sixty degrees below zero. That is where the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's new special feature, "Back to God's Country," to be released September 29, was filmed.

The feature was adapted from the James Oliver Curwood story, Wapi the Walrus, which appeared in Good Housekeeping magazine and produced by the Curwood-Carver productions, Inc. The picture is said to be one of the most unusual ever screened and the scenes were produced under conditions that were almost unsurmountable. So remarkable were the incidents as to be almost unbelievable, and Ernest Shipman, the man responsible for the picture, has made an affidavit that everything shown in the picture, and everything told about the production, are actual facts.

The cold was so intense and bitter that one man died, Ronald Byron, the leading man with Nell Shipman, the star. This tragedy almost caused the company to give up the experiment, but finally Wheeler Oakman was secured to take his place as leading man and the production went on.

"Back to God's Country" Made Under Hardships

Another member of the company was so severely frozen that both his feet were amputated, and almost everyone in the party suffered frozen hands, ears and noses.

The camera men worked with huge mittens, and when it was necessary to focus or thread the camera, they were in constant danger of frost bites. The oil had to be drawn from the cameras before they could be worked and if the film was stationary for even a moment the emulsion froze and the celluloid cracked like glass.

Sixteen different varieties of wild animals appeared in the picture, not counting the great number of dogs of all kinds. These animals played the natural roles of their homes in the forest. The other animals included wolves, lynz, foxes, mountain lions, porcupines and bears.

Nell Shipman, the star, was the only girl in the camp, with the exception of squaws. The rigor of the work appealed particularly to her as she had had many years' experience on the big trails of the Northwest country and spent a portion of her girlhood among the Indians of Alaska. There her great love and understanding of animals was developed.

"Back to God's Country" undoubtedly will be acclaimed by critics as a wonderful animal story. The naturalness of the four-footed performers blends intelligently into the action of the drama.

Throughout the making of this picture, realism was the keynote and every sacrifice was made, even those leading up to the gates of death. The heart interest that abounds will hold people of tender and medium years, while the drama in its gripping strength and its intensity of action will appeal to all, it is believed.

Mr. Curwood was with the company and personally supervised some of the scenes of the picture, which was directed by David Hartford. Others of the company included beside Miss Shipman and Mr. Oakman, Wellington Plater, Ralph Laidlow and Charles Arling.

It surely was cold in the North during the filming of the First National attraction, "Back to God's Country." Ask the players

Pioneer Expanding Its Publicity Service

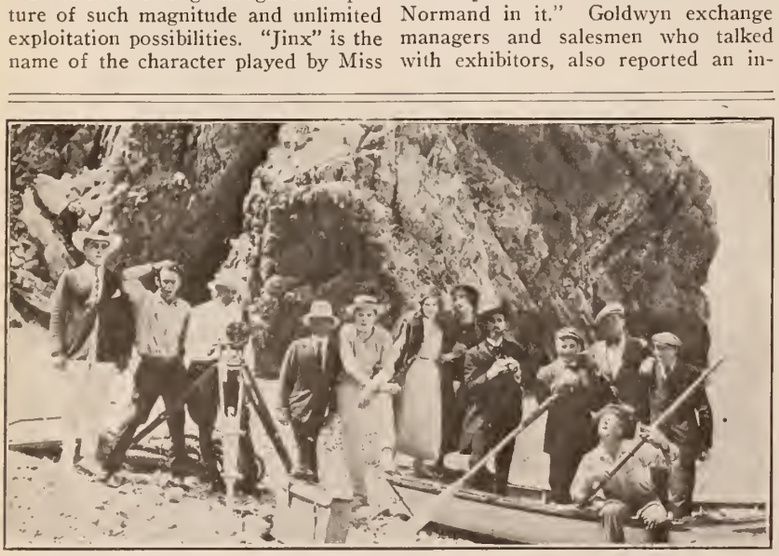
Owing to the marked success which has attended the new publicity policy of the Pioneer, its activities have increased so rapidly that new quarters are being prepared, which will give more than double the space to this department, than it enjoys at present.

One of the features of the new Pioneer publicity policy which has brought forth the most praise is the service which is being rendered directly to the exhibitor. Managers playing the Pioneer pictures are invited to communicate with the publicity manager at the home office, stating his needs and problems. Immediate attention is given to the request, with the result that the revenue earned for the exhibitor on the Pioneer pictures has increased greatly.

The latest "stunt" put over by the Exhibitors' Service Department is the exploitation of The Unpardonable Sin, which is to play an engagement at the Metropolis Theatre in New York City. A force of newspaper men, billposters, song pluggers, and special service men have been conducting a campaign which is expected to set a new record for box office receipts at this house.

Comedians In A New Circus Story

"BIGGER and stronger than 'Polly of the Circus,'" the story of the big top with which Samuel Goldwyn launched his program just two years ago, and which still is remembered by exhibitors as a circus classic, is the verdict of Samuel Goldwyn organization, who saw the first print of Mabel Normand's new production, "Jinx," at the Culver City Studios last week. Prints of the picture are on the way east and soon will be shown to exhibitors at Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges. A wire from the coast reads: "Victor Schertzinger has turned out a circus masterpiece—it's the best picture of its kind ever screened. Mabel Normand is a knockout."



Until last week, the picture went under the name of "Empty Paradise," a title that was discarded because it did not seem strong enough for a picture of such magnitude and unlimited exploitation possibilities. "Jinx" is the name of the character played by Miss Normand, and unless the guess of the Goldwyn studio forces at Culver City goes far from the mark, Jinx is destined to became one of the most famous of screen personages within the next few months. A tremendous exploitation campaign is being planned for the purpose of introducing her to every film fan in the country.

Mabel Normand Seen in Second of the Kind in "Jinx"

The history of this production, listed on Goldwyn's schedule of fall releases, is interesting. It is a direct outcome of hundreds of letters received from exhibitors during the past year, all to the same effect. "We want another circus picture and we want Mabel Normand in it." Goldwyn exchange managers and salesmen who talked with exhibitors, also reported an insistent demand for a picture of the big top.

In directing the production, Victor Schertzinger was given a free hand, his only instructions being to turn out a film that would surpass any in which Miss Normand has appeared. Months were spent in the making of the five reels, in the designing of absolutely correct settings and in finding players that would be in keeping with the circus atmosphere.

The story of "Jinx" is said to be filled with action, some of it dramatic, much of it irresistibly humorous and always calculated to strengthen the characterization which Miss Normand gives of the little circus girl, who seems to be pursued by ill-fortune. Whatever way she turns, bad luck haunts her. There are opportunities galore for sympathetic appeal in the interpretation of "Jinx." The cast includes John Bowers, Florence Carpenter, Ogden Crane, Gertrude Claire, Clarence Arper and Blanche Payson.

Fox Feature Has Circus Atmosphere

A circus under the "big top" or on the motion picture screen has always exercised an extraordinary drawing power. This has been evidenced annually in all large cities by the size and class of audiences which flock to the canvas or the amphitheatre whenever the big show comes to town.

In producing "The Merry-Go-Round," Fox Film Corporation has secured what both the executives and the directorial staff believe to be the most accurate reproduction of a circus ever staged for pictures.

In this photoplay Peggy Hyland is starring in a role which gives her ample scope for dramatic as well as light comedy work.

Cartoon Strip to Feature Gale Henry

The first of a series of novel publicity "stunts" to exploit Gale Henry and the other Bulls-Eye Comedies stars has made its appearance. The Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, distributors of the Gale Henry productions, has introduced a "comic strip" using the Gale Henry character, which will be furnished in mat form gratis to newspapers and exhibitors. The cartoon will be released weekly, beginning October first. A systematic effort to place the cartoons in 700 newspapers has already been started.

A Serial Daredevil

When Antonio Moreno's new serial is seen on the screen, Sam Polo, one of the best known circus acrobats will make his bow under the Vitagraph banner as a daredevil serial player.

Sam Polo is a brother of Eddie Polo, who is well known to picture fans for his daring, and like his famous brother, Sam, is equally skilled in acrobatic work and dramatic finesse.

Stock Company Formed with Four Leads

Formation of a stock company around four leading players who will appear together in pairs in alternate pictures has been announced by the Southern California Producting Company, which is making a new series of Strand Comedies for release by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual. The four principal players are Gertrude Selby, Kathrine Lewis, Harry Depp and James Liddy. The first of the new series presents Gertrude Selby and Harry Depp, formerly leading man in musical comedy, in a picture called "Betty and the Boys," while the second release, titled "Good Gracious Grace," will have Kathrine Lewis and James Liddy, former leading man with Kolb and Dill.

Seven of the series already have been produced, or are in course of production at the studio at 6107 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, while another still to be made will present all four of the actors, it is expected, as an all star comedy cast.

"Her Game" Is Next for Florence Reed

A forthcoming United Picture Theatres release will be Florence Reed's next feature drama, "Her Game," which will mark the third in that star's United Series.

"Her Game" is directed by Frank Crane under the personal supervision of A. J. Bimberg, and is a "special" in five reels. It will form a September release for United.

Prominent in the cast supporting Miss Reed are Conway Tearle, Jed Prouty, Florence Billings and Mathilda Bundrage. Some striking Southern exteriors are reported among the beautiful settings of the story, with the action of the later reels centering in a roadhouse ingenuously described by the heroine as "delightfully disreputable."

Studio Site Selected

A. J. Bimberg, managing director of the Florence Reed screen productions, has acquired a site in the heart of the theatrical section of New York and will erect thereon what is planned to be one of the finest studios in the United States.

"Mothers of Men" will be the first feature produced by Jose Productions for Film Specials, Inc.

Equity Names Pretentious Ideals

Plans to Really Care for Exhibitors Over Country

EQUITY Pictures Corporation, which some time ago was formed to produce a number of high class features during the year, including releases of Clara Kimball Young, is going to follow the set motto of "giving service, not talk," according to Harry Reichenbach, who will handle the advertising, exploitation and promotion in general of the concern's releases.

Already 80 per cent. of the country has been sold on the mere announcement of the quality of pictures the company is going to put out, inaugurated by "The Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young. Exchanges are being picked with care, only the best and most reliable in every center being intrusted with distribution.

A departure from the ordinary exploitation will be found soon in a page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post, which will give the names of the first run houses on "Eyes of Youth" throughout the country.

Another departure, according to Mr. Reichenbach will be that Equity will not depend on its exchanges to supply accessories, etc., for the pictures, but will offer its aids from the main offices on the Coast and in Los Angeles.

November 1 has been set for the release of "Eyes of Youth" instead of October 15 as first announced. The feature was finished early last week. The cost is announced as approximately $250,000. Gene Roth of the California theatre, San Francisco, and Kehrlein Brothers of the Kinema, Los Angeles, have booked it for a pre-release run, paying according to the Equity statement above the pro-rata price for the territory. A $600 exploitation campaign, beginning 60 days prior to the release is under way in each city.

The Wheeler Newspaper Syndicate serving leading papers throughout the country will distribute pictures of Clara Kimball Young, pictures in which the eyes are cut out. A contest for $5,000 will then be inaugurated throughout the country, prizes being awarded in each section to the ones who paint in Miss Young's eyes best. A committee of artists, including Howard Chandler Christy, will be judges.

"Elevating a Husband" is announced by Mr. Reichenbach as the next vehicle for Miss Young.

The first of four specials with House Peters as the star, "Love, Honor and Obey," will be the second Equity release. This will be a Monte Katterjohn production.

Announcement of a leading feminine star to be added to the Equity list, and who will do a series of pictures during the year, will shortly be forthcoming.

Included in the star cast supporting Miss Young in "Eyes of Youth" are Vincent Serrano, Edmund Lowe, William Courtney, Milton Sills, Pauline Stark, Ralph Lewis, Gareth Hughes, Sam Sothern and Edward Kimble.

Big Showmen to View "Bandbox"

First Run Exhibitors to Judge Merits of Picture

"THE BANDBOX," starring Doris Kenyon, the Deitrich-Beck, Inc. production of Louis Joseph Vance's widely-read story, will be the subject of simultaneous trade showings this week at all Hodkinson branches, where many of the biggest first run exhibitors of America, will judge on its merits a production, in which they have displayed unusual interest ever since the Hodkinson announcement of its completion. Among the vitally interested showmen, who have arranged to see the Kenyon picture, are the heads of five of the largest circuits in the East and South.

"The Bandbox," which is set for release the latter part of this month, is declared to be beyond question the greatest screen achievement of Doris Kenyon—a human, fascinating vehicle that reveals the star as an ever greater artiste on the screen than when she left the speaking stage at the height of her popularity to cast her lot with other famous stars appearing before the camera.

Miss Kenyon is once more given the opportunity to tighten her hold upon those who liked her on the stage and who have been the most loyal of her followers ever since her first appearance on the silver sheet, by reason of a strong role. All those qualities which first brought her fame she displays in "The Bandbox" with effect.

Strong direction is noticeable throughout the Deitrich-Beck, Inc. picture, R. William Neill, who has a long list of notable cinema successes to his credit, having accomplished in "The Bandbox" what analysts of the screen are certain to hail as his peak achievement as a director.

Names only slightly less brilliant than her own are found in the cast supporting Miss Kenyon in her first W. W. Hodkinson release. Alexander Gaden, her leading man, has long borne the reputation of being one of the most versatile artists on the stage and screen. In "The Bandbox" Gaden makes the most of many unusual opportunities. Other players of repute selected by Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., to support the star are Greta Hartman, long identified with worth while stage productions as star or one of the featured players; Walter McEwan, Helen Montrose, Maggie Weston, Edward Keppler, Logan Paul, Lorraine Harding and William Brotherhood.

Greatest F. P.-Lasky Year Opens

Such Is Forecast by Leading Officers of Company

THE new season of 1919-20 for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation opened last Sunday when the initial productions under the Selective Booking Plan were given their first public presentations. The opening of this season undoubtedly marks the beginning of the greatest year for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation since its inception, according to Walter E. Greene, Vice-President in Charge of Distribution. Reports from exhibitors and exchange men have been pouring into the home office of the company on Fifth avenue, telling of wonderful business and congratulating the executives on the splendid features of the new booking arrangement.

"Never in my association with the motion picture business have I seen such enthusiasm displayed by exhibitors and exchange men and that the opening of our new season indicates our greatest year ahead is plainly evident," said Mr. Greene. "In planning the distribution of the Paramount-Artcraft product for the new year just started, this department has worked zealously night and day for the past few months and it is most gratifying to see the splendid manner in which the result of this work is being received."

Al. Lichtman, General Manager of the Distribution Department, expressed himself in similar terms as regards the new year now under way. "From all parts of the country come reports of capacity business and new records established for attendance and box-office receipts. The tremendous advertising and publicity campaign backed by a quality that far surpasses even the past high standards of Paramount-Artcraft has effectively reached the public. The trade is already acquainted with the success of such productions under the new year's schedule as 'The Miracle Man,' 'The Witness for the Defense,' 'The Valley of the Giants' and 'The Grim Game.' These are pictures that have shown patrons of the motion picture theatre that a new era in filmdom is at hand.

"In all districts of the United States our salesmen have established new records for sales, in many places closing contracts for a volume of product never reached in the history of films."

"Out of the Dust" to Be in Nine Reels

As the result of prolonged conferences between the producer and representatives of several independent distributors making a specialty of marketing special subjects, it has been decided to release "Out of the Dust," the picture just completed by McCarthy Picture Productions, in nine reels because it has been found impossible to do justice in shorter length.

According to John P. McCarthy, who had charge of filming this extra-length production, several offers have been received for the film following exhibitions of "rushes" in the film's uncompleted stage, but no transaction for the sale of the film, he added, will be considered until it is finally edited, and the special art titles being made by Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the noted artist, are in the picture.

New Bull's-Eye Begun

The fifth of Bulls-Eye Film Corporation's series of master-comedies, which are being directed by Charles Parrott, has been started. Charlie Dorety has the principal comedy role, aided and abetted by Sid Smith and James Parrott, while Margaret Villmore is the feminine lead. The Bulls-Eye Beauties are prominently identified with the new picture.

Fox Announces Adaptation of Grey's Novel Will Run at Central Thearte

WILLIAM FOX will present another feature on Broadway starting with Sunday, September 14, when William Farnum, will open at the Central Theatre, Broadway at Forty-seventh Street, in the western melodrama, an adaptation of "The Last of the Duanes," Zana Grey's novel.

Mr. Farnum essayed a dangerous task when he undertook to create the character of Buck Duane, the hero. The dangerous feats performed by Buck Duane, are an integral part of the dramatic story, and on several occasions Mr. Farnum's life was said to be in grave danger as he performed these feats.

"The Last of the Duanes" is frankly a melodrama. Its action is laid in the thrilling days of the Texas Rangers—the most picturesque organization in American history and with a record which stands as a lasting monument to fidelity and fearlessness against frightful odds.

His extraordinary ability to sink his own personality and live the role which he is interpreting never was more ably demonstrated by William Farnum than in "The Last of the Duanes."

Mr. Farnum regards his personation of Buck Duane as the crowning achievement of a career filled with triumphs of the stage and screen.

Mr. Fox has surrounded the star with an excellent cast which includes Louise Lovely, Charles Clary, G. Raymond Nye, Frankie Raymond, Harry de Vere, Clarence Burton, Lamar Johnstone, Henry J. Hebert, C. Edward Hatton, Genevieve Blinn, Orra Gardner, and Frederick Herzog.

"Dere Mabel" Series in Film

A New Concern Obtains Screen Rights to Comic Articles of Ed Streeter

THE "Dere Mabel" series of articles written by Ed Streeter have reached the picture field. The M. A. Spinrad Company, a new concern which will specialize in the production of animated cartoons has bought the film rights to the articles.

By the terms of the contract, more than ten million people who have read the "Dere Mabel" letters in story form and through its publication in syndicated newspapers and periodicals, will be able to see it for the first time in motion pictures. A ready-made audience, as it were, will be anxiously awaiting the announcement from the producers, giving full data as to the date and method of release of these new comedies. To paraphrase a statement made by an executive of the newly formed company, "The Dere Mabel Comedies will be meeting a demand, instead of creating a demand." And according to people who are supposedly in the know, there is quite a lot of truth in this statement.

It is said that the "Dere Mabel" stories offer an abundance of laugh-making opportunities, and a staff of experts engaged in the production of Animated Cartoons will see to it that no opportunity escapes them.

Ed. Streeter, the author of the "Dere Mabel" stories first introduce his famous character "Bill" to the world at large through the medium of "The Gas Attack" a weekly paper published by the Twenty-seventh Division at Camp Wadsworth, Spartansburg, S. C. His letters made such a distinct hit both in army cantoments and with civilian readers of the paper, that soon he was beset with offers of publishers to publish the letters in book form. As a result he published his first book,—being a series of letters of a rookie,—under the title of "Dere Mabel." This was soon followed by "That's Me All Over, Mabel."

Pauline Curley, who will be seen in the dual role of Anne Crawford, and Marna Black as leading woman to Antonio Moreno in Vitagraph's new serial, now in the making, has been entertaining the public since she was three years of age.

Cohen Working on a Mystery Drama

Octavus Roy Cohen, the popular Saturday Evening Post writer, who recently signed a five-year contract to write photoplays exclusvely for Goldwyn, is completing his first story for production by Goldwyn. Mr. Cohen advised the New York office of the Goldwyn organization that his first story will be a mystery melodrama, and will soon be ready for the continuity writer.

According to the arrangement entered into between Mr. Cohen and Mr. Goldwyn, the writer will spend two months each year at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal. He expects to complete some short stories which the Saturday Evening Post has ordered, and then leave Birmingham, Ala., his home town for the coast on or about October 1st.

Owing to an oversight on the part of the Publicity Department of the Pioneer Film Corporation, the name of Director Bertram Bracken as director, was omitted from the advertisement of "The Long Arm of Mannister," which appeared in the last issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Vivian Martin Seen in "The Third Kiss"

Scheduled for general release on September 14, simultaneously with the George Loane Tucker production, "The Miracle Man," which is now playing pre-release engagements in several of the biggest theatres in the country, is "The Third Kiss," a Paramount-Artcraft picture in which Vivian Martin is starred. This is Miss Martin's first picture released under the Selective Booking Plan.

Heliodore Tenno wrote the original story from which "The Third Kiss" is adapted, and it appeared in two installments in the November and December issles of Live Stories. Edith M. Kennedy wrote the scenario and Robert G. Vignola directed the production.

William Parke Now a Goldwyn Director

Still another addition has been made to Goldwyn's directorial forces at the Culver City Studios where the eight stages are being used to their fullest capacity in the making of productions presenting the Goldwyn stars, and in the preparation of the Eminent Authors pictures. The latest prominent director to join the Culver City colony is William Parke, who is now working with Pauline Frederick at the head of a company of Goldwyn repertory players.

Mr. Parke comes to Goldwyn with a reputation for artistic workmanship in the handling of all types of photoplays, from the melodramatic serial to the most elaborate form of feature drama.

Scenes for Racing Picture Being Taken

Vitagraph is busy at the Belmont race track, taking scenes of the races, the crowds and the stables, as well as society scenes in and near the club house, for use in its forthcoming production in picture form of the stage success, "The Sporting Duchess."

Although it will be some weeks before Vitagraph will begin actual work on this play, which has been picturized by Lucien Hubbard, it was thought best to take advantage of the present meet, especially as the Belmont track is one of the most attractive in the country.

Irish Tale Is to Be Special

"Kathleen Mavourneen," with Theda Bara, Has Been Praised by Critics

NOT only were the daily newspapers of New York unanimous in praise of the William Fox special production "Kathleen Mavourneen," but publications devoted to Irish interests gave the feature much praise. With its beautiful scenes, its careful direction and its splendid photography. "Kathleen Mavourneen" would naturally appeal to all; but the crowning feature of this truly great production is Theda Bara's charming interpretation of the sweet Irish colleen.

Irish New York has supported the picture—supported it with an enthusiasm that bespeaks for it success in all cities of the United States. It is a true picture of an Ireland that is little known in the United States—the Ireland that every Irishman knows and loves and is ready to fight for.

Its cast was selected with great care, and as a result the manner in which the roles have been interpreted lends lively color and great dignity to the picture.

In writing "Kathleen Movourneen" for the screen, Charles J. Brabin, who also directed the picture, has followed closely the lines of the poem, and has made an appealing and interesting production that never is without a smile or a tear or a bit of thrilling action.

Finely interpreted, beautifully photographed and perfectly directed, "Kathleen Movourneen" is claimed by Fox to be one of the most striking photoplays that has been offered to exhibitors. In it Miss Bara is seen in a role entirely different from any in which she hitherto has appeared.

Hodkinson Release Popular

"The Westerners" Taken for Two Weeks by Detroit Houses; Other Bookings

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S first Great Authors' production, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," has been booked by Charles H. Miles for a two weeks' run at his Detroit Majestic and Regent or Orpheum theatres, thus being assured of introduction to Michigan's largest city in a popular pair of theatres and heavy exploitation in the Detroit newspapers, which Mr. Miles uses liberally in conjunction with all big productions. The Majestic is the home of the United Artists productions in Detroit.

The past week witnessed the closing of contracts for all of the local key cities in the Chicago territory, this making the third Hodkinson sales zone whose managers have made a clean sweep of bookings in the United States within thirty days after the first release of the production, the other two zones being New York and Denver.

Among the big exhibitors of the country who have contracted for "The Westerners" this week are: A. H. Blank for his successful Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, and Harvey C. Horater for his new Pantheon theatre, Toledo. Both these prominent showmen have already mapped out advertising and exploitation campaigns in keeping with their widely-known flair for big picture promotion.

Incidentally, the Denver office of the W. W. Hodkinson organization is just now placing a road show company on tour with "The Westerners" throughout the Black Hills region, the locale of Stewart Edward White's story.

Herald Universals Under Way

"Clothes and Treachery" and "Beyond Price" Said to Be Unusual Offerings

Two feature productions which are being widely heralded by the producers at Universal City are "Clothes and Treachery" and "Beyond Price." Both pictures are now under way but due to the immense amount of studio work which is necessary with the two productions, their completion is some time off.

"Clothes and Treachery," written by Baroness de Meyer, is to star Eric von Stroheim, who recently completed "The Pinnacle," an eight-reel Alpine melodrama, and who is perhaps better known as the hated Hun officer of "The Heart of Humanity."

"Clothes and Treachery" is a story of the Bohemian circles of Paris, and is a tale of intrigue and blackmailing.

Prominent in the cast will be seen Una Trevelyan, Clyde Fillmore, Sam de Grasse, and Lilie Leslie. The production will be a veritable fashion show, as many of the scenes are laid in the fashionable dressmaker's showrooms, and the amount of money expended on the costumes is said to be enormous.

"Beyond Price" is the temporary title of the Spanish melodrama which William C. Dowlan is directing with Ethel Grandin, of "Traffic in Souls," famous in the leading role, that of a hot-blooded Castilian maid.

Elaborate production is to be given to this story by Mr. Dowlan at Universal City. It will be produced with rare fidelity to geographical detail, and is expected to be a faithful picture of life in Spain, contrasting the glamour of the lives of the nobility with that of the drab existence of the peasant folk.

A cabaret dance number of rare originality was presented by five lithesome Denishawn dancers for one episode of May Allison's latest production, "Fair and Warmer."

Miss Patricia Hanna has signed with the Bulls-Eye Comedies as an additional member of the Bulls-Eye Beauty Corps.

Contest Winner Shows a Feature Free

A determined effort for the cause of exploitation, undertaken by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of Nebraska, has set the pace for those who desire to co-operate with exhibitors in the development of new ideas in promotion.

Choosing to break away from ironclad custom which has decreed that exchanges shall "pass the buck" to New York offices when exploitation is involved, C. E. Holah, manager of Nebraska's First National Exchange has launched an "exploitation contest" of his own that threatens to draw national attention to its results.

Perhaps the value of the prize offered by the Nebraska exchange for the winner of the contest is the most interesting angle of the affair. The winner will receive, free, any First National attraction he may select and all advertising and exploitation accessories which go with that attraction. All the exhibitor must do is write a corking, bang-up exploitation letter, confined to a real experience, on a First National attraction.

Book Gives History of Famous-Lasky

"The Story of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation" is the title of a handsome eighty-page volume just issued by that company for distribution among motion picture exhibitors, executives and officers of the corporation, department heads, and others.

As the title would indicate, the book is a complete history of the organization and gives a full resume of its present activities in the fields of motion picture production, distribution and exploitation. Hundreds of halftone illustrations embellish the volume, these including portraits, stills from recent productions, interior views of the home and branch offices, etc.

New York Finds "Lost Battalion"

Newspapers Discover It at Cohan's Theatre, and Public Flocks

Tom Hamlin Crowds In

DURING the great excitement in New York owing to the arrival of General Pershing and the First Division parade the newspapers found "The Lost Battalion" at the George M. Cohan theatre. And the public responded nobly and gave the celluloid representation of Major Whittelsey and his famous lost battalion of the Argonne Forest a royal and hearty welcome.

A remarkable feature of its presentation was the fact that no elaborate and expensive exploitation campaign was considered necessary by the promoters in order to get the public into the theatre. No glaring display advertising appeared in the newspapers and the billboards were not plastered with fiery twenty-four sheets.

But even in the face of all this the daily newspapers gave an unusual array of free publicity that was certainly very effective and convincing. This of course was heavily augmented by the enthusiastic and voluntary word-of-mouth publicity.

"The Lost Battalion" is one of those rare attractions that just naturally receives spontaneous acclaim from all sources and at no special exploitation expense to the exhibitor.

The writer journeyed down to the Cohan theatre and argued his way in by the payment of a twenty-cent war tax. This meant that he was occupying a two dollar seat. And the theatre was filled.

Sitting between a very motherly old lady and a bright sun-burned youth he determined to get two widely diverging angles on any personal reason they may have had in seeing this particular picture. The youth had been a service man up to eight months ago and confessed that he was particularly anxious to see this famous event enacted by the original survivors. And as we left the theatre after the presentation he told me he would not miss seeing it again and would bring a large group of friends with him. That's how the film affected this young fellow.

When I caught the nice old lady furtively wiping her eyes after one of the pathetic scenes and directly afterwards laugh with the balance of the audience when a humorous title was inserted as a clever relief I asked her if she had any boys in the action.

And she told me that all her boys were too old to go, but that she had been so keenly interested in this particularly outstanding incident of the war that she would not have missed it for the world.

So there you have an idea of the tremendously wide and universal appeal of this picture.

And it gripped the audience. There is no question about that.

The writer sees so many motion pictures day after day that he thought he was absolutely hardened to emotions. But the picture affected him in just that way. And while it is not one of the most marvelously constructed pictures, it is exceptional because of the romance, pathos and humor injected with clear continuity in faithfully depicting a great historical event.

In the Cohan theatre presentation of "The Lost Battalion" there was no augmented orchestra employed. But the regular orchestra played the special score written for the picture, and it was inspiring even to a person with no military sympathies.

And there were no personal appearances and no tableau effects employed. But the film stood up for itself on its own seven thousand feet, and made good.

The writer felt that he really owed two dollars to the box office. He was that much thrilled and satisfied. But he found only six cents in his pocket and squandered them on three newspapers.

The Sun said: "The Lost Battalion" is a thriller. This production is a thriller besides teeming with romance and humor. This phase precedes the battle scene and starts with the draft, showing the rich man and the poor man's son leaving their home for the camp. Forty-two nationalities are represented in the company, including several Chinamen from Chinatown, who were conspicuous for their bravery in the Argonne," etc.

And the Telegram said: "Do you want to find 'The Lost Battalion,' the famous command which was surrounded in the Argonne forest for six days and nights? If you do, go to George M. Cohan's theatre and you will find them on the screen. They appear there with the consent of the War Department. Even as Helen Kellar tells her life story on the screen at the Lyric, so do the officers and men of the 'Lost Battalion' tell their tale."

And the reviewer of the Tribune said: "'The Lost Battalion' adds a page to real movie history. The story of 'The Lost Battalion' will never be lost to posterity, for it has been put in the films and will remain there always, where as far as we know, age cannot wither it. As we sat watching it on the screen at the George M. Cohan theatre we thought that if only our history had been presented so attractively we might have known something definite about it today. Fancy a picture of Columbus landing in America in 1492 or the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776. In the story of 'The Lost Battalion,' who play their grim parts in the Argonne Forest have enacted them over again in front of the camera."

W. H. Productions can rest assured that it has a winner in "The Lost Battalion." This is the same concern that is sponsoring "Everybody's Business" and the Burston serial, "The Mystery of 13," starring Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby.—Tom Hamlin.

Robertson-Cole Merit Is Recognized

According to reports received by Robertson-Cole from Exhibitors' Mutual, the former productions have become established as some of the best box-office attractions on the market. Reopened and new theatres, enlarged contracts, and letters from exhibitors all tend to prove that point.

Marcus Loew's Hippodrome, one of Baltimore's largest theatres, has booked Robertson-Cole features through Exhibitors' Mutual for fifty-two solid weeks in addition to taking the complete series of Strand comedies. Loew's New York Theatre, one of the first run houses in the heart of New York's theatrical district and practically all of the other principal houses on the Loew circuit have contracted for Robertson-Cole features for the coming year.

Hundreds of unsolicited testimonials, all bearing the statement in one form or another, "played to capacity business," show the strength of Robertson-Cole features as a factor in supplying exhibitors with pictures that sell themselves to the public, declares an official of that organization.

Picture Museum in Nat Spitzer's Thought

Plans have been outlined in Los Angeles for the construction and maintenance of a museum of the motion picture industry. According to Nat Spitzer, manager of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, who is behind the move, producers and those otherwise connected with the picture business have been invited to make suggestions in line with the above-mentioned plan. A considerable number of producers have already been approached by Mr. Spitzer and all are enthusiastic and have promised to contribute historical exhibits. According to tentative arrangements, a two-story building will be constructed in Los Angeles county, probably in Hollywood, the cost of building to be borne equally by the producing companies. A curator will be appointed to care for the exhibits and to write the history of the motion picture industry from an unbiased angle.

It is planned that the museum will be divided into three departments: the mechanical division, which, of course, will occupy the most space; the manuscript division and the technical division.

Picture on Career of Pershing Most Timely

For timeliness few pictures can equal "The Land of the Free" in which William Fox presents the only pictured story of the life of the returning commander of the American Expeditionary Forces, General John J. Pershing, Richard Stanton, director of "Checkers," has made this production one of the big features of the year, and coupled with the fact that just now General Pershing is the supreme hero of the hour, "The Land of the Free" is of superlative interest.

The Fox feature is claimed to be the only authentic screen history of the life of the famous American soldier, and it follows his life from his boyhood to his triumphant reception in the Allied capitals.

Special Service Section on

Monroe Salisbury in "Sundown Trail"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

EXHIBITORS who will book "Sndown Trail" especially those who have deplored the fact that Mr. Salisbury has been given so many melodramatic roles of rather a theatric coloring, are going to get a picture in this latest Salisbury release which they can present to their patrons as a story quite unusual in its own self and which also gives the star a role where he appears to better advantage than in some of his recent releases.

To begin with "Sundown Trail" is about as well knit a continuity as generally comes through. The story was written by J. G. Hawkes, a circumstance we can't just understand as the last we knew of this talented gentleman who with C. Gardner Sullivan furnished so many great stories for the Ince productions back in the time of Triangle's palmiest days, he was sitting in an executive position for another company and wasn't writing anything for outsde interests. However this story is one that is rather different from the sort of stuff his employers are using, they having no star which it would fit and it may have found its way to Salisbury for that reason. Anyway it is a bang up good idea concerning life in the West in the days of the gold rush of '49, and in fact is a very fitting companion piece to Belasco's great American play, some have called it the greatest, "The Golden West," For the first reel, the story or rather the characterizations developed and the titles used are reminiscent of this stage melodrama, especially in the scenes before women come to the mining camp where most of the plot of the picture is laid.

ALL the scenes in this picture have been very well staged and costumed with some great types for the miners' parts. Salisbury is a gentleman miner suggestive of the immortal "Jack Rance" except that his role is more sympathetic, he being only a woman hater and not with "a wife back east so the mountain breezes say."

The production was directed by Rollin Sturgeon and Waldemar Young did the continuity, another rather strange circumstance, as there is hardly a better master of this technique in the business than Mr. Hawkes. In the supporting cast is Alice Elliot, Beatrice Dominiguez, Clyde Fillmore, Carl Stockdale and a lot of miners, dance hall dames, stage drivers, squaws and other good people in smaller roles.

Reduced to theme, this is a story of a young widow who goes to California in the early days of the state to find her boy, a child, who has been kidnapped. Through a succession of incidents, one of the greatest being getting lost in the wilderness and wandering to a cabin, she temporarily loses her mind, has her clothing changed with that of a camp magdalene, who also steals her valuables, and is later threatened with death in the river by reformers because she is mistaken for the woman with whom she has changed clothing, to be saved by Salisbury, who marries her. Later the brother-in-law of the woman shows up from the East and learning that the woman's mind is blank claims to be her husband to gain possession of her property, and she leaves with him. Salisbury later finds out the truth and regains his wife.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

THE early scenes of "Sundown Trail" are in a gold mining camp in California. Salisbury, owner of one of the richest lodes, is shown as the leader of the Vigilantes and you are told by titles that he is of an old Southern family. The camp wants good women for wives of its inhabitants so one of their number is sent east to bring husbandless girls of his own town back with him, a proceeding however which Salisbury does not approve which is where you get the "woman hater" idea. The sequences then shift to the Mississippi river country, where a gambler who has been forced to leave for California, steals a young widow's boy and brings him west, in order that a rascally brother-in-law may secure the mother's property, when she goes to California after her child.

The plan works out as the men think it will, and the mother arrives on the same stage with the girls who have come west to be married. The gambler selects the widow for his wife, thinking her also one of the bridal party, but she runs into the forest with the gambler following. He overtakes her and is about to secure possession by force when Salisbury intervenes. Partial explanations follow and the girl goes in search of the gambler whose identity she has now learned but loses her way in the wilderness. She wanders about, falls in the river and when a terrific storm overtakes her is fortunate enough to find shelter in an abandoned cabin, where also is a woman who has been driven from the dance hall of another mining town as a harlot. In the morning the scarlet woman finds that her companion's mind is a blank and sees a chance to escape deportation and perhaps death by changing clothing with her. She also takes her hand bag.

One of the dramatic moments of the feature is depicted in the one-sheet on "The Sundown Trail"

IN the meantime Salisbury and the gambler have settled a long standing feud in a fight to death with knives, a code of the camp, with Salisbury the victor. Dying, the gambler tells Salisbury of the child in his cabin. Salisbury goes for the child and brings him to his home. About this time the vigilantes of the neighboring camp led by a fanatic preacher come. They are looking for the woman they have driven out of their town and see

Back in the romantic days of '49 women and men dressed in these strange looking costumes. Monroe Salisbury has a congenial role in this feature, and a large cast of correct types support him the widow and mother who has wandered to the proximity of Salisbury's cabin, and are about to drive her into the river. Salisbury however interferes and to save her life and also for the sake of the child who has recognied its mother, he forces the preacher to marry them.

About this time the rascally brother-in-law comes west to collect his portion of the ransom of $5,000, which the gambler has written will be required before the child will be given up to its mother, and finding that his partner in crime is dead and also learning that the girl's mind is blank, goes to the cabin where Salisbury and his wife are living and claims her as his wife. They depart for the east in spite of the fact that Salisbury and the girl have grown to love each other. To the saloon comes the scarlet woman with the clothes of the other girl and her possessions including which is a newspaper clipping telling of the kidnapping of the child and stating that the girl was a widow. Salisbury learns the truth and rides over the trail in pursuit of the two people. He overtakes them and brings his wife and the child back to be happy ever after in his mining camp home.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

This is a feature which compares with "The Girl of the Golden West," "The Long Chance" and other of the better class of pictures which have been produced showing life in the early days of California. A recent picture which it resembles somewhat, especially in its reference to gamblers and Mississippi River boating, is Hart's "Wagon Tracks."

Our opinion is that where audiences like the costume bills of this sort and which to our mind have a real historical value and an indefinite sort of charm which makes even an ordinary picture interesting, this picture will go over.

If people who have been coming to see Salisbury have been satisfied with his other offerings they certainly should be with this feature, for it also has a good story. Mr. Salisbury does not dominate the screen to such an extent as is usual but a sympathetic part and one he fits very well.

We doubt very much if any of the other players will mean much to your patrons in this but you may tell them that it is a great cast of some of the best character actors they have ever seen and rest assured that you will not be called upon to take back your statement.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

We would bill this as a Salisbury feature of a new type and promise an unusual story, calling attention to the fact that it is on the same order as the "Girl of the Golden West," with direct reference to the costuming of the feature which is excellent.

MR. HAWKES' name ought to mean something, especially if you give them a little history of what he has done, as we did in the first part of this service. You can also mention the director's name, as he is reputable and has specialized in productions of this sort. This is a good picture on which to use a big stand of paper and is also one where a lobby display can be used to advantage.

The clothes of the period of the fifty's lends itself well to anything which you want to do in the way of costuming and aren't hard to get. Farther than this we will not suggest.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF "SUNDOWN TRAIL"

Story—Well developed romantic drama staged in the days of '49.
Star—Monroe Salisbury.
Support—Clyde Fillmore, Alice Elliott, Beatrice Dominguez, Carl Stockdale and a big cast in smaller parts.
Director—Rollin Sturgeon.
Story by J. G. Hawks. Continuity by Waldemar Young.
Locale—California gold mining camp. Mississippi River steamboat—Virginia plantation.
Length of picture—six reels.

CATCH LINES AND SELLING TALKS

For selling talk we suggest the following:

A companion picture to "The Girl of the Golden West," dramatizing a novel story of the days of '49, when romance thrived and men lived and lost on the turn of a card."

"He was the most honored person of Sundown mining camp, because he was a gentleman and a man. He didn't think the camp needed even good women to make their rough life happy but there came a time when he changed his mind: What happened when a woman who came into his life makes an interesting story. One which rivals and in some ways resembles the ever immortal "Girl of the Golden West."

Inspect these for catch lines:

"Sundown" was womanless until one man had a great idea—

"Quiet Carter" was a woman hater but like all men the time came when a woman changed all his views—

"She rode across the plains to find her little son and was not only successful but also won a second husband—

A good display ad may be built along these lines for "The Sundown Trail"

Miss Eddie Hodges, the first American woman to enter Germany after the signing of the Armistice

Youngest Girl "Over There" in Pictures

Eddie Hodges, the attractive southern girl who used to be seen in Essanay pictures, will be seen this winter on the screen after a two year absence.

Miss Hodges is back again, back from "over there" where she was the very youngest American woman who went across to do her bit, and where she was the first American woman to enter Germany after the armistice. She preceded the army of occupation by four days. Miss Hodges was with the Salvation Army in France and had many exciting experiences.

Miss Hodges has just finished a supporting role with William Farnum in "If I Were King."

From the story of her adventures you might picture Eddie Hodges as a daring, boyish type. But instead she is tall, willowy, with fair skin and masses of light hair, and is possessed of great feminine charm.

"Screen Follies" Will Soon Appear

The "Screen Follies," the newest animated weekly cartoon is to make its debut before the motion picture world in the very near future.

For froth, lightness and "pep," the "Screen Follies" cannot be surpassed and according to Charles Yale Harrison, the general manager, the Follies will make exhibitors and distributors gasp. Great pains have been taken to make the animation as uniform as possible and an entirely new process in photography will be introduced in the initial issue. It is understood that the Follies are to be a weekly release and already several prominent distributing companies have made offers to handle this snappy production.

Messrs. Dahme and Seel, the originators of The Screen Follies girls, are artists of ability, and their models range from Greenwich Village in New York City to the Latin Quarter in Paris.

Vitagraph to Screen Stage Hits

Acquires Plays of a Number of Noted Dramatists

A COURTSHIP of the stage and screen which has groped timidly through years of effort has now reached its wedding time. Vitagraph issues the formal announcement that consummates this happening. That film company announces a broad campaign to picturize the greatest stage productions available.

It is a further step in Vitagraph's undertaking to mobilize genius. Just a few days ago the company proclaimed the acquisition of rights to the works of twelve famous writers. On the heels of this announcement comes the news of Vitagraph's gathering of stage masterpieces to complete the round-up.

"Vitagraph's program," said Albert E. Smith, president of that company, "follows a natural trend. The combination, on a broad scale, of stage and screen science, had to come. The instinct of the public demanded it. It was logical that all the learning that has developed for centuries within the frontiers of stagecraft must one day lend itself fully to the later-day agency of the camera."

Some of the stage plays announced by Vitagraph for early production and release are: "The Climbers," Clyde Fitch's success, the filming of which is already near completion, with Corinne Griffith as star; "The Fortune Hunter," by Winchell Smith; "The Sporting Duchess"; George Ade's play, "The College Widow"; "Shenandoah," "The City" and "The Great Divide," in which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin starred for several seasons.

Vitagraph's previous stage play translations are fresh in the public mind. They include "The Third Degree," by Charles Klein, which Alice Joyce made beautiful on the screen; "The Lion and the Mouse," by the same author and with the same star; "Within the Law," in which Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey shared screen honors, and "A Stitch in Time," with Gladys Leslie as star.

Among other big stage productions now on the verge of release in film form by Vitagraph are Eugene Walter's play, "The Wolf," with Earle Williams as star, and Charles Klein's equally great drama, "The Gamblers," with Harry Morey starring.

Stage direction itself has served only as the background for the new film direction, says Vitagraph's announcement. Only the high lights of the stage performance and setting are preserved intact for the screen. From this background the screen performance spreads widely over a range of action and setting that knows no limit.

In addition to the particular plays mentioned above for early release, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and George Randolph Chester, production editor, have mapped out a program of play translations looking far into the future.

More Screen Classics Are Begun

Three Specials Out of Way, Stars Start on New Vehicles

AT the same time with an announcement from the west coast studios of Screen Classics, Inc., that the prints of Metro's first three big specials of the "fewer and better pictures" series were on a limited on the way to New York, came word from the same source that the three stars of these productions are about to start work in new vehicles. The first of the five Drury Lane melodramas acquired by Metro also is being put in production and work begun on an all-star special.

Bert Lytell is preparing to begin his enactment of the principal role of "Beauty" Steele in the screen adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Right of Way." May Allison's next will be a picturization of a play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, coauthors of "Lombardi, Ltd." It is "The Walk Offs," Her director is yet to be named. Henry Otto will direct "The Willow Tree." Cohan and Harris's stage success by Harrison Rhodes and J. H. Benrimo. Viola Dana is the star.

All star casts are being assembled for the production of "The Best of Luck," first of the big Drury Lane melodramas which Screen Classics, Inc., will make and for Finis Fox's adaptation of Thomas Hardy's immortal masterpiece, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." Alice Lake will have the featured role in this and the production will be directed by John Ince. "The Best of Luck" will be directed by Ray Smallwood. No announcement of the cast has as yet been made public.

The initial trio of the Metro "fewer and better" pictures, which have been shipped from Hollywood, comprises "Lombardi, Ltd.," a screen adaptation of the stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, in which Bert Lytell is the star; "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana, one of the farce successes of the last theatrical season in New York; and Avery Hopwood's farce, "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison in the stellar part.

Even before production in the final scenes was completed, Maxwell Karger, Director General of Screen Classics, Inc., under whose supervision all three pictures were done, went to work personally to oversee and direct the titling and cutting of each picture. The average length of the specials before being cut was approximately seven miles; and from this total twenty-one miles of film, the action has been boiled down until each seven part feature starts off on high and finishes with a whildwind of speed.

After an extended run on Broadway, these three stage successes will return within a few days to the scene of their spoken triumphs, this time in film form.

Wray Physioc Directs "Facts and Follies"

Wray Physioc, who has more than two hundred successful productions to his credit, was engaged last week by the Pioneer-MacFadden interests to direct the "Facts and Follies" series of short story photoplays, which are being exploited by the Pioneer Film Corporation.

Mr. Physioc, who is among the youngest directors in America, assumed his new duties immediately, and for the past week has been working in his studio and on location, on the latest of the series.

At the Pioneer offices it was stated that a supply of more than twenty subjects would be ready on the date set for the initial showing of the "Facts and Follies" series.

The latest comedy starring Gale Henry has been completed and work on her next picture will start in a few days with the company located in its new studio in Hollywood.

First of a new series of Gaiety Comedies featuring George Ovey has been produced under the direction of Craig Hutchinson.

Robertson-Cole is now in the scenic field. Here are a few views from "Adventure Scenics"

Robertson-Cole In Scenic Field

Contract Closed for Thirty Adventure Scenics

CONTRACTS have just been closed by which Robertson-Cole secures a series of thirty one-reel, out-door pictures, which, it is claimed, will be the finest of their kind ever shown on the silver sheet. These pictures will be released under the title of "Adventure Scenics," which name has been trademarked and registered by Jesse G. Sill, H. H. Brownell and John Rantz, the personnel of the new Adventure Scenics Corporation.

Sill and Brownell need no introduction to those in the motion picture trade and their names are also well known to many exhibitors. Their work has been mostly along scenic lines and it is acknowledged to be some of the finest of its kind. John Rantz is one of the Pacific Northwest's biggest and most progressive exhibitors. His principal theatre at Bremerton, Wash., is declared to be a model of its type. Jock Rantz, the scenario editor, has made an especial study of scenic and educational pictures and is even now taking up post-graduate work at the University of California.

The closing of this contract marks a new step in the broadening of the Robertson-Cole policy to include all pictures essential to complete an exhibitor's program. A series of thirty scenics, said to be of exceptional merit and originality will place Robertson-Cole in a good position to supply the ever-increasing demand for short reel subjects of a high standard of excellence. It is the first step toward increasing its releases, announced last week in a statement covering the schedule and policy of that organization for the coming year.

The series of pictures will be lasting records and mute testimonials to nature's beauty manifested in the various mountain ranges, valleys, islands, seas and rivers. "Adventure Scenics" now has its representatives searching broadcast for places of especial beauty and unique picturesqueness that will meet with the high standards demanded for screen presentation. The pictures will show natural beauty rather than phenomenal happenings.

Besides unusual and original locale and high artistic standards the Robertson-Cole scenics will have a feature heretofore not utilized in the production of scenics, a prepared scenario. Each picture will be photographed and edited according to a scenariarized story prepared beforehand. Still photographs of prospective locale will be available for Mr. Rantz to build his stories around.

Each single reel picture will be produced as a feature, five to eight thousand feet of negative being shot to supply the one thousand feet necessary for the released product. It was found necessary to take this amount of footage in making the first four pictures of the series. It permits the scenes to be shot from various angles and also allows for numerous incidental views. "The results of this method more than warrant the additional expense," declared an official of Robertson-Cole after viewing the four completed pictures.

Speaking of the first four, the complete Robertson-Cole reviewing committee stated that for sheer thrill and realistic beauty it would be hard to equal, much less surpass them.

Quimby Sees Big Hit on "13th Chair"

Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges of Pathe, has just returned from a nation-wide tour on behalf of Pathe attractions, and brings back an interesting story of the success greeting "The Thirteenth Chair" because of its drawing power as a stage production.

From the knowledge he gained in many Pathe exchanges, Mr. Quinby predicts "The Thirteenth Chair" will have a more successful life than "Common Clay," another screen version of a famous play, which has already played in more than 3,000 theatres.

"Exhibitors are keen for pictures produced from popular plays," said Mr. Quimby, on his return. "The success of 'Common Clay' proved that. But I am more certain than ever, after looking over the records of bookings on 'The Thirteenth Chair' that adaptations of stage productions are in big demand.

"'Common Clay' has proved the biggest feature ever issued by Pathe.

"With 'The Thirteenth Chair' I found conditions more favorable, I would say, than they were for 'Common Clay'."

Phillips Makes Big Music Tie-Up

General Arrangement in Publicity and Sales of Sheet Music for Comic Films

A GENERAL tie-up in publicity and sales of sheet music, is the outline of a deal consummated between one of the largest sheet music publishers in America and a producer of two-reel musical comedy films.

The Adolf Philipp Film Corp., who closed the deal some time ago have just announced in an interview with a NEWS representative their plans concerning the deal. Mr. Paul Philipps, business manager for the Philipp Film Corp., made the following remarks: "We have just completed three of our first two-reel musical comedy productions. On Sept. 15th we start filming three other musicals which have all had a successful run on the road and Broadway. We feel we have one of the best bets in the film comedy field. Our arrangement with Jerome Remick & Co., sheet music publishers, affords us a national advertising campaign in a sense that every picture will have the sheet music on sale. This music will be on sale in every music store in towns and cities showing the Philipp pictures. Special arrangements made with the music store for attractive window display tying up the picture with the music and the theatre.

Each comedy starts with the words and music filmed and then fades into the film story. The sheet music will be popular priced, selling for ten cents at the stores or theatre. "The Midnight Girl" adapted from one of Mr. Adolf Philipp's musical successes is one of the completed pictures. Over three million copies of music was sold on this comedy, at sixty cents."

When asked about their plans of releasing, Mr. Philipp said: "We have ready for release three productions: "My Girl Suzanne," "The Midnight Girl," and "Oh! Louise" with Adolf Philipp and other well known stars. Until the present time we have not decided on any plan or method of distribution. Our time has been taken up producing and making nation wide arrangements covering general publicity for the exhibitor."

Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, anounced this week that "This Is the Life, Walt," has been selected as the title of the first release in the "So This Is America!" series of comedy-travelogues.

"World and Its Woman" Acclaimed on Coast

Geraldine Farrar has again scored in Los Angeles. The press has hailed her latest production, "The World and Its Woman," as one of the greatest of all screen triumphs, and the public is flocking to Clune's Auditorium where the picture opened on Labor Day at dollar prices. A wire received from the coast states that during the first three days of its run, "The World and Its Woman" did a clean-up business, and that there is every indication of the production establishing a new record for Los Angeles' popular picture palace.

The Los Angeles verdict, following the triumphant showings of the production at the new Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, and at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, indicates that this story of modern Russia is the sort of thing that the American public wants.

Baggot in Many Roles in Burston Serial

The newest Burston Serial, as yet unnamed, has for its star King Baggot with Reah Mitchell playing opposite. The picture is a novelty in that it is made up of 15 stories, each complete in itself, while the running thread of narrative binds them all together in true serial fashion.

Advantage is taken of King Baggot's protean ability in that, he is cast in a part that requires his assumption of a new character each episode. The idea is carried to the extreme through having specially engaged principals appear in one episode only.

The first of these special supporting actors to be engaged is George Siegmann, for many years prominent in the special feature productions of D. W. Griffith. His last association with Mr. Griffith was in his remarkable portrayal of the German officer, in the "Hearts of the World."

Predicts Fine Season in Pennsylvania

Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attraction of Philadelphia, which handles the entire list of Pioneer features in Eastern Pennsylvania, and Southern New Jersey, spent the better part of last week in New York completing arrangements for the early release of the Pioneer offerings.

Mr. Amsterdam will place "The Boomerang" with Henry B. Walthall, and the "Sins of the Children" with Stuart Holmes and Alma Hanlon, before his exhibitors first, and will follow with Grace Davison and Conway Tearle in "Atonement," "The Girl From Nowhere," with Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas, "Virtuous Sinners" with Wanda Hawley and "The Long Arm of Mannister."

Basing his opinion upon the interest shown by the exhibitors in his territory in the Pioneer productions, Mr. Amsterdam freely predicted a banner season.

With Fox Organization

C. R. Wallace, well known in the motion picture industry as a film editor, has joined Fox Film Corporation as film editor for Emmett Flynn, who will direct the Fox features in which William Russell will be starting with an adaptation of "Eastward Ho!" a novel by William McLeod Raine.

Non-Theatrical Exchange Plants

Three in England, and Many Others Cover this Country

AS part of the program of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to distribute motion pictures to churches, clubs, schools, and other non-theatrical institutions, David K. Niles, General Manager of the Non-theatrical Distribution Department, has perfected arrangements for the establishment of special Paramount Non-Theatrical exchanges in twenty-eight of the principal cities of this country. Each of these exchanges will be manned by a staff of special service men, trained to meet the needs of clergymen, educators and other civic leaders who may wish to exhibit motion pictures.

These exchanges, it is announced, will be known as the Paramount-Non-Theatrical Exchanges, and their sole subject will be to handle films and supply service to non-theatrical exhibitors.

All parts of the country are represented in the list of exchanges which Mr. Niles has established, and they will begin functioning when the first of the non-theatrical pictures are ready for distribution—in about two weeks.

There will be three Paramount Non-Theatrical exchanges in New England. The addresses are 8 Shawmut street, Boston; 85 Market street, Portland, Me.; and 132 Meadow street, New Haven.

Two exchanges will handle the business in New York State, one at 145 Franklin street, Buffalo, and the other in New York City.

The addresses of other Paramount Non-Theatrical exchanges are as follows:

Philadelphia, 1219 Vine street; Washington, 421 Tenth street, N. W.; Pittsburg, 1018 Forbes street; Cincinnati, 107 West Third street; Cleveland, 811 Prospect avenue; Chicago, 845 South Wabash avenue; Minneapolis, 608 First avenue, N.; Detroit, 63 Elizabeth street; Kansas City, Mo., 2024 Broadway; St. Louis, 3929 Oliver street; Des Moines, 415 West Eighth street; Omaha, 208 South Thirteenth street; Atlanta, 51 Luckie street; New Orleans, 814 Perdido street; Dallas, Tex., 1902 Commerce street; Oklahoma City, Okla., 128 West Third street; Charlotte, N. C., 28-30 West Fourth street; Salt Lake City, 133 East Second South street; Denver, 1747 Welton street; San Francisco, 821 Market street; Los Angeles, 112 West Ninth street; Seattle, Wash., 2017-19 Third avenue; Portland, Ore., 14 North Ninth street.

"The growing demand for films on the part of non-theatrical organizations," said Mr. Niles this week, "makes it imperative that nothing less than a nation-wide distribution organization be established. One of the big problems in distributing films to clergymen, educators and others who have not the professional knowledge of regular exhibitors is the giving of service; and this we purpose to do in our Paramount Non-Theatrical Exchanges.

"The service men whom we have engaged are men who by education and viewpoint are specially qualified to handle the problem of the people who will go to them for service.

"It is evident from the response which has greeted the announcements that Famous Players-Lasky is to distribute pictures to the non-theatrical field, that there has been an enormous demand for such distribution.

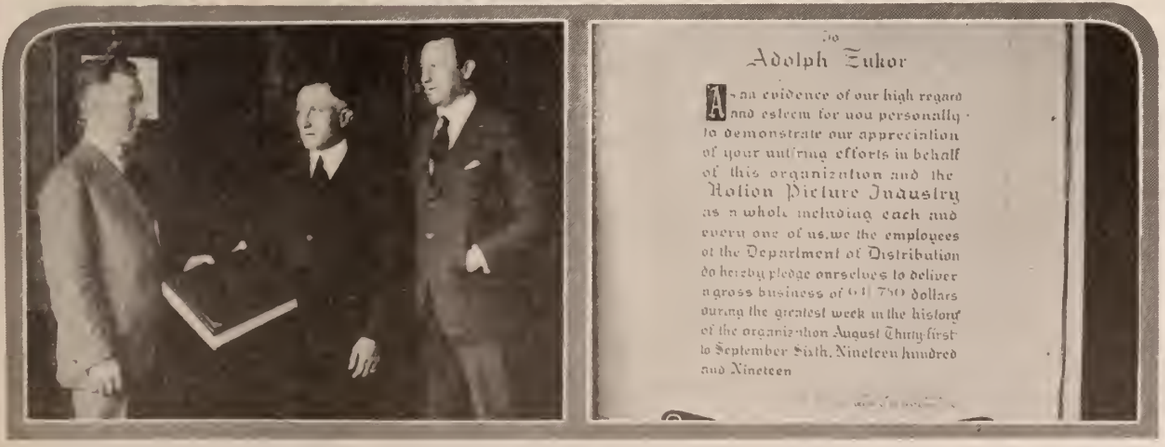
"The work of editing and producing photoplays and educational films for exclusive non-theatrical exhibition is going ahead rapidly, under the supervision of experts, picked especially for their knowledge of educational and civic requirements in motion pictures."

New Concern Stars Victor Moore

Riskin Brothers Form a Million Dollar Corporation

THE announcement of the formation of a new million dollar corporation headed by Messrs. A. E. and R. R. Riskin to produce from four to six de luxe features starring Victor Moore, indicates the return of the stage and screen funny man to motion pictures of feature length, and at the same time dispels the rumored reports that the former Paramount star is planning to appear in a new series of short reel comedies.

The new concern has established temporary headquarters in the Candler Building, and with the completion of the organization details it will probably be decided to brand the product De Luxe Victor Moore Productions.



R. R. Riskin, who for the past several years has managed the affairs of Victor Moore, and who organized the Klever Komedies, Inc., which starred Victor Moore in the Paramount short-reel comedies of the same name, will personally assume charge of the production end—while A. E. Riskin will be the executive head of the new company.

According to the statement issued by Mr. Robert Riskin, the contract with Victor Moore guarantees the latter fifteen thousand dollars per production for a minimum of four productions yearly for two years—with an additional bonus in the form of a percentage of the earnings of the company. Although there are only a few male stars whose earnings reach these figures, the producers consider the arrangement an equitable one for the reason that Victor Moore, as a star, has established a confidence with nearly every exhibitor in the world, as a result of the excellency of his previous motion picture appearances which proved to be popular and profitable entertainments. The statement further points out the fact that the promoters of the company were influenced, chiefly, by the tremendous success which accompanied Paramount's re-issues of Victor Moore's first appearances in their program features.

"When I originally prevailed upon Mr. Moore to sign up with Paramount," Mr. Robert Riskin's statement reads, "his salary was by no means a mere trifle. At that time Chaplin was the only one of the male screen luminaries whose weekly envelope bulged bigger than Victor Moore's—and we naturally consider the present arrangement with the star a very good one for all concerned.

"With only average stories which depended almost entirely upon Vic's inimitable comedy style, Paramount not only turned out some of their biggest money makers, but also found it profitable to re-issue them several years later with even greater success."

The new firm of producers are at present negotiating for the purchase of a motion picture studio in the South and immediately upon the consummation of the deal whereby the plays now being negotiated for will become their property. Work on the first of the productions will be commenced without delay.

The Hallmark Policy Announced

THE policy of Hallmark Picture Corporation, the trade name of the picture interests of Frank G. Hall, as recently merged into a corporation, with Col. Jacob Ruppert, Col. Howard Borden, Ashbel P. Fitch, Harry George and Mr. Hall representing the directorial board, as announced in a statement issued by President Hall, this week, is fashioned to meet the reactionary movement in the silent drama following the war and founded on equitable marketing conditions.

Mr. Hall's announcement in outlining Hallmark's policy for the season of 1919 and 1920 implies that all Hallmark productions will follow out the trend of the colorful story as against the more serious trend of the war drama; the story with thrills and actions, as represented in the serial drama and the stories of love, romance and adventure that have their inception in every-day happenings and events.

Behind these productions is placed the constructive ability of such well known directors as Charles Miller, J. Searle Dawley, Burton King, Hobart Henley and others to be announced later. This series of productions will be known as the Famous Directors' Pictures, and quoting Mr. Hall: "Our expectations concerning the success of this series are not based upon theory, but upon the knowledge of what good pictures can do—and the Famous Directors' Pictures are good pictures."

Serious Drama Is to Be Dodged for the More Colorful

Continuing in his announcement, Mr. Hall said:

"Reputation, alone, as producer of high-class motion pictures is not a deciding factor in this series of Famous Directors' Pictures. The very fact of our releasing any subject under this new program is in itself evidence of merit, as we are not obliged to handle any of these pictures unless they measure up to the Hallmark standard.

"From the standpoint of equitable marketing conditions these pictures can be had with everything in the exhibitors' favor. Not alone attractive prices, but fair prices prevail, and by fair prices we mean prices sufficiently attractive to enable the exhibitor to make money.

"With the adverse criticism now being directed to the widely heralded new booking policies of others, we place ours on the table with the cards showing a proposition sure to appeal in its fairness to the most discriminate buyer. Twenty-six Famous Directors' Productions will be booked the exhibitor on one contract. This means one big special picture every two weeks. He can see before he buys and further we will at all times have in our exchanges four pictures ahead, so that the exhibitor may not only see the one in which he is immediately interested, but three others to follow, if he so elects after reviewing same.

"All the benefits of open booking are given. The disadvantages of this market are eliminated and a further evidence of our confidence in the pictures we have to offer, our plans include the privilege of a two-picture cancellation, if the exhibitor so decides."

The first two of the Famous Directors' Pictures offered are "A Dangerous Affair," a Charles Miller production, with Forence Billings and Herbert Rawlinson in the leading roles, and "Wit Wins," a Burton L. King production, with Florence Billings and Hugh Thompson in the stellar roles. Prints of these two subjects are now in the Hallmark exchanges and with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., which company is handling the distribution of Hallmark product in the South.

The third and fourth on the list are, "Love, Honor and (?)," a Miller production, with Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy starred, and "The Heart of a Gypsy," also a Miller production with Florence Billings in the star role.

The Famous Directors' Pictures are to be released, one every second week following the first week in September. No time limit is placed on release dates.

Good Laboratory Work Growing Necessity

"Now that open bookings are the order of the day," says H. J. Streyckmans, managing director of the Palisade Film Laboratories, "producers are compelled to pay more attention to their negatives. We have worked for many months toward a fixed goal—the ability to honestly announce ourselves as the finest laboratory in America.

"In this direction no branch of laboratory work has been overlooked, and special attention has been paid to the development of negative. When it is considered that the negative represents the entire amount spent on a production it would seem that producers would seriously consider before having their work done in laboratories not properly equipped in this direction.

"In assembling the working forces of the Palisade Film Laboratories each department was placed in the hands of the most expert man that could be engaged, all working under the direction of Paul Ripley, superintendent.

"We have done, and are still doing, the work for some of the foremost producers in America. We have established a messenger service which makes it just as convenient to do business with us as if we were located in the heart of New York."

Well-Known Players in Support of Pauline

A big cast is at work with J. Robert Pauline as the star in the filming of the 15-episode serial now being directed for Sidney Reynolds, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., by Will S. Davis at the studios of this corporation in Flushing, L. I.

Supporting Mr. Pauline as the heroine and portraying the role of "Laura" is Miss Violet MacMillan, formerly starred in Paramount, Mutual, Universal and General Film productions.

The villainesss in this production is being portrayed by Peggy Shanor who played in the legitimate production, "Yes or No." She also appeared opposite Pearl White in the Pathe serial, "The House of Hate"; was given one of the leading roles in support of Virginia Pearson and played an important role in Ivan Abrahamson's production, "Echoes of Youth."

Ralph Locke is in the heavy role.

Vita Studios Are Going Full Blast

VITAGRAPH'S two big studios, one in Brooklyn and the other at Hollywood, California, are running at full blast, not alone to make up for the time lost in the vacation season, but to gain some surplus time that may be utilized in the making of the super-films by America's foremost authors which are to be produced one a month during the next year. Vitagraph never has been a believer in rushing pictures through its studios, preferring to lose time and get behind the schedule rather than to turn out hastily done and consequently imperfect pictures. With its four feature stars in the Eastern studio well into their next features and the West Coast players equally active, Vitagraph will have no difficulty in making good on all the features it has announced. Here are the pictures Vitagraph now has in the active making:

Alice Joyce in a new play by William B. Courtney, for which no title has as yet been selected. It is more or less of a society play and many of the scenes are laid indoors, and are being taken at the Brooklyn studio. In her supporting company are Percy Marmont, Louise Beaudet, Templer Saxe, G. V. Scyffertitz and Charles A. Stevenson. George Terwilliger is directing.

Corinne Griffith in a screen version of "The Climbers," the famous drama of social strife, by the late Clyde Fitch.

In Miss Griffith's supporting company are Hugh Huntly, Percy Marmont, Henry Hallam, Emily Fitzroy, Josephine Whittell, Jane Jennings, George Spottswood, Corinne Barker and Charles Halton. Tom Terriss is directing Miss Griffith's productions.

Many Productions Are Under Way in the East and West

Gladys Leslie is well into the making of "The Golden Shower," an interesting play by Marie Eve. Working with Miss Leslie on the picture are Robert Cummings, Richard Tucker, Estelle Taylor, Corinne Barker, and Karl Lewenhaupt, John W. Noble is directing.

Harry T. Morey with his supporting company, is working on his new play, an adaptation by Edwin Arthur Krows, which is as yet without a name. In his supporting company, in addition to Miss Paige, are Charles Eldridge, George Cooper, Charles Kent, Walter Lewis, Robert Gaillard and Bernard Siegel. E. L. Hollywood directs.

In addition to its big feature productions being produced at Vitagraph's Eastern studio, a series of two-reel O. Henry subjects are being filmed, with a different star, director and cast for each product.

Earle Williams, out at the Hollywood studio, is putting the finishing touches on his next feature, "The Black Gate."

Bessie Love is also busy at the West Coast studio, but spending much of her time in Los Angeles, where many of the scenes for her next feature, "A Fighting Colleen," are being made." With Miss Love in the picture are Charles Spere, Jay Morley, George Kunkel, Anne Schaefer and Beulah Clarke.

William Duncan, who is being starred in "Smashing Barriers," the new episode play by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is well into the serial, having reached the tenth episode; and Antonio Moreno has begun work on his next chapter play, also written by Mr. Smith and Mr. Brady, which is still awaiting a title.

Stage Triumph Encored on the Screen

Applause means so much to an artist that it seems a pity there is not some way that screen stars can enjoy the signs of approval their work in pictures elicits from their audiences. Especially is the fact that stars cannot enjoy these sweet fruits of their labors to be regretted in the case of an eminent artist like Ellen Terry, making her first appearance on the screen.

While scattered applause is not unusual in picture theatres, cases in which an entire audience bursts forth in spontaneous approval of an actor's work are rare. Ellen Terry's elaborate screen vehicle, "Her Greatest Performance" however, is said to be having an unique experience in New York in the William Fox theatres at every performance. The demonstration occurs in two places in the picture: Firstly, when Ellen Terry, as the mother of a falsely accused son, impersonates an old servant and by her clever acting forces the real criminal to confess. And, secondly, after the final scene of the production.

Kerrigan in "A White Man's Chance," Draws

The success achieved by J. Warren Kerrigan's first Robert Brunton production, "A White Man's Chance," in scores of representative theatres throughout America the past month not only augurs well for the many other pictures the Kerrigan-Brunton combination is to make for W. W. Hodkinson distribution but is evidence that the J. Warren Kerrigan vogue among American picture lovers is as great as ever.

Another convincing sign of Kerrigan popularity is the time and effort the big exhibitors of the country are devoting to big and specially-devised exploitation and newspaper advertising campaigns on "A White Man's Chance."

Exploitation Idea Wins Much Publicity

Telegraphic Campaign to Induce Women to Wire Felicitations to Pershing Brings Selznick Star Into Limelight

WHEN Elsie Janis began a telegraphic campaign to induce women in all parts of the country to telegraph their sentiments toward General Pershing to her in order that she might present them to him following the homecoming parade in New York, the motion picture industry promptly took notice of what is now conceded to be the most legitimate and far-reaching national exploitation campaign in the history of the silent drama. Through the active co-operation of the leading metropolitan newspapers of America, to which Miss Janis wired her suggestion that they use their offices to procure messages of greeting and gratitude from the prominent women's clubs and organizations, a publicity drive that stands alone, without an equal, for news value and heart interest, was launched in practically every city in the United States.

The original telegram sent to the newspapers by Miss Janis read as follows:

"Will you use your good offices to obtain telegrams of welcome and gratitude from prominent women's clubs representing the sentiment of the women of ..... (city). This telegram, together with others from the women of all other cities, to be presented to General Pershing following the Pershing Parade in New York on September 10. I shall personally present these telegrams which will later be transcribed into an engraved resolution to be retained as a tribute by Pershing. Any individuals desiring to express greetings may send telegram direct to me and I will present them with others. Please wire answer.

"Elsie Janis, Manor House,
"Tarrytown, New York."

Hunt Stromberg, Director of Service and Exploitation for Select Pictures Corporation, represented Miss Janis in the great national campaign. To test the co-operation of the newspapers and the feeling of the women of the country, fifty telegrams were sent to the leading newspapers in fifty principal cities. The replies arrived thick and fast. The City Editors of the various newspapers promptly agreed to use their news columns to promote the idea, resulting in a landslide of publicity that broke into print on the first page and later hit the wires of the Associated Press and other influential news services. Promptly realizing the tremendous significance of the campaign, Stromberg compiled a list of two hundred newspapers and a similar telegram was sent to the night editors, at midnight, Friday, September 5. Early the next morning, Miss Janis, at her home in Tarrytown, New York, was literally besieged with telegraphic communications from Chambers of Commerce, civic institutions and many thousands of telegrams from individuals who took advantage of the opportunity to express their sentiments to America's dominant hero in France. Newspapers the country over wired Miss Janis, requesting permission to conduct the campaign as a matter of civic pride and interest. Others asked that Miss Janis "cover" the daily events leading up to the Pershing Parade. Editors of women's pages and magazine sections of large and small newspapers everywhere took up the campaign, appealing directly to their women clubs and readers to aid Miss Janis in her effort to show General Pershing that the womanhood of the nation was behind him millions strong.

The thoughts embodied in the telegraphic communications were touching in the sincere sentiment expressed. Heading the list of individual telegrams was a message from Ella Wheeler Wilcox, which read: "General Pershing: Love and gratitude to you. I collapsed in January and have never walked since, but I remember my half hour with you in Paris as a great moment. God bless you."

The women of Cleveland, through the 25,000 members of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, welcomed General Pershing with heartfelt gratitude as the defender of America's womanhood. The San Francisco Bulletin wired messages of love and greetings from every organization of women in the city. The Springfield (Ill.) Improvement League wired a hearty welcome and best wishes to "Our General, the defender of the hearts and homes of humanity."

Scores of other telegrams were received from the most influential women's organizations, national in their scope and membership. Chief among these were messages from the National Federation of Women's Clubs; the Daughters of the Revolution; the Just Government League of Maryland; Maryland Division of the Mothers of America; Catholic Women's League; National Jewish Council and others. The Chambers of Commerce and the Business Men's Leagues of all the principal communities wired hearty salutations as representing the feeling of the male populace of the respective cities. Telegrams similar to the above were received in overwhelming numbers as a result of Miss Janis's personal appeal to the women of America and the unprecedented amount of publicity accorded by the newspapers in their zealous effort to co-operate. Newspapers rushed to New York demonstrates the effect of the nation-wide campaign. Many of the newspapers carried the story from the first page to their editorial columns, praising Miss Janis for her splendid campaign and urging local citizens to take advantage of the occasion.

The thousands of telegrams received by Elsie Janis were presented to General Pershing following the big parade on Wednesday. The New York American ran photos of the presentation together with a story several columns in length. Hearst papers in other cities accepted the event as a first page news feature. Copies of the telegrams and a full account of the campaign were reproduced into mat form and rushed to newspapers that had requested Miss Janis to send the news and pictorial story. The leading motion picture news weeklies covered the presentation in its entirety. While the telegrams from newspapers, individuals and women's organizations were flooding the Manor House at Tarrytown, Select's Exploitation Headquarters in New York was engaged in another monstrous campaign for Elsie Janis, who is soon to make her screen appearance in a Selznick Picture, "A Regular Girl." Director of Exploitation, Hunt Stromberg, ably assisted by Charles McClintock, completed arrangements with the official program committee in charge of the Pershing Parade, for the appearance of Elsie Janis in gigantic parade on Fifth avenue. Miss Janis, a member of the Mayor's Committee of Women, formally greeted General Pershing on his arrival in Hoboken and later received a special invitation to participate in the line of march.

To cap the climax on exploitation, conceded to be the most spectacular of any previously staged, several automobiles manned by soldiers spun up and down Fifth avenue on the morning of the parade. Several soldiers and professional actresses impersonating Miss Janis as the "Regular Girl" were within the cars to distribute novelty badges among the millions of persons who choked the line of march. A reproduction of the novelty is shown on this page. The cards were produced in red, white and blue, with a cut of General Pershing on one side and a cut of Elsie Janis on the other. Under the Pershing photo appeared the wording: "He's A Regular General." Under the Janis photo was the phrase: "She's A Regular Girl." On the reverse side appeared this announcement: Selznick Pictures. Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl." Coming! Men, women and children of all ages grabbed for the badges and wore them to "show their colors" during the biggest parade New York has ever witnessed. Considerably more than 600,000 of these badges were circulated among the spectators who jammed Fifth avenue. Another quantity of 200,000 were distributed among pedestrians on the night of the parade. The distribution will be duplicated when a second Pershing parade is held in Washington on Septmber 16.

Simultaneously with the local and national publicity, the Select Exploitation Department in New York issued 18,000 "telegrams" to exhibitors of the United States and Canada. The "telegrams" were produced as a broadside, 14 x 17, on the regulation manila stock used by the Western Union Company. The center fold contained the following message directed "To Exhibitors Everywhere": "A Regular Girl" is coming to your city. You are invited to serve on reception committee headed by the Mayor and other prominent public officials and citizens. Make immediate arrangements for large crowds in your theatre. This is the biggest event of the season. A public mass meeting will be held to give rousing welcome to A Regular Girl. She deserves it.

(Signed) Louis J. Selznick, for Elsie Janis.

Hunt Stromberg

The exploitation conducted by Hunt Stromberg in New York, is only a part of the mammoth campaign placed before and behind Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl." The eighteen Select exploitation experts in the field, under the direction of Stromberg, are now revolving the wheels of unprecedented publicity and advertising drives in every city, town and hamlet of the union. With page after page of Janis publicity as a forerunner to the specific campaign on "A Regular Girl," exhibitors everywhere are assured that the picture will come to their cities backed by a ready-made audience such as has been possible for no other star of stage or screen.

The cooperation extended by Miss Janis has added much to the success of the preliminary campaign.

"Elsie Janis is 'a regular girl' if ever there was one," says Mr. Stromberg. "She is one of the most sincerely patriotic Americans I have met. In her splendid efforts to arouse the coordination of the women of America and convey to Pershing their heartfelt admiration and love, Miss Janis still further evidenced that true spirit that has made her the most popular girl in the States. She loves the soldiers from her heart out. She worked day and night to put over the telegram idea and her home in Tarrytown was a veritable pyramid of telegrams." Prominent critics of motion picture exploitation acclaim the campaign for "A Regular Girl" one of the most unique and far-reaching ever launched. Telegrams of commendation have reached Stromberg from large and small showmen in every section of the country.

Friedman Scores with "Unpardonable Sin"

Benjamin Friedman, president of the Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, is accustomed to handling big film features through Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana, as he has had such productions as "The Spoilers," "The Whip," "The Bar Sinister," etc., but he declares that Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin" has made a most phenomenal record.

"We played the Lyric at Minneapolis with 'The Unpardonable Sin' and beat 'Mickey' by $3,500 during the first week of the showing and the Normand feature had only played there the week previous," said Mr. Friedman.

"A two weeks' engagement at the Liberty Theatre in St. Paul resulted in 'The Unpardonable Sin' opening day bringing in $1,000 more than any film ever did there. At the Palace Theatre in Superior, Wis., we did within $200 of what 'The Birth of a Nation' did when it was augmented by a twenty-one piece orchestra.

"We grossed $5,000 at the Princess Theatre in Sioux City and I now have six road shows presenting 'The Unpardonable Sin' and they are cleaning up with capacity everywhere."

Joseph Schenck Now in New Offices

On September 8th, Joseph M. Schenck moved into his new offices at 140 West 42nd Street, adjoining the Hotel Knickerbocker. Mr. Schenck's enterprises will occupy the seventh floor with the bookkeeping department on the eighth floor. The executive staff only will be housed in the new offices which are beautifully furnished throughout in massive mahogany. Mr. M. S. Epstein, who has been associated with Mr. Schenck for a number of years, will act as general manager of the new offices. The staff scenario writers, publicity workers and technical and casting directors will continue to have their offices at 318 East 48th Street. In addition to being the new home of the Norma Talmadge Film Company executives, and the Constance Talmadge Film Company headquarters, 140 West 42nd Street will house all of Mr. Schenck's other interests, including the Comique Film Corporation, the Jefferson Film Corporation and the Film Specials, Incorporated.

Series of Comedies Are Handled by Arrow

The Louis Jacobson Enterprises has placed in the hands of the Arrow Film Corporation the world rights distribution for their series of new comedies to be known as the "XLNT" (excellent) Comedies. These comedies will be in two reels each, of a very high class. They will be directed by W. A. Howell, a well-known comedy director. Mr. Howell will use two or three well-known players in his pictures, but the comedies will be known always as the "XLNT" Comedies, not depending on any one individual star for advertising purposes.

The first three of this series are now ready and Mr. Howell is at work on the remainder.

Popular Story for Pickford

"Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" Is Secured as First Goldwyn Vehicle

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has secured one of the best known American novels in acquiring the photoplay rights to "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" by the late John Fox, Jr., as the first starring vehicle for Jack Pickford, who recently signed a long term contract with Goldwyn. Particular interest centers in the picturization of this story because of the unique place which the author has won for himself among American authors. Mr. Fox, who died this year, devoted his life to interpreting the lives of the mountaineers of Eastern Kentucky, their loves and their feuds, for the rest of the country. "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" is his best known novel; and since its first publication as a serial in Scribner's Magazine in 1902-3, the book has sold more than a million copies.

The picturized version of the story has been based on the original book and on the play made by Eugene Walter. In its dramatic form, the "Little Shepherd" was an eminent success, both in the larger cities and on the road.

John Fox, Jr., first achieved distinction in 1894 when his "A Mountain Europa" was published. Since then he completed about fifteen novels and innumerable short stories. Among his best known novels are "The Kentuckians," "Knight of the Cumberland," "The Trail of the Linesome Pine," and "The Heart of the Hills."

Jack Pickford, who is now at the Culver City studios, confessed a sentimental interest for his first Goldwyn picture.

Besides the strength of the story and its adaptability to picturization, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" has an historical interest. It is told against a background of life in the blue grass region of Kentucky in the middle of the nineteenth century, and reveals the beauty of old southern courtesy and hospitality as well as the vindictiveness of Kentucky mountain feuds.

Business in Pioneer Offices

Co-operative Exchanges Report a Constantly Growing Volume of Business

THE list of Pioneer co-operative exchanges from New York and Boston to San Francisco and Los Angeles report more than a fifty per cent. increase in business since taking over the Pioneer specials.

The New York Pioneer Exchanges in New York City and Buffalo, have set a new record in the business done during the past month, while the Eastern Feature Company of Boston is enlarging its quarters to take care of its greatly increased activities.

The Greater Stars Productions, which handle the Pioneer attractions in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, reports that the business contracted for on The Boomerang, The Sins of the Children and The Long Arm of Mannister, will more than equal that done by some of the most notable successes ever played in their territory.

Charles D. Rosenthal, of the M. & R. Exchanges of San Francisco and Los Angeles, has just completed a tour of his territory, which embraces California, Arizona and Nevada. In his latest communication to Mr. M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Pioneer, Mr. Rosenthal stated emphatically that the outlook for the Pioneer attractions in his territory for the coming season was exceptionally bright. He added that not only were the exhibitors greatly impressed by the value of the Pioneer releases, but were outspoken in their praise of the assistance which the Pioneer, through its Exhibitors Service Department, was rendering to the theatre managers.

Third Christie Anniversary

Company to Remain in Independent Field and Go Strong on "Specials"

PASSING the third anniversary of Christie Comedies as an independent producing organization, the Christie Film Company celebrates the month of September with more than a hundred Christie Comedies and half of the first year's schedule of two-reel Specials released.

The third anniversary of the company, which was the first to establish a brand of comedies sold through independent exchanges and the only comedy brand of pictures which has remained intact under the same management and system of distribution since its inception, is also being celebrated by the enlargement of the Christie property on Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, the same location where Al E. Christie in 1911 established the first motion picture studio in Hollywood, then a sparsely built suburb of Los Angeles, now the center of most of the studio work in America.

When Al Christie brought a company West in 1911, including the late Harold Lockwood, Russell Bassett, Dorothy Davenport, Eugenie Forde and Victoria Forde, and other players who have since become more famous, he was directing the Nestor comedies, and it was not until September, 1916, that the Christie company was formed in the same studio as an independent organization.

Having passed over three years of successful comedy making and well establishing the brand of Christies', it is the intention of the company, according to Al E. Christie, president, and C. H. Christie, general manager, to remain in the independent field, the

Cody, the "Male Vamp," Completes Picture

Exhibitors and representatives of distributing organizations have been present at the recent review of the first of the Lew Cody Productions being made at the Louis J. Gasnier studio in Glendale, the final touches to which are now being made by William Christie Cabanne, Cody's director.

The premier starring vehicle carrying Cody in his unique character as a male vampire has been titled "The Beloved Cheater," and both in material and in presentation is said to be strikingly original. The story was written by Cody and Gasnier in collaboration. Three leading women instead of one are featured opposite Cody. These are Eileen Percy, Doris Pawn and Kathleen Kirkham, while Jack Mower plays the role of Cody's love rival. Others who have important parts in the cast are Alice Fleming, Mary Busch, Frederick Vroom, Andrew Robson and Walter Morosco. The picture is said to be enhanced by original work of an entirely new character in the titles, for which Frank Ormston is responsible. Lighting effects and striking photography have received favorable comment, James DuBrey and Denver Harmon having had charge respectively of the camera and electrical work.

"The Beloved Cheater," according to announcement by Mr. Gasnier, will be released under his own trade mark.

Capital is to Exploit Helen Gibson

Production of a series of twenty-four two-reel subjects featuring Helen Gibson and built around that star's fame in photoplay dealing with railroad operations, will be begun in the near future by the Capital Film Company, as a result of negotiations completed by S. L. Barnhard, president of the company, and Harry M. Owens, general manager.

The new series of short subjects was decided upon by Mr. Barnhard following his visit to the West Coast studios, where short dramas now are being made with Al Jennings and Neal Hart as the heads of the two producing units. Miss Gibson has signed a long term contract for the railroad series.

In addition to these three stellar series, a fourth production unit also soon will be installed at the Capital Studio, that of a comedy company which will make two-reel pictures.

Named General Sales Manager of American

Mr. C. A. Stimson, well-known exchange manager, was recently promoted to the post of Manager of the Sales Department at the American Film Company's Home Office in Chicago.

Mr. Stimson is not a newcomer in the "Flying A" organization, having been identified with the field work of that company for some little time. He brings to his important position the advantage of long experience in general business and years of specialized work in the distribution department of the motion picture industry.

Rainbow's Comedies on a Larger Scale

According to advices received from Messrs. A. and J. Stern, producers of the Rainbow and Century comedies, which are released by Universal, comedy production within the coming year will be greatly increased and the standard will be much higher. This statement is accompanied with the fact that the Rainbow-Century studios have been completely overhauled and repaired and now rank among the best equipped studios on the West Coast.

The year's program for this producing company calls for the production of twenty-six comedies of each brand. Thirteen of the Century comedies will feature the lion animal comedies.

Extensive cages, specially constructed cells for the cameramen and directors and numerous other mechanical devices are now being added to the equipment. One of the trainers from the largest zoological gardens in the British empire has been obtained to care for the animals.

"Sahara," After Months, Is Still Drawing

The audience-power of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "Sahara" starring Louise Glaum, which for months has set summer records in many sections of the country, never was given greater demonstration than when the Hodkinson release as the Indiana Fair Week attraction shattered all attendance figures at the Colonial theatre, Indianapolis.

Further proof of "Sahara's" popularity and pulling power lies in the fact that since the opening of the Colonial seven years ago the Louise Glaum picture was the first to play an entire week, H. E. Cohen, owner and manager, not only choosing "Sahara" as the celebration week attraction but paying it the highest compliment an exhibitor can give a production by announcing it as a seven-day attraction ten days in advance of the opening.

H. B. Warner in "For a Woman's Honor"

Plague conditions in India which held such a prominent place in the news columns during the past year forms a basic part of the new Robertson-Cole feature, "For a Woman's Honor," distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual and in which Jesse D. Hampton presents H. B. Warner. The living conditions of the natives which has so much to do with the spread of typhoid and other diseases, the self-sacrifice of the English doctors and the status of Europeans living in India are all shown with accuracy in the picture.

Mr. Warner plays the role of an English army medical officer who gives his time and jeopardizes his life, treating the plague stricken natives.

"Mother and the Law" Over Loew Circuit

D. W. Griffith's "The Mother and the Law," fourth offering in the Griffith repertory season at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, has been booked over the entire Marcus Loew circuit of theatres, to begin Monday, Sept. 15.

Select Purchases a Thriller

"A Scream in the Night" Based on a Theme Felt Bound to Hold Audience

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION this week announces the purchase of an elaborate production entitled "A Scream in the Night," which will be distributed as a Select special attraction. The plot of the picture concerns one of the foremost questions of the ages and is woven around the attempt of an insane scientist to prove that the Darwinian theory has replaced the fable of Adam and Eve and that man can revert to a type.

The picture is made from an original story by Charles A. Logue. It was produced by B. A. Rolfe, introducing Ruth Budd, a new and charming screen personality who is seen in the role of "Darwa." It was directed by Burton King and Leander DeCordova.

As the story goes, Senator Newcastle is preparing to finance a trip to the Amazonian jungle in search of his daughter who was stolen in early youth. It is reported that an insane scientist is holding the girl a captive until she reaches an age when the scientist will be enabled to prove the Darwinian theory. The night before the search is scheduled to start, the senator is killed in his drawing room. Robert Hunter, the senator's prospective heir if his daughter is not found, takes up the search, and with a companion strikes out for the heart of the jungle.

The story moves fast from here on, eventually resulting in the finding of the girl, and discovery of the fact that Senator Newcastle is really alive, a prisoner, another man having been murdered in mistake for him.

Select officials are confident that "A Scream in the Night" will prove one of the screen sensations of the season of 1919-1920.

Realarters From Many Fields

Exchange Men for Most Part Broadened Through Wide Business Experience

CONTRARY to established custom several members of the business organization of the Realart Pictures Corporation have been engaged in fields that the average man connected with the promotion of motion picture enterprises seldom if ever comes in contact with. This is exceptional, of course, but then so are the men who guide the business of the new photoplay company.

It is a far cry from engineering to managing a film exchange. Yet Realart numbers among its branch managers not one but two who have completed ther academic educations at technical institutions. Henry E. Wilkinson, who represents Realart in Buffalo, was graduated a civil engineer from the famed Massachusetts Institute of Technology. To keep honors even in the West, Bert R. Latz, Denver manager, holds the degree of mining engineer from the University of California.

But Realart exchange managers have been interested in other things than engineering. In charge of Pittsburgh territory is Nat Barach, who can appear at the bar (legal, not liquid) any time. He studied law at New York University. Newspaper work claimed the attention of William H. Rippard, who will handle the distribution of Realart Pictures in and around the Capital for four years. He was on the staffs of the Washington "Star," the Baltimore "Herald" and the Atlantic City "Press." Who better qualified to show an exhibitor how to exploit his pictures? In addition to their extraordinary pursuits a large percentage of Realart men in the field have been exhibitors.

To the layman it may seem that experience outside film circles is of little or no value to a man connected with the sales promotion of photoplays. But the Realart men in question know that their other interests have given them the other fellow's viewpoint so that they are able to guage matters pertaining to pictures not from one angle, but from many.

Magazine Cooperates on Film

Sunset Magazine to Place Department at Disposal of Wilderness Scenics

THE SUNSET MAGAZINE will collaborate in filming the new Bulls-Eye super-scenic, "The Legends of the Wilderness." The scenics, which are described as "Journeys into the land of once-upon-a-time," are now being photographed in the wilds of the Pacific coast country by Leland J. Burrud. The "legends" will be released in one reel, beginning about Sept. 15, according to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, under the general title, "Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness."

Besides printing a two-page illustrated story in every issue of the Sunset Magazine for the next year, describing the travel, hardships and amusing experiences of the Burrud expedition, the publication will place at Mr. Burrud's disposal its entire historical and research department for material for the "Legends," which will portray the scenic glories of the Sunset Eden, interwoven with legendary stories of the localities photographed. Readers of the Sunset Magazine will also be requested to augument the services of that magazine by submitting legends or stories they have heard relating to the many odd nooks and crannies in the practically unexplored portions of the Rocky mountains Mr. Leland J. Burrud is invading with his camera.

"Miracle Man" Given a Strong Campaign

To date George Loane Tucker's Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Miracle Man," one of the first releases of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under its new schedule, has opened in such representative first run centers as New York City, Boston, Washington, D. C., Birmingham, Ala., Colorado Springs, Colo., Asbury Park, N. J., Pittsburgh, Pa., and Waterbury, Conn. Other openings are being recorded with the passing of each day but these few mentioned above are representative of every type of first run territory in the country.

The manner in which "The Miracle Man" has been advertised and exploited in these territories is a commentary on the efficiency of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation field force and the ability of the home office advertising department which conceived the elaborate campaigns of exploitation that have been put into operation in all the territories.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation desires particularly to call attention to the striking advertisements in all sizes reproduced in the press book and the manner in which they have been seized upon by all exhibitors who have shown the picture to date.

Exhibitors and exploitation men have also gone to great lengths to get the proper recognition for "The Miracle Man" that it rightfully deserves.

Blackton Moves Into Brooklyn Studio

J. Stuart Blackton, President and Director General of The J. Stuart Blackton Features Pictures, Inc., has just taken possession of his reconstructed studio in Brooklyn, where he is now making his personally directed productions for Pathe releases, the first of which will be "The Moonshine Trail."

The Blackton plant always has been one of the most desirable film shops around New York, and now, with its production facilities doubled and greatly improved, it ranks among the best equipped studios in the country.

Upon the organization of his new company, Commodore Blackton acquired additional space adjoining his plant, and at oncec approved plans for rebuilding. He now has a two story building with his private executive offices, cutting room, projecting room, stock room, and immense stages on the lower floor, with more set space, additional dressing rooms and property departments on the second floor.

Keenan in "The False Code," Sept. 21

The vigor and forcefulness of Frank Keenan's acting, so marked in "The World Aflame," is said to be a noteworthy feature of his next production, "The False Code," which Pathe will release on September 21.

"The False Code," considered one of Keenan's tense, dramatic contributions to the silent drama, was adapted from a story by Kate Corbaley. Jack Cunningham made the screen adaptation, while Ernest C. Warde, who handled "The World Aflame," directed the production.

Mackenzie a Pioneer Serial Director

Donald Mackenzie, who is directing the new S. L. K. Serial featuring Helen Holmes in "The Fatal Fortune" is one of the pioneer serial directors and has to his credit many successful serials. Under his personal direction such successes as "The Silent Mystery," "The Shielding Shadow" and "The Seven Pearls" were made.

Seeking an opportunity to enlarge the scope of his activities and put into effect many advanced ideas, Mr. Mackenzie will direct other serials than that of "The Fatal Fortune" for the S. L. K. Serial Corporation.

Speaking of "The Fatal Fortune" serial, Mr. Mackenzie had the following to say, "I consider 'The Fatal Fortune' featuring Helen Holmes, which has been under my personal direction at all times the supreme achievement of my career."

Press Book on "Right to Happiness"

IN connection with the exploitation and advertising campaign for the production "The Right to Happiness" Universal has announced the completion of a most elaborate press book.

It is a trifle larger than the standard press book issued on each of the Universal Special Attractions and contains about twice as many pages. An elaborate cover design suitable for mounting is one feature of the service pamphlet. Designed with the sole purpose of assisting the exhibitor in having a wide choice of material to work with this press book contains thirty reproductions of available cuts divided among ad cuts, publicity cuts and poster cuts. A foreword which is in itself a selling feature of the book was written by John W. Krafft, editor of the pressbooks.

Theatre Contest Winner to Play for Fox

A unique contest has just been started by the Colonial Theatre of Stockton, California, simultaneously with the forming of a Travel Club. The prizes in this contest are the most unusual and valuable ever offered in a prize campaign. Probably the most novel of the prizes is a six months contract with Fox Film Corporation to play in feature pictures.

This contest, as announced by the management of the theatre, is open to all members of the club and both young and old are striving to gain this contract for one half year with Fox Film Corporation.

The prize winners will be determined by the number of points scored. Points will be issued in generous quantities on books of tickets which are good for admission to the theatre. These books are sold to club members only.

Select Title Changed

The title of Norma Talmadge's next Select, "By Right Of Conquest," by Arthur Hornblow, editor of the Theatre Magazine and author of many novelizations of Charles Klein's plays, has been changed to "The Broken Barrier."

"Broken Blossoms" Bookings

Immediate Demand Follows Announcement United Artists Will Handle It

UNITED Artists Corporation announced in the trade papers on Friday of last week that it would release D. W. Griffith's art sensation, "Broken Blossoms," and already the stream of big bookings that are coming into the "Big Four" office indicate a big first run record for the production.

October 20 has been set as release date.

Hiram Abrams stated that in his estimation no production had ever been assured of the welcome that the leading showmen of the country would accord Mr. Griffith's masterpiece.

"Scarcely five days have gone by since we announced Mr. Griffith's 'Broken Blossoms' for general release, yet the bookings already consummated make it clear that 'Broken Blossoms' is going to prove as sensational a success the country over as it did in the personal presentations offered by Mr. Griffith.

"Five days, mind you, and we have already closed such bookings as the Doric Theatre in Kansas City for an indefinite run, the Merrill in Milwaukee for two weeks, the Criterion in Atlanta for two weeks, Loew's Greater New York Circuit, the America in Denver for two weeks, the Stillman and Alhambra Theatres in Cleveland for a simultaneous run of one week. the Palace and Columbia Theatres in Washington for a simultaneous run of one week, the Citizens' Alhambra in Toledo for one week, the Circle in Indianapolis for one week, the Capitol in Elizabeth, N. J., for one week, the Oliver Opera House in South Bend for one week, and numerous others in a marvelously growing list that looks at this time to be a record-breaker by release date.

"It is a certainty that 'Broken Blossoms' has had more pre-release word-of-mouth advertising and country-wide publication comment than any pictures."

Vitagraph to do a Stage Hit

"The Fortune Hunter" Soon to Be Put on with Earle Williams as the Lead

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, and George Randolph Chester, its production editor, have selected "The Fortune Hunter" as one of the stage successes to be translated to the screen by Vitagraph in the near future. This play by Winchell Smith, the actor-producer, playwright, who gave the stage such other notable successes as "Brewster's Millions," "The Boomerang," "Turn to the Right," and "Lightnin" dates back but a few years and through its novelty, its humor, its love story and its instant success is still fresh in the minds of playgoers. Earle Williams has been selected by Mr. Smith to portray the role created by John Barrymore.

"The Fortune Hunter" told the story of a young city man, with an abundance of means, who had never done a stroke of work in his life, who went to a country town to earn a living. This was done on a wager. He asserted that it was the easiest thing in the world for a good looking young chap, with poise, good clothes and city manners, to go to a rural town and marry the village beauty who was always the daughter of the leading banker or merchant. The plans of the hero went astray, although he won his wager. It didn't happen just as he had foretold. He got work in a little broken down drug store and soon made it the best business in town. He was a "city fellow" clerk and from the first drew trade from the feminine portion of the town. The store grew. He prospered, and became a partner with the lovable but visionary owner. He made a fortune for his partner through his partner's invention of a new gas burner. He won the daughter of the president of the town bank at the very outset, only to find that he really loved his partner's daughter, a lovable character played in the original by Mary Ryan.

Called Best Farnum Picture

"Wolves of the Night" Makes a Hit with Exhibitors, Says Fox Statement

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are quoted as enthusiastic in their endorsement of "Wolves of the Night." First of the Star series which William Fox is presenting, with William Farnum as the featured artist. Director J. Gordon Edwards has produced in this a photoplay that for realism, for heart interest and for action surpasses any production yet made by the star. Supporting Mr. Farnum in this dramatic story is a cast of excellence, headed by the pretty and capable Louise Lovely.

To William Farnum has come a double distinction. He has been voted by his own sex as the best "man's man" on the screen: while a woman's club in a large eastern city recently decidedly unanimously that he is the most effective lover in motion pictures today. Both honors came to the star after those who voted had seen his interpretation of the difficult and intensely human role of Bruce Andrews in "Wolves of the Night."

In this photodrama of love and high finance, of tragedy, conspiracy and revenge, Farnum reaches the pinnacle of his screen career. Exhibitors have declared that the demand for return engagements of this Fox super feature has exceeded the largest previous call for any production.

Metro Buys the Stage Farce "Some Baby"

"Some Baby," the successful stage farce by Zellah Covington and Jules Simonson, has been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation, for production by Screen Classics, Inc., as one of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures. Announcement by Metro of the acquisition of "Some Baby" as one of the thirty-six famous stage plays and celebrated novels to be picturized by Screen Classics, Inc., during 1919-20, follows closely the purchase, announced last week, of Rachel Crother's comedy, "Old Lady 31."

"Some Baby" will be produced by Screen Classics, Inc. It will be distributed by Metro and will point the way for other and quite as noteworthy successors in the ambitious production policy that the president of Metro has inaugurated.

So far as is known now, Viola Dana will be starred in the Covington-Simonson farce.

"Better Times" Is Exploited at Fair

"Better Times," the Robertson-Cole feature produced by Brentwood under the direction of King W. Vidor was booked by Rubin and Finkelstein through Exhibitors' Mutual for the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, and the Liberty Theatre, St. Paul, for the week of the Minnesota State Fair. "Better Times" is being used as one of the slogans to boost the state fair and Messrs. Rubin and Finkelstein have capitalized on it in advertising the picture.

A number of local merchants have been giving their cooperation by boosting for "Better Times" and signs and cards enter prominently into the campaign.

"U" Screen Magazine Is Exclusive

"It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for advertising to get into the Universal New Screen Magazine." This is the statement made by Hal Hodes, managing editor of the novelty release produced by Universal and which is claimed to be the most exclusive and unique short-subject reel on the market today.

According to Mr. Hodes a number of the producers of the novelty releases of today are openly soliciting advertising in their short subjects. Mr. Hodes states that the exhibitor is not interested, nor is the public, in reading advertisements which are meant to be enetrtaining and which are exploited through a motion picture reel.

Select Feature to Go Into the Capitol

Select Pictures Corporation's New York exchange has completed arrangements for the showing of "The Undercurrent" in the new Capitol Theatre on Broadway.

The Capitol Theatre, which is under the management of E. J. Bowes, is the newest and biggest theatre in New York, and "The Undercurrent" will be either the second or third attraction which is shown at this house.

Simplex Notes

EXHIBITORS HEED THE CALL

In the City of St. Louis where just a few years ago the number of Simplex Projectors were few indeed, the Simplex distributor for that section reports that his territory is rapidly becoming all Simplex and this statement is largely corroborated by the reports which The Erker Brothers Company sent into the factory covering Simplex installations in the past several weeks.

The recent Exhibitors' Convention held in St. Louis, at which time The Erker Brothers Company made a special appeal and display which greatly impressed the visiting exhibitors and delegates of that city. One feature of the display was the demonstration given on the new Simplex Mazda Equipment which held the attention of all who had occasion to witness this demonstration, and resulted in many immediate orders for same.

The following include a few of the Simplex installations that were made in the Erker Brothers Company territory within the past few weeks:

The Orpheum theatre, Collinsville, Ill.
The Crystal theatre, Little Rock, Ark.
The Royal theatre, Little Rock, Ark.

Interest Bought in Reed Company

Half Interest Acquired by Dintenfass and Berst

A DEVELOPMENT likely to result in decided benefit to the theatres affiliated with United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., took place this week when a half interest in the Florence Reed productions was acquired by a syndicate headed by Mr. J. A. Berst, president of United, and Mr. Mark M. Dintenfass. Tribune Productions, Inc., the company which made the first of the Florence Reed pictures to be released through United, including her "Code of Honor" and "The Woman Under Oath," will continue to manufacture the Reed productions but with new offices and a new Board of Directors. The new officers elected were Mr. J. A. Berst, president; Mr. Mark M. Dintenfass, vice-president and Mr. A. J. Bimberg, secretary and treasurer. These gentlemen with Mr. Jesse Rosenberg will constitute the board of directors.

Mr. A. J. Bimberg, the new secretary and treasurer, has been the producing manager for the Florence Reed productions from the beginning, and "Her Code of Honor," "The Woman Under Oath," "Her Game" and the recently completed "The Eternal Mother" were all made under his personal supervision.

Under Mr. Bimberg's management an effort was made to increase the drawing power of this popular star by the presentation of a series of vehicles of highly diversified character. The experiment has worked out very successfully with the result that Miss Reed is more highly in demand than ever before with the exhibitors. With the purchase of the interest in the Production Company by Mr. Berst and his associates, United Pictures Theatres of America will be assured a control of the character and quality of the productions to be made in the future, and intends to take full advantage of the increased demand for the star in turning out greater and more lavish productions than ever before. The same high standard that has been maintained in the selection of Miss Reed's supporting casts will continue in force and the stories to be utilized to exploit the star's talents will be selected from the works of some of the leading writers of the day. An announcement may be expected shortly as to the operating locale of the reorganized company.

Miss Reed's contract with Tribune Productions, Inc., has still more than two years to run. The present policy of releasing a Florence Reed feature every other month on the United Picture Theatre program will be continued.

Otis Skinner Will Make a Picture

Will Appear in "Kismet," in Which He Made Stage Hit

IN view of the announcement made last week that "Kismet," the theatrical success is to become a photoplay, it is most natural that in order to round out the importance of this announcement, and to give it further distinction, the Waldorf Company, who will make the production under the direction of David G. Fischer, has secured the services of Otis Skinner to create the pictures in the role that he made famous in the original production of "Kismet" which began its illustrous career at the Knickerbocker theatre on Christmas Day, 1911.

There are few actors either here or abroad who have contributed as much to the history of the theatre as Otis Skinner. To know his record as an actor is like reading the most glorious pages of the story of the theatre in America.

He was born in Cambridge, Mass., and was educated there and in Hartford, Conn. He made his first appearance on the stage at the Philadelphia Museum in November, 1877, as Jim in "Woodleigh." He then went to the Walnut Street Theatre in that city, where he played in the stock company of that house for two years. He made his first appearance on the New York stage at Niblo's Garden, in 1879, as Naclow in "The Enchantment," following which he was seen as Sir Francis Mobray in "Hearts of Steel." Mr. Skinner then associated himself with the late Edwin Booth and appeared in "Macbeth," "Richelieu," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Richard III," "Othello," "The Fool's Revenge," "Hamlet," "The Merchant of Venice," "The Taming of the Shrew," and "Ruy Blas." He then went to Boston and played with Lawrence Barrett for three years, after which he returned to New York and was again seen with this actor in "Pendragon," "Yorick's Love," "Julius Caesar," "The Man o' Airlie," "David Garrick," and "The Marble Heart." His next engagement was at the Star, New York, playing Paolo in "Francesca de Rimini." The late Augustin Daly Company was then at its prime and Mr. Skinner became one of its important members. He opened at Daly's, New York, in October, 1884, in "A Wooden Spoon" and remained with this company for four years and played with great success during that period in the following pieces: "Lord and Commons," "Love on Crutches," "The Recruiting Officer," "The Magistrate," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "Nancy and Co.", "Love in Harness," "The Taming of the Shrew," "The Railroad of Love" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Mr. Skinner made his first appearance in London as a member of the Augustin Daly Company at the Strand Theatre in 1886 in "A Night Off" and in "Nancy and Co." He was next seen in "The Railroad of Love" and in "The Taming of the Shrew" at the Gaiety during the visit of the Daly company in 1888. He then returned to America and was seen as Paul Falshawe in "The Love Story" at Tompkins' Fifth Avenue Theatre. His next engagement was with the Booth-Modjeska company, with which he appeared at the Broadway Theatre in "Much Ado About Nothing," "Richelieu" and "The Fool's Revenge." He remained with this company until 1890 and was again seen in London, this time in "Romeo and Juliet" and "This Woman and That."

Syndicate Boosts the Hall Room Boys

Messrs. Jack and Harry Cohn announce the fact that the "Sun" newspaper syndicate is about to carry out an extensive exploitation campaign sale for the Percy and Ferdie, the Hall Room Boys cartoons. Seventy-five newspapers are now running these cartoons at the present time, but the Sun syndicate is concentrating its efforts to get at least one newspaper in every worth while city of the United States.

The popularity of the cartoons as well as the excellence of the productions have resulted in the territories for these comedies being almost completely sold out, with the exception of Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Briggs Now on Married Life Cartoons

Having completed fourteen Paramount-Briggs Comedies based on the cartoons "When A Fellow Needs A Friend" and "The Days of Real Sport," Clare A. Briggs, the cartoonist, who is producing the comedies, has started on a new series of one-reel subjects entitled "Married Life," based on his widely known cartoons entitled "Friend Wife," "Oh, Man," etc.

The pictures will be one-reel comedies of married life and will be in the same vein that have made the Briggs cartoons so human and popular.

First Realart Theatre Named

One of Kahn and Greenfield Houses in San Francisco Given That Title

THE first Realart theatre has been established. It is in San Francisco, and is under the ownership and management of Kahn and Greenfield Amusement Company.

Realart Pictures Corporation officials believe this is the first instance in the history of the business of a theatre being named in honor of a producing organization prior to the time of the actual releasing of pictures. It is accepted by Arthur S. Kane and his associates as a special tribute to the standards and ideals set forth by Realart in its preliminary work.

A letter to this effect and in appreciation was sent this week by Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart, to Messrs. Kahn and Greenfield.

The new Realart Theatre was known formerly as the Grand, and is located in Mission street, opposite the New Mission Theatre, another of the Kahn and Greenfield houses. This organization, one of the most prominent in San Francisco, owning the New Mission Theatre in the Mission district, one of the oldest sections of the city, dating from the time when the Spanish Missions were established, and the New Fillmore, situated in the Fillmore district. Both of these localities are important residential and business centers.

Both the New Mission and the New Fillmore were enlarged and redecorated and brought up-to-date within the past two years, although large and handsome when built. The New Mission is considered one of the finest photoplay theatres in San Francisco and probably held first rank until Eugene Roth built the new $2,000,000 California Theatre at the corner of Fourth and Market streets.

In photoplay circles on the West Coast, Messrs. Kahn and Greenfield are regarded as among the most progressive and enterprising exhibitors. Their manner of presentation is to surround the feature picture with the right atmosphere for its best showing.

Bessie Love Presented in Love Drama

Bessie Love's new feature, "Over the Garden Wall," will be one of Vitagraph's September releases. Miss Love is seen as a young girl who tackles new and unexpected troubles with her sleeves rolled up.

Vitagraph has provided Miss Love with an excellent cast for "Over the Garden Wall." It includes such well-known players as Myrtle Reeves, Willis Marks, Allen Forrest, Edward Hearn, Truman Vam Dyke, James Blackwell, Jay Morley, Otto Lederer and Anna Schaefer. David Smith was the director.

Quest for Twins Is a Long One Indeed

If any one thinks that it is an easy matter to find twin children who closely resemble each other, and will screen well, they will do well to interview Allen Holubar, director of the big Universal-Jewel photoplay. "The Right to Happiness," which is Dorothy Phillips' latest production. As Mr. Holubar is both author and director of "The Right to Happiness," he has no one to blame but himself for the dilemma he floundered into and the vast amount of trouble he experienced.

It was only when the director was about to despair that Miss Phillips herself brought the quest to a successful conclusion.

Picture Timely Upon Cardinal's Visit

World Pictures, quick to realize the interest that will be aroused by the coming visit of Cardinal Mercier of Belgium to this country, is calling the attention of the exhibitors throughout the country of the box office value of its production of "The Cross Bearer," in which Montagu Love is the star, as a timely picture that is closely associated with the famous Belgian Cardinal, who is one of the high lights of the great war.

The principal character in "The Cross Bearer" is Cardinal Mercier and depicts the struggle he made to protect innocent women and children from the brutal treatment of the German soldiers.

HARRY HAMMOND BEALL, director of publicity at Universal's West Coast studio, will sever his connections with that organization upon the expiration of his contract, September 12th. Beall's plans for the future include an extended motor tour of California in which he will visit Lake Tahoe. At the expiration of the trip, he expects to become an exhibitor in one of the larger suburban cities of Los Angeles. Beall is one of the pioneer motion picture publicity men on the West Coast, and has been actively connected with several of the larger picture exploitations in Southern California.

Madlaine Traverse, who is being filmed as a star in a forthcoming William Fox production, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, staged an impromptu thriller in a recent scene when she threw herself from a fast running horse in order to improve the tensity of the action. Miss Traverse in the story was making an escape from the "heavy," played by George McDaniel. In spite of the protests of her director against attempting the action, the plucky actress added much to the scene when she made the fall so realistically that those near her thought she actually had been hurt.

Under the title of Supervising Editor of Feature Productions, Dennison Clift, graduate of Leland Stanford University and widely known scenario writer, will have charge of preparation of all scripts for the dramatic pictures being made at the William Fox studio. Mr. Clift has been with the Fox Corporation for a year and a half and had previous experience at the Lasky studio. His most recent work is that of the stories he has written for Madlaine Traverse, among which are "The Danger Zone," "Gambling in Souls," "The Love that Dares," "When Fate Decides," "The Snares of Paris," and the feature on which she is now working, "The Heritage of Eden."

Alfred E. Green, formerly associated with Marshall Neilan, has resigned as director at the William Fox studio to become associated in the productions of Monte Katterjohn Pictures, which are being made under the supervision of Harry Garson, for release through the Equity programme. The first of Mr. Green's subjects in his new affiliation, has not been announced. His last feature was "The Web of Chance," with Peggy Hyland, the noted English actress, as the star.

Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Alice Lake, John Ince and Jack Conway were guests at a supper and dance given in celebration of the completion of a recent Metro production, at The Ship, the famous Southern California beach resort.

Anna May, who has an important role with Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd.", says that in spite of prohibition, she has experienced all the sensations of being intoxicated without the experience of taking "the wet stuff." Miss May recently guided a run-a-way polo pony into a barbed wire fence and was severely shaken and bruised as a result of her fall.

Edyth Chapman, prominent among supporting players in many recent photoplay successes, and James Neill have been engaged to do characters of an important nature in forthcoming Goldwyn productions. Mr. Neill is returning to the screen after an extended period as a director, during which time he made several pictures at the Famous Players-Lasky studio.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May have begun work as principal players in "Mary's Ankle," production of which was started the week of August 25th by Director Lloyd Ingraham at the Thomas H. Ince studio. The young couple are now in the third of their series, of which "Twenty-three and One-Half Hours' Leave" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" are the preceding features.

Irvin Willatt, who has charge of direction of the first special feature starring Hobart Bosworth, at the Ince studio, recently received proof of the delicacy with which a submarine of the U. S. Navy may be manouvered. During the taking of some "close-ups" of Bosworth, the deck of the submarine was submerged so that it ran just below the surface. Acting in cooperation with Mr. Willatt, the commander of the vessel sank the submarine until just the camera and the heads and shoulders of the players remained above water, but so carefully was the level maintained that not a foot of film became dampened.

Gladys George, who played in support of De Wolfe Hopper in "The Better 'Ole" has been engaged to play opposite Charles Ray in his latest production at the Ince studio, as the result of the presence of Thomas H. Ince during the exhibition of the Hopper picture in Los Angeles. It is said he was so impressed with the actress' work that she was prevailed upon to sign a contract with the Ince forces.

Ernest C. Warde is preparing a screen adaptation of the next starring vehicle for J. Warren Kerrigan in which Fritzi Brunette again will be the leading woman. Arthur Todd is head cameraman for the series of productions Director Warde is staging.

W. H. Clifford, continuity writer, is prominent among those who have been engaged by Benjamin B. Hampton in preparation for the third of the series of productions based upon novels by famous authors. The latest is to be Emerson Hough's novel, "The Sage Brushers," which will be directed by Edward Sloman. An all-star cast has been engaged by the director.

Theda Bara spent her vacation at Watkins Glen taking the various sorts of treatments that were recommended at the ultra luxurious hotel there. Miss Bara says she feels sure that they were nothing more nor less than a means of Deferred Justice which made up for all the spankings she should have got and didn't in her childhood days. Nevertheless she liked the pine trees and the walks, and feels quite ironed out and ready for all sorts of new ventures.

Guy Empey Confesses to Ambitions

"OH, don't let's talk war," Arthur Guy Empey remonstrated, "I went to war because—well, just because there was a war, and while I can't say that I've forgotten it, I've done a lot of other things that were interesting, too."

"Our mistake," we apologized, "we've always associated you with 'Over the Top' and 'Tales from a Dugout' and 'Treat 'em Rough.'"

"Of course you have. So has everybody else, as far as I've been able to find out. But come into my den for a minute, will you?"

We went into the den, wondering why the interview hadn't been staged there in the first place, but the moment we entered, we knew the reason. Papers and books and magazines and—manuscripts, chiefly manuscripts, on the desk, on the tables, on the metal, on the bookshelves, on the chairs, and on the floor. There was no use asking us to sit down, unless we were expected to sit on a manuscript. In fact, as Mr Empey put it, there wasn't even room for a beer bottle and what goes with it.

"Is it all your work?" we gasped, incredulously. Not that we doubted Mr. Empey's ability as an author, but we didn't see how one of his apparent years could have found time to fill so many pages. Writing is hard work. If you don't believe it, try to produce a thousand words an hour, which, computed roughly, is the rate at which Mr. Empey must have produced his.

Guy Empey

"But I began at twelve," he explained, as if that were any excuse. "Every boy has a hero, and mine was Charles A. Dana, and his 'Two Years Before the Mast.' I made up my mind then that I was going to take the same trip that he took, and a few years later I ran away from home, got work on a seagoing schooner of the oldest known variety, and actually did make the same trip. I've been once and a half times around the world. Incidentally, Charles A. Dana is a cousin of my mother's. I wish you could see my mother. She's quite a young-looking woman, though how she does it, I don't know. I've given her enough anxiety and worry to have turned her hair gray ten times over."

"And you want people to realize that you're a Soldier of Fortune and a writer, with a strong dramatic instinct, as well as a soldier of 1918?"

"I'd like them to, yes. I write all my own scenarios, and supervise the continuity. One of my ardent ambitions is to produce pictures without any help whatever, so I'm also understudying my director, and as soon as I master the technicalities of directing and continuity, I'll be able to do the whole thing. I want to produce clean, wholesome pictures, dealing with some big problem and absolutely true to life. The things that happen around us every day are much more gripping and dramatic than events that some one with an overworked brain sits back and imagines. And when one has had the actual personal experience with life that I've had, one ought to be able to put in the significant, realistic touches that win the public's approval. I've been with a circus in Nashville, Tenn., and I've instigated a ship's mutiny at Valparaiso, and had to beat it to Guayaquil, where, because they were so hard up for hands, they took me back, kept me in irons for a few days to make sure I'd never start trouble again, and then let me out to work."

"Were you ever on the stage before you appeared with Rose Stahl in 'Pack Up Your Troubles'?" we asked, and though we felt sure that Mr. Empey was endowed with that greatest of all blessings—a sense of humor—we were glad to have his answer prove it.

"Yes," he replied, "shifting scenery. And, speaking of 'Pack Up Your Troubles,' I'm afraid I was a very eccentric actor. I never could remember my lines, and always made them up as I went along. I didn't mean to annoy the rest of the company by depriving them of their cues, but they objected to my method vehemently. Oh, yes, I was in another show, so long ago that I should have forgotten it except for an incident that occurred the other night. Fourteen years ago, at Fort Slogan, Al Lichtman and I put on a one-act sketch called 'Rosenberg's Theatrical Agency.' I won't tell you just how long it ran, but ultimately Al and I got started on different tracks, and didn't see each other again until we met last week at the Astor. Some reunion, I'll say! Al is general manager for one of the biggest of all the producing companies now, you know, and I'm—well, I'm a little bit in the limelight."

It didn't take much imagination to picture that reunion. Two men of Mr. Empey's adventurous type, who haven't seen each other for fourteen years, have tales to tell when they do get together. Life, as far as Mr. Empey is concerned, seems to be one new thing after another, and he does everything he undertakes because he wants to and enjoys doing it. He's the sort of man it does one good to meet because he's so delightfully cheerful, and so admirably ambitious.

Among other literary plans, he wants to write a series of books for boys. He recalls his own boyish devotion to H. G. Henty, Jules Verne, and such masters, so vividly, he says, that he would like other boys to read his stories with the same gratification. That he is every boy's friend, goes without saying. It is quite typical of the man that he should be responsible for the "Treat 'em Rough" Baseball Club, which meets at Dyckman Oval, has a jolly good time, plays crackerjack baseball and donates its profits to funds for wounded soldiers. As everyone knows, the proceeds of "Pack Up Your Troubles" went to the same cause.

As we were leaving, one more incident occurred to prove that Mr. Empey's interest is in books rather than the exciting career which made his name familiar to every American. He presented us with—no, not a signed photograph (it took us until the eleventh hour plus fifty-five minutes to get that even for this story), but his complete literary publications to date: Over the Top, First Call, and Tales from a Dugout. That won't be the complete list for long, however.—Marguerite Jones.

Veteran Frank Losee Signed Again

Close upon the announcement from Los Angeles that Theodore Roberts, at the termination of his fifth year in motion pictures, had signed a new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, comes that of the signing of another veteran character actor, Frank Losee, for the next year by the same organization.

Like Mr. Roberts, Mr. Losee has been five years in pictures and has appeared exclusively in Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Gladys Valerie Is Convert from Stage : : : :

AN ingenue whose first professional appearance was a distinct failure—at least so far as the little lady herself was concerned—but never mind! Gladys Valerie can vouch for the truth of the old adage about "good beginnings and bad endings."

"How did I happen to go into pictures?" she repeated reflectively. "Well, you see that came quite naturally because I began my dramatic career when I was seven. My mother was Edith Hays, the opera singer, and she let me appear in a benefit performance, thinking, of course, that I had inherited enough of her dramatic instinct to be able to sing a little song that I knew perfectly, without experiencing stage fright or overwhelming self-consciousness or anything dreadful. But when I found myself alone on the centre of that stage I was simply terrified. How I got through the song I don't know, but I was so upset that mother decided never to let me appear again."

As Miss Valerie leaned back in her chair she was the very picture of repose and self-assurance, and she admitted laughingly that she had long since got over her first terror of a large audience. She has golden hair and brown eyes, and while she looks like a most ingenuous ingenue and can play the part of an unsophisticated school girl to perfection, she has had enough experience and training to be able to portray any sort of role a scenario may call for.

As the little tattle-tale in the orphan asylum in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," who tried to thwart all Lovey Mary's good intentions by reporting them to the irate matron, she was a convincingly unsympathetic character, ready to create trouble wherever she could in all the world she was allowed to know. She pulled Lovey Mary's hair with such apparently realistic vim, and came so near scratching out her eyes that their battles fairly made us shiver.

"And yet," she declared, "I was up in Miss Clark's dressing room just before that scene, lunching with her and having the most delightful time. She's a perfect dear, don't you think?"

Such are the shams of film land!

"Marie Ltd." came next, and in it Miss Valerie gave further evidence of her versatility by playing a worldy-wise society woman, while in "Dawn" she played true to type and was a dainty, petite ingenue.

"But do tell us how your mother happened to change her mind after her first decision that you were not cut out for the stage," we urged.

"Oh, I loved music so passionately and studied so hard that she realized after all that an operatic career was the thing for me to have. I won a five hundred dollar scholarship at the National Conservatoire of Music and later another scholarship, and I made my debut with the Royal Italian Opera Company when I was sixteen. I could sing in French, Italian and German as well as English, but learning so many roles, and keeping in practice all the time is difficult work, and my health went back on me and I had to give up. Then someone suggested pictures, and I've been in the film world for two years."

"Are you ever going back to your first love?" we asked.

"Oh, I don't know," she replied smiling, "I guess I've become as much of a picture fan as anybody. Everybody has been so nice to me, and I love the work. It's such a comfort not to have to play the same part eight times a week for months and months, until your first enthusiasm is all worn off and you feel altogether 'stale.' On the screen we rehearse just enough to make sure that everyone knows what to do, and then we go to work fresh and unfatigued by interminable rehearsing. I'm really keen about it, and the unlimited possibilities for all sorts of parts."

Gladys Valerie

"But chiefly ingenues," we insisted, and glancing at the photographs we had in our hands, she had to agree with us. Marguerite Jones.

Spitz Arranging for a Big Production

Of more than usual interest to the picture art is the announcement made this week by Eugene Spitz, well-known independent producer, of the arranging of a cast for a super-production which will be made in the East under Mr. Spitz's personal supervision. At the present time no names are being mentioned in connection with the persons selected.

Mr. Spitz is the producer responsible for the successful producing of the famous series of Stage Women's War Relief series of productions.

Always on the alert for something new to interest motion picture audiences H. A. Spanuth has added a new section to all releases of Spanuth's Original Vod-A-Vil Movies in the form of a comedy monologue entitled "Why They Laugh in Vod-A-Vil." This monologue will contain all the latest and best jokes which have sent vaudeville audiences into peals of laughter, and they will undoubtedly bring just as big a laugh from the screen.

Select Griffith Studio Site

Eastern Studio Will Be Situated in New Rochelle on the Flagler Estate

ALBERT L. GREY, general manager for D. W. Griffith, following a careful survey of all the available property near New York City, has selected New Rochelle as the location for the new Griffith eastern production headquarters. The site chosen is a part of the Henry Flagler estate, embracing some thirty acres, and is admirably suited to picture making. Plans have been drawn for studio buildings that will be complete in every detail of arrangement and equipment. Frank Wortman, technical director, and T. D. Thompson, electrician, are in New York from the Griffith studios at Los Angeles to attend to the preliminary arrangements.

The burden of decision in selecting a site for Mr. Griffith's producing headquarters has rested on the shoulders of Albert Grey, and his choice of the Flagler estate, just "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," is considered by motion picture authorities a genuine "find." The deal for the leasing of the property was handled through attorneys Albert H. A. Banzhaf and John G. Pembleton, and includes a long term tenancy with an option for renewal.

Mr. Griffith will have full charge of planning the buildings and their interior arrangements, and is expected to introduce a number of startling departures for the making of art productions of the same high character as "Broken Blossoms," "The Mother and the Law," "The Fall of Babylon," "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World" and others with which his name has been identified in the past.

Mr. Griffith and his entire Western staff of players, photographers, technical directors and business executives will arrive in New York before the first of October to begin work at New Rochelle.

Cast in "The Capitol"

Arthur F. Beck, president of Artco Productions, has surrounded Leah Baird with a company of ability for the third in her series of Augustus Thomas pictures, "The Capitol," for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, work on which is well under way at the Biograph Studios under the supervision of George Irving, who also directed "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano."

Alexander Gaden, Robert T. Haines, and Ben Hendricks are chief in the support.

Flashes of Flint News

DURING the week beginning August 31, Charles Garfield, manager of the Orpheum did a very successful business with the "Red Lantern," featuring Nazimova. This picture had been booked for the Orpheum for the early summer, but was held over by Mr. Garfield for his first big fall attraction. He secured some added publicity for the picture by an arrangement with the Woolworth store where an entire window was given over to a display of music of the "Red Lantern," with announcements that the play was being shown at the Orpheum. He had the entrance to the theatre attractively decorated with red lanterns during the engagement.

WORK is well under way for the new Regent theatre being built by the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Association, of which Col. W. S. Butterfield is the head at a cost of $100,000. This will be the first large playhouse outside of the central business section. It is to be opened February 1, 1920, according to present plans.

DURING his recent engagement of the "Unpardonable Sin," which had a great week's business at the Strand, Manager Matt secured some good publicity by making an airplane flight over the city on the opening day and scattering heralds advertising the picture. The front page of the heralds read, "A Message from the Air." Mr. Matt spent about 30 minutes in the air distributing the heralds.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the plans for a new motion picture theatre in the north-end industrial district of Flint, to cost $30,000. The M. Rosenblum Co., a corporation in which the stockholders are M. Rosenblum, M. Kobacker and I. Silverman, owners of furniture stores in Flint, Toledo and the East. The theatre will be 40 x 100 feet and have a seating capacity of more than 500. Construction will be started soon, ground having been broken.

Happenings in Madison

THIS week marks Paramount week at the new Strand theatre. One of the largest advertising campaigns was used by Manager A. O. Desormeaux in launching his pictures for the week. The idea was greeted with success. The program consisted of Dorothy Gish in Nugget Nell for two days, Charles Ray in Hay Foot Straw Foot, and Irene Castle in a Paramount Special DeLuxe, "The Firing Line."

LAST week Manager McWilliams of the Grand theatre put on a solid week of Nazimova, playing two days on "Toys of Fate," two days on "An Eye for An Eye" and the rest of the week on "Out of the Fog." The big following of Nazimova made the week a success. This week the Grand shows Alice Brady in "Redhead," Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den," and three days on the "Eyes of the World."

THE Grand had its usual success in returning a Charlie Chaplin picture. This time it was "Sunnyside."

THE Fuller theatre did phenomenal business on Alice Joyce in "The Third Degree" on Sunday. It was followed by Earl Metcalf in the "Battler." The program for the Fuller was cut short by the appearance of the first musical comedy of the season, "My Sunshine Lady."

THE attendance at the Majestic theatre during the summer months has been comparatively large. Their program this week includes: Florence Reed in "The Woman Under Oath," Harry Carey in "Outcasts of Poker Falls," and Priscilla Dean in "The Exquisite Thief."

THE Orton will screen Pauline Frederick in "The Hungry Heart" and May Allison in "Castles in the Air" and the "She Wolf." The Palace will show "Little Women" and Emily Wehlen in "The House of Gold" and Shirley Mason in "Come In."

LESLIE M. McCARTHY, formerly assistant treasurer at the Orpheum theatre, has accepted the position as assistant manager at the Strand theatre. Clayton Maranville, who formerly held the position, has been promoted to treasurer of the Orpheum, who has just opened up for the season.

Green Bay Boasts of Four Picture Theatres

FOUR exclusive motion picture houses, and one theatre presenting motion pictures in connection with vaudeville, are now in operation in Green Bay, Wis.

Through the withdrawal of S. Thirion from the Royal to open the New Bijou, and the coming of H. S. Hadfield of Chicago to the Royal theatre, a new house enters the field. Mr. Thirion desired a larger building, so quit the Royal for the Bijou. He is presenting a program picked from Pathe, Universal, Fox and Goldwyn offerings. An orchestra composed of members of the Thirion family furnishes the musical end of the programs in the house.

Mr. Hadfield, who re-opened the Royal after it had been closed for a week, was at one time connected with the Lasky corporation in the capacity of director, according to his public announcement. He has played in pictures. The Royal has been renovated and painted by the new proprietor.

In Indianapolis and Indiana

THE operators' strike in Indianapolis was ended this week when the union and the managers agreed on an increase of thirteen, instead of forty-eight cents per hour. The old scale was fifty-two cents, and the new is sixty-five. The operators demanded one dollar per hour when they struck August 28.

NONE of the theatres were closed during the strike, which was a little over a week's duration. Managers kept things going by doing their own operating or drafting members of their families for the duty. The weekly scale of operators will range from $20 to $32 per week.

"MISTER SMITH'S THEATRE," the new photoplay house opened in Illinois street by Dan Smith last week, has been successful from the start. The house is a beautiful little institution and its picture policy of only high-class productions featuring recognized stars has won it instantaneous favor. "The Thirteenth Chair" is one of the future bookings. Mabel Normand in "Upstairs" was the offering the first part of this week.

THE Circle made big and justified preparations for "His Majesty, the American," the first picture of the much-heralded United Artists' Corporation, this week. It is trite to tell of the crowds Douglas Fairbanks drew.

THE Alhambra offered Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense" the first part of the week; the Colonial, "Upstairs and Down"; the Isis, "Just Out of College"; and the Regent, "A Man's Country."

THE Stage Women's War Relief Series of twelve all-star productions continue to be booked by all leading theatres in Indiana.

THE Majestic is using a jazz band in the lobby to help exploit its photoplay programs. The Majestic's policy was recently switched from burlesque to screen shows.

RALPH W. ABBETT, manager of the Universal Film Exchange in Indianapolis, spent a two weeks' vacation in New York. Sam Rosenfeld and William Benjamin, Universal salesmen, took theirs at a northern Indiana lake, while D. C. Adams went to Chicago for a fortnight.

WILLIAM CONNORS, manager of the Luna-Lite at Marion, Ind., who recently exploited Mack Sennett's bathing girls by "bombing" the town with pictures of the beauties, thrown from an airplane, put Alice Brady in "Red Head" over big by admitting every red-headed woman free and advertising the stunt extensively.

Flint Exhibitors Battle for New Business

MANAGERS of Flint's three largest motion picture houses are engaged in a spirited battle with printer's ink now in competition for the tremendous business which the after-war activities in business and industrial lines has brought to this city.

The population of the city has increased several thousands—no one can estimate just how many in the last few months. This is due to the fact that many large building projects are in progress, among them being additions to the motor car plans which will cost about $4,000,000; construction of 1,200 houses for employes for which the General Motors Company is spending another $4,000,000; construction of a seven-story hotel for General Motors employes to cover a city square at a cost of $2,000,000, and the addition of many large business blocks including a ten-story office building. All this construction has brought several thousand builders and laborers to Flint, and the factories are putting on men so rapidly that there is scarcely a house to rent and rooms are so scarce that as many as 25 men are sleeping in single apartments.

These are the reasons why the managers of the Garden, Orpheum and Strand theatres, Messrs. C. Edgar Momand, Charles Garfield and Lester Matter, respectively, are spending loads of money in advertising their picture attractions.

Some managers might say that now is no time to advertise with so much business here. The trio, striving for the bulk of this big business, are spending more than ever. Quarter-page ads are to be seen in the one daily newspaper nearly every day from these theatres and there have been numerous half-page ads and several full-page splurges.

Mr. Garfield really started it when he began running big ads about his "open booking" policy, in which he told the public that he was going sled length in the matter of contracting for pictures for them. He lived right up to the "open booking" thing by securing the first of the "open booking" series of the new United Artists' Productions—Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American," which began a full week's run September 7.

Mr. Momand is boosting stronger than ever his Paramount-Artcraft programs, which he features most heavily among all the attractions with the exception of First National Exhibitors, of which he has played the most of the big features for the last year.

Now comes Mr. Matt with a full-page announcement in the Flint Journal of September 6 of the securing of exclusive first-run contracts on all Goldwyn, Selznick Select, Eminent Authors and Outing-Chester productions.

Yes, the stage is all set for the biggest battle in local motion picture circles and all of the big men in the business appear to have plenty of reserves in the shape of attractions lined up, while they are already laying down the publicity barrage.

Fair Week Helps Fond du Lac

THE week of September 1 to 7 was a big week with all the moving picture houses in Fond du Lac. It was county fair week and all the houses presented attractive programs. While the fair cut down the matinee attendance it packed the houses at night.

In Lansing Picture Houses

THE first motion picture theatre in Lansing to open before noon is the Plaza. Manager Hall inaugurated a change of policy whereby the theatre starts showing pictures at 11 A. M. week days and at 12 noon Sundays. Other theatres here continue to start at 1 P. M.

"THE ROAD THROUGH THE DARK" is the title of the newest Clara Kimball Young picture to be booked by the Plaza. The dates are September 15, 16 and 17. "Shades of Shakespeare," a Christie comedy, completes the bill.

A 600-LAMP sign is being put in the place the week of September 7 by Manager Claude Cady of the Gladmer theatre, Lansing's newest and largest motion picture house.

W. S. BUTTERFIELD of the Michigan string of vaudeville and picture theatres was in Lansing September 5 and announced that ground would be broken early next spring for his new Regent theatre. An arcade-theatre building, costing $175,000, running through an entire block in the center of the city, is planned by Mr. Butterfield. The new house will open next September with a picture policy, the announcement states.

MARY PICKFORD in "The Hoodlum" replaces vaudeville at the Bijou theatre September 28, 29, 30 and October 1. This is the second of the Pickford "own." The Bijou played the first, "Daddy Long Legs."

THE first episode of "The Great Gamble," a serial starring Charles Hutchinson, was shown Tuesday and Wednesday, September 4 and 5, at the Garden thatre. There are 15 episodes to follow.

THE first of the Big Universal Twelve, Harry Carey in "Ace of the Saddle," will be shown at the Orpheum theatre by Manager Jarvis September 14. He has booked the entire twelve for fall and winter showing.

CHARLES RAY is popular with local fans. The newest one booked is "Hay-Foot, Straw-Foot," which is to be shown at the Colonial theatre by Manager Cady September 24 and 25.

"EYES OF THE WORLD" has been booked by Manager Cady of the Gladmer theatre for September 19, 20, 21 and 22. This is the longest run for a single feature Mr. Cady has attempted.

"THE GRAIN OF DUST," a five-reel feature adopted from Davis Graham Phillip's story of the same name, will be shown at the Bijou theatre September 15, 16 and 17 in addition to the five-act vaudeville bill. This is the first double bill of the fall "vode" season.

THE week of September 7 is "Goldwyn Week" in Lansing. Manager Cady of the Colonial and Gladmer theatres has signed a contract for Goldwyn features for his houses. The campaign was launched September 6 with a full page announcement in the press. Harry R. Guest, special publicity man of the Goldwyn corporation, was in Lansing the entire week to assist in starting the features. The initial Goldwyn at the Gladmer was Tom Moore in "One of the Finest." The first at the Colonial was Mabel Normand in "When Doctors Disagree."

Fond du Lac Exhibitors and Their Musicians Split on Demands

THE managers of the Fond du Lac moving picture houses and the Musicians' Union reached a parting of the ways on Sunday night, August 31. The split came on the point as to whether or not the Musicians' Union should be allowed to dictate the minimum number of musicians to be employed at a theatre. The Musicians' Union, in presenting the new scale, stipulated that it should be allowed to determine the number of pieces which a theatre should employ. The managers held this to be an unreasonable demand and two weeks before the expiration of the old contract served notice on the musicians that they would not sign up a new contract carrying that stipulation.

On Saturday, August 30, the Fond du Lac Theatrical Managers' Association published a notice in the daily papers stating why it would be impossible for Fond du Lac theatres to employ union musicians after Sunday night, August 31. That announcement included the following statement:

"The managers of the various Fond du Lac theatres ask nothing more nor less of the Musicians' Union than the adoption of a sliding scale of wages.

"We have no argument with organized labor, having always hired union help and prefer now to continue doing so. But when demands pass the point of all reason, and the average theatre in Fond du Lac is asked to pay $5,000 and more a year for its music, something has got to be done to protect that business.

"For a number of years the local Musicians' Union has dictated the number of musicians each and every theatre must employ. Do you know of any other trade that can dictate the number of men that must be employed?

"Starting September 1 each theatre insists on the privilege of hiring the number of musicians they see fit. The idea of dictating the number of musicians a theatre must hire is simply a local ruling, one that does not prevail in any other of the larger cities of the state of Wisconsin. Why should it prevail in Fond du Lac?

"Here are the salaries we offer:

"Straight picture houses: If we wish to employ one musician—$40 per week. If we wish to employ two musicians—leader, $33 per week; side man, $27 per week. If we wish to employ three or more musicians—leader, $30 per week; each side man, $25 per week.

"Houses playing vaudeville and pictures: If we wish to employ one musician—$40 per week. If we wish to employ two musicians—leader, $35 per week; side man, $28 per week. If we wish to employ three or more musicians—leader, $32 per week; each side man, $26 per week.

"Musicians working over 6 hours and 15 minutes must be paid overtime. They work on an average of five hours and a half out of which rest periods are taken averaging from 40 to 60 minutes. If the present demands are met the local theatres will be compelled to raise their admissions to 33 cents, including war tax, a price entirely out of keeping with other cities."

Monday afternoon, September 1, found the theatres without union musicians or operators. While the latter had reached an agreement with the managers as to wages they could not work with non-union musicians which the theatre men had provided. At the Orpheum an out-of-town operator was secured; at the Bijou, Manager Smith was equal to the emergency and ran his own machine. Both theatres had music. The Idea put in a musical act.

What was the result? The public had read

he managers' statement and decided to stay by he moving picture theatre men. The houses were packed and the first three days of the week showed the biggest business either of the theatres had ever experienced in county fair week. The managers declared they will stand pat and unless the musicians concede the mooted point in the near future, will make permanent arrangements.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

"BLACKIE'S REDEMPTION" featuring Bert Lytell, came to the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., on Friday, August 29. On Saturday the 12th episode of "The Lightning Rider" with Pearl White was shown. The Sunday picture was "Sis Hopkins" with Mabel Normand and on Monday Gladys Brockwell was seen in "The Call of the Soul." On Tuesday, Geraldine Farrar played in "The Turn of the Wheel;" Wednesday's feature was "Such a Little Pirate" with Lila Lee and on Thursday William Hart appeared in "Border Wireless."

A SUCCESS Series picture "Rags" with Mary Pickford, was presented at the Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., on Saturday, August 30. A Harold Lloyd comedy was also shown.

"SYLVIA ON A SPREE" with Emmy Wehlen, came to the Crystal theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Sunday, August 31, and played to big evening houses. The pretty Metro star is a favorite player at this theatre.

ALICE BRADY appeared at the Dreamland theatre at Galena, Ill., on Wednesday, August 27, in "His Bridal Night." Wallace Reid was starred at the Grand theatre in "The House of Silence" on the same day.

GLADYS BROCKWELL, the Fox Victory player, was presented at the Crystal theatre at Anamosa, Ia. on Wednesday, August 27, in "The Forbidden Room." The Thursday feature was "The Adventure Shop" with Corinne Griffith.

THE Cota theatre at Waukon, Ia., is not only Waukon's best equipped theatre, but it has the record of showing the best films. On Monday, September 1, Bryant Washburn was presented in "The Gypsy Trail;" the Tuesday feature was "Kiss or Kill" with Priscilla Dean. On Wednesday, Marguerite Clark drew good crowds in "Out of a Clear Sky" and on Thursday, Douglas Fairbanks was seen in "He Comes Up Smiling." The Friday feature was "Little Women."

"THOU SHALT NOT" with Evelyn Nesbit, was shown at the Crystal theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Tuesday, August 26.

A REX BEACH special production "The Brand" and a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy "Hearts and Flowers" constituted the Thursday and Friday, August 28 and 29, feature at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia.

A PARAMOUNT picture "Puddn'head Wilson" with Theodore Roberts, was shown at the Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., on Saturday, September 6. A Fatty Arbuckle comedy was also shown.

EUGENE O'BRIEN came to the Palace theatre at Waverly Ia. on Saturday, August 30, in "The Perfect Lover." On Sunday, a special Cecil De Mille production "Don't Change Your Husband" was shown. The Tuesday feature was "Carolyn of the Corners" with Messie Love. "Revelation" with Nazimova, was shown Wednesday.

They Say in Chicago That—

C. H. FULTON, Vice-President and Sales Manager of the E. E. Fulton Company of Chicago, has appointed the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company of Detroit, Michigan, distributors of the Fulco products. As Mr. Fulton is a fast worker, he undoubtedly will establish many new agencies before reaching New York City, which is his destination.

THE tenth anniversary week from September 1st to 7th, inclusive, of the Garfield theatre, Chicago's classy west side photoplay palace, passed all expectations from a business standpoint, of its genial owner, Mr. Charles J. Schaefer and his live wire manager, Charles H. Ryan. The house was not able in any way to take care of the throngs that endeavored to get in at each performance. Mr. Ryan has proven beyond question of doubt, what consistent everlastingly keeping at it, will do for a theatre.

I. L. LESERMAN, manager of the Chicago Universal Exchange, is cavorting around with a smile on his face like a cherub, the joy occasioned by the manner in which the Universal picture, "The Right to Happiness," was taken by all who witnessed it at its Orchestra Hall showing, September 4.

NATE ASCHER, the head of the Ascher Brothers' Organization, has again demonstrated the public spirited strain that is in him, which has so endeared the Ascher houses to Chicago patrons, by co-operating immediately with the promoters of the big benefit, held Sunday afternoon, September 7, at the Auditorius theatre, for the benefit of the three Tanner children, orphaned by the killing of their parents at Hubbard Woods, recently. As soon as Pearl White, the well known and universally loved photoplay star announced her willinginess to appear before the audiences of the picture theatres in Chicago on Saturday afternoon and night, Mr. Ascher immediately threw open the doors of his fifteen Chicago houses, welcoming the lady with open arms, and according her every assistance to stamp upon the minds of his patrons, the necessity of helping the bereaved children by attending the benefit performance.

J. A. HUMPHREY, the veteran salesman out of the Vitagraph Chicago office covering Indiana, offers to take the M. P. News representative all over the state of Indiana for a week in his new Oakland car and make a wager that he can produce more exhibitors using Vitagraph service than any other section in the world—some claim, friend Humphrey, but knowing your ability and not going to lose any money betting with you.

THE Empire theatre at Auburn, Indiana, was sold recently to Messrs. Vought and Bacht, who also own theatres at Columbia city and South Whetley.

NEW HAVEN, Indiana, is to have a new theatre which will be completed and ready to open November 1. George Tillock and Theodore Liebstinn, managers of the Happy Hour theatre, have secured the lease on the new house. The management is planning on having a contest on the opening night for their new house, which will give the general public an opportunity of naming the theatre.

LAWSON REID, who has been with the Strand theatre of Scranton, Pennsylvania, for the past nine months, is back among the old folks once again and can be found at the Chicago offices of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, the organization that he left to go east and show the eastern populace how a real honest to goodness organist could extract music from the ivories.

BRUCE GODSHAW, the veteran Chicago photoplay manager, who has been for a number of years a member of the Ascher Brothers' Organization, has announced his resignation from the Ascher Brothers' Circuit to enter the field for himself.

G. H. MYERS, Park theatre, Champaign, Illinois, was a Chicago visitor recently, looking them over. From all appearances business is good in the city bearing the name of the choicest vintage of the past.

R. H. HATFIELD, who opened the first picture theatre in Superior, Wisconsin, spent a few days in Chicago, announcing that the call of the Celluloid has gotten a hold of him again, consequently he is remodeling the old Grand Opera House at Superior, putting several hundred dollars worth of improvements into the building and will open on the 5th of October with high-class pictures.

C. C. SMITH reports business great at the Opera House at Hoopeston, Illinois. Capacity houses at every performance.

E. M. VENNUM opened his new house, the Okow, at Findlay, Illinois, on September 1. He reports business good.

JOSEPH J. RANSOM, Royal theatre, Palestine, Illinois, was a city visitor buying service for the fall season, looking happy and prosperous.

J. H. DALES, Star theatre, Oregon, Illinois, was a Chicago visitor, as well as F. G. Rohrer, Family theatre, Dixon, Illinois.

THE Armory theatre, Ridgefarm, Illinois, managed by Miss Naomi Lane, opens the season September 6 with First National attractions exclusively. Miss Lane has the reputation of being one of the up-to-the-minute managers in Illinois.

FATHER HOGBEN of the Lyceum theatre, Chenoa was in town booking pictures for his theatre. This is not a Church Amusement

CHARLES DANZINGER, owner of the General Film Brokers, died following an operation at St. Luke's Hospital, September 1. Mr. Danzinger, who was seventy years old, had been in the moving picture business for the last fourteen years. He remembered the days when Joe Hopp, Salo Aurback, Harry Weiss, Max Lewis and several other film men were under one roof doing business as the Chicago Film Exchange. The body was shipped to Boston for burial. Mr. Danzinger was the father of Charlotte Ives, well known picture actress. Harry Weiss of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange has been appointed administrator for his estate.

R. C. SEERY of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, spent a few days in Bloomington, Illinois, signing contracts. Since his return one hears nothing but the beauties of Bloomington. What a difference a bunch of contracts make in the looks of a town.

Universal Picture Opens in Chicago

THE exclusive showing of the Universal's production, "The Right to Happiness," featuring Dorothy Phillips, which took place at Orchestra Hall, Thursday, September 4, in Chicago, was a big success, the spacious theatre being filled to its capacity. Everyone entering the house was given a card upon which to express their opinion of the picture, the returning of which in vast numbers by the audience on leaving the theatre, was not only gratifying to the Universal management, but proved conclusively that the picture would meet with immediate public favor, as many of the cards were signed by people interested in matters along educational lines, and will appeal to the thinking public as attested by the following signed opinions.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

THE Scenic theatre at Waupun, presented Frank Keenan in "The Midnight Stage" on Thursday, August 28. This was followed on Saturday, August 30, by Hale Hamilton in "Johnny on the Spot," and on Sunday, August 31 by Bessie Barriscale in "The White Lie." On Tuesday, September 2, Harry Morey was seen in "Fighting Destiny," followed on Wednesday by Tom Mix in "Hell Roaring Reform" and a Mutt and Jeff comedy. On Thursday, September 4, the Scenic presented Frank Keenan in "The Bells," together with news pictures. Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" is one of the coming attractions at the Scenic.

LYMAN H. HOWE'S pictures were shown to a big audience at the Davison theatre, Waupun, Friday night, August 29. On Saturday, August 30, the Davison offering consisted of Dorothy Dalton in "Hard Boiled" and a Sunshine comedy. This was followed on Sunday by Alice Brady in "The Death Dance." Monday, September 1, the offering was Ethel Clayton in "Pettigrew's Girl" and a Capital comedy, "Dad's Knockout." On Wednesday, September 3, Madge Kennedy was seen in "A Perfect Lady."

FOND DU LAC moving picture houses gave the Wisconsin campaign for the soldiers' bonus law a big boost by the use of their screens as well as by taking on four-minute speakers who explained just why Wisconsin people should back up the soldiers in this substantial way. There is reason to believe that the moving picture houses thus contributed in no small way to the success of the referendum vote by which every Wisconsin soldier, sailor and marine will receive a bonus of $10 a month for his entire period of service.

THE Bijou theatre made the opening week in September strictly a Paramount week, thus cooperating with the national plan. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Elsie Ferguson won new friends in "A Society Exile," the picture going over exceedingly well and drawing packed houses. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday Charles Ray was seen in "Bill Henry." This picture was well received and drew good business.

ROBERT WARWICK in "Secret Service" drew fine business at the Orpheum Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 1, 2 and 3. Tom Mix in his latest picture, "The Wilderness Trail," was the program for the following three days, the picture going over fine and literally standing them up.

THEDA BARA in "When Men Desire," was the attraction at the Idea Wednesday, September 3 and Thursday, September 4, drawing record business on both dates. This was followed on Friday and Saturday by Wm. Desmond in "The Mints of Hell." Viola Dana was seen at the Idea Monday and Tuesday, September 8 and 9, in "The Microbes."

Gathered in Green Bay

DOROTHY GISH pleased audiences in the Colonial theatre September 5-6, when she played in the Paramount comedy, "I'll Get Him Yet."

"FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE," an Artcraft picture in which Gloria Swanson and Tom Forman are featured, was produced in the Grand theatre September 1-2-3.

MARY MILES MINTER was seen in the American Film Company production, "A Bachelor's Wife," September 2-3, in the New Bijou theatre.

DOROTHY DALTON played in the Paramount film, "Love Me," in the Orpheum theatre September 4-5-6-7.

"THE ACE OF THE SADDLE," with Harry Carey in the leading role, was shown September 1-2 in the New Bijou theatre. A Sunshine comedy, "His Musical Sneeze," was given on the same program.

JACK PICKFORD appeared in the Colonial theatre September 3-4 in the First National film, "Bill Apperson's Boy."

"DAUGHTER OF THE WOLF," a Paramount film, was screened September 1-2 in the Colonial theatre, Lila Lee was seen in the lead.

"LIFE'S A FUNNY PROPOSITION," a Mutual picture, was shown August 31 in the Colonial theatre. William Desmond played in the leading role.

VIVIAN MARTIN was seen in "Sunshine Nan," a Paramount film, in the Orpheum theatre September 1.

MRS. CHARLIE CHAPLIN played in the Jewel production, "Forbidden," September 5-6 in the New Bijou theatre.

"GETTING MARY MARRIED," with Marion Davis in the lead, was screened September 4-5-6-7 in the Grand theatre.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

EVELYN NESBIT came back to the Princess theatre in "My Little Sister" on August 27 and 28. This picture proved as popular as all of Miss Nesbit's previous pictures and was well attended by her special admirers. A Pathe Review was also shown.

THE Thursday, August 28, feature at the Dreamland theatre was "The Love Hunger" starring Lillian Walker. This picture, adapted from the novel "Fran," proved to be a fitting vehicle for Miss Walker's talent, and pleased all who witnessed it.

"MUGGSY" starring Jackie Saunders, was shown at the Star theatre on Wednesday, August 27, to appreciative audiences. Miss Saunders is very well liked at the Star, in fact, she is one of that theatre's best feminine drawing cards. Besides the feature a Tom Mix western was shown.

THE Liberty theatre presented May Allison in "The Return of Mary," an adaptation of the play by Hale Hamilton, on Wednesday, August 27. A Harold Lloyd comedy completed the bill.

"HER MISTAKE" with Evelyn Nesbit, was the Wednesday, August 27, feature at the Dreamland theatre. In advertising the picture, Manager Boyle played up her son, Russell Thaw, to a considerable extent.

THAT Earle Williams and Anita Stewart are two of the most popular of the screen players, with the people of the Family theatre, was proved on Thursday and Friday, August 28 and 29 when "Two Women," an old Vitagraph production, was presented at the Family. This play had been shown at the Princess theatre just two weeks previous, but when it came to the Family, it drew first rate houses. Besides drawing well, it entirely satisfied the Family's fans.

MOTION pictures were not shown at the Grand on Thursday and Friday, August 28 and 29, for on Thursday a wrestling match was staged and on Friday "Fair and Warmer" a traveling attraction, held the boards. On Saturday an episode of "Perils of Thunder Mountain" and a comedy was shown, as usual.

"ACE HIGH" with Pete Morrison, was the feature of the Thursday, August 28, program at the Star theatre. A Billy West comedy completed the bill.

FASCINATING Madge Kennedy was featured at the Princess theatre on Friday and Saturday, August 29 and 30, in "Daughter of Mine," an original, highly entertaining Goldwyn production. Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels were seen in a comedy.

JUNE ELVIDGE was starred in "The Moral Deadline" at the Dreamland theatre on Friday and Saturday, August 29 and 30. Miss Elvidge gained popularity in Dubuque as co-star with Carlyle Blackwell and her career as a star is being watched with interest. Besides this feature a Screen Supplement was shown. The featured players were William Hart, Helen Holmes, Charles Ray, Bessie Love, Cleo Ridgeley and Ben Turpin.

"THE PETTICOAT PILOT," featuring Vivian Martin, and adapted from the novel "Mary 'Gusta" by Joseph Lincoln, was shown at the Family theatre on Saturday, August 30, in conjunction with a western play starring Eddie Polo. This program drew large houses to the Family at all the evening shows.

The West Coast

San Francisco News

"THE GIRL FROM OUTSIDE," by Rex Beach, will be given its premier at the Tivoli theatre September 14. It is the first of the Goldwyn "Fewer and Better" picture series. It has been extensively booked in this territory, all the key towns and many smaller ones having already been signed up.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for the first run of "Upstairs and Down," featuring Olive Thomas, at the Portola September 14. "The Perfect Lover," featuring Eugene O'Brien, is booked at the same theatre for September 21. Mr. Knappen says that "preliminary barrage for the heavier barrage of exploitation and publicity of Select pictures is now being laid down." He cites the presence of David Swing Ricker, who recently came down from Seattle to start the publicity campaign. Mr. Ricker has just completed his campaign in that city and will open at the Coleseum theatre in Seattle on September 6 with the new Select circles. In this city he plans to hold marathon races with up-stairs and down hurdles. A fox trot contest will be given at the Auditorium to compete for the Olive Thomas trophy cup, and the San Francisco fire department will feature a sensational run down Market to the door of the theatre. Shapely swimming girls will also compete for an Olive Thomas cup in aquatic sports and other features to attract attention are being prepared. The exchange has closed with all the key cities for the entire new series.

THE UNIVERSAL is largely represented in San Francisco at present from the production end. Elmo Lincoln has just concluded ten days work here taking bay scenes for the "Beachcomber." Allen Holubar, director of Dorothy Phillips, and sixty people are at work at Pleasanton, across the bay, on Miss Phillips' newest picture, "Ambition." Sessue Hayakawa's wife, Tsuri Aoki, is making a Japanese superpicture called "The Breath of the Gods" at the Tea Garden in Golden Gate Park. This is to be her first Universal release.

SOL L. LESSER has acquired the rights for Max Sennett's "Mickey" for the state of New Mexico. It is intended to have a road show and advance men will soon start through the territory to arrange the tour and advertise the show. Mr. Lesser handled "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and "Hearts of the World" in New Mexico and is familiar with the territory.

THE All-Star Feature Distributing Co. has acquired the rights of Charlie Chaplin in "Some Nerve." This formerly went under the name of "The Gentleman of Nerve" and is considered one of Chaplin's greatest successes. The company has also secured the rights of twelve Fatty Arbuckle single reel Keystone subjects, which will be booked on franchise basis.

MR. LESSER is expected to return to the Coast after an absence of five and one-half months, during which time he piloted the destinies of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." This picture was sold in every State in the Union.

F. W. TALBERT, auditor of the Universal in the Western Division, is spending a week's vacation in Portland prior to making a foreign tour.

W. W. KOFELDT, who was recently discharged from the army, has become affiliated with the Pathe in this city. He is not a new man in the service as before entering the army he was branch manager for Pathe at Minneapolis. Manager Henrioulle feels that he has a very efficient man in Kofeldt.

SID MARTINSTEIN, formerly of the Fairyland theatre, one of the resident district theatres of this city, has turned over the management of the theatre to his father and made connections with the Goldwyn Exchange.

THE STAR THEATRE, at Los Banos, originally opened by M. G. Stites, has changed hands and will be known as the Victory theatre. The new owner is Mr. Toscano, of the Los Banos bank.

What They Say in Seattle

BOOKKEEPER and Booker Bishop Bishop has resigned from the local Metro office and will return to his position with the Novia Scotia Bank in Vancouver, B. C.

CARL MAHNE, shipping for H. A. Johnson, broke his arm while working. It is expected he will be back to work in a few weeks, and will be given lighter work to do.

RAY KELSALL, manager for H. A. Johnson, is on the road and no one can complain, not even himself, of the orders he is sending in for new machines, etc.

A. D. LONGMORE, organist specialist with the Rose Musical Co., has recently installed an $18,000 Kimball organ for Capt. Lathrop's famous movie house, the Empress, in Valdez, Alaska. While in Alaska he remodelled other musical instruments up there.

H. J. SHEEHAN, district manager for Fox, was a recent visitor in Seattle and left for San Francisco after he saw how well things were going in the Northwest.

HUGH RENNIE, Northwest manager for Select, has announced that he has signed with Jensen and Von Herberg all the Selznick-Select stars for all their eighteen houses, which include the seven in Portland, the four in Seattle, the others in Butte, Tacoma, and in Medford, Ore. The plays that have been selected for immediate playing dates are: "Upstairs and Down," the first release of Olive Thomas; "The Perfect Lover," the first Eugene O'Brien release, and "The Country Lover," the first Elain Hammerstein release. Early dates have been secured on all of Owen Moore's releases.

OLIVE THOMAS in "Upstairs and Down," will play in the Coliseum, Seattle, September 6; Eugene O'Brien will play in "The Perfect Lover" at the Liberty, Seattle, September 13.

DAVID SWING RICKER, head of the Selznick-Select exploitation department for the Pacific Coast, was a recent visitor in Seattle for exploitation work. He came with his assistant, Leigh D. Bruckart, who will leave for Portland, Ore., Tacoma, Spokane, Butte and other cities for exploitation.

GEORGE H. CHRISTOFFERS, who covers Montana for Select, has written to Mr. Rennie that he has sold practically to every town he has been. A. B. Know, who covers the state of Washington for the same concern has come back with great success.

HUGH RENNIE, Northwest manager for Select and Selznick pictures, has gone to Spokane to close some first runs in that city. It has always been Rennie's policy to visit every exhibitor with which his office does business.

Co-operation in San Francisco Exchanges

DURING the two or three days' tie-up of the railroads out of San Francisco, due to a strike of the railroad men, the local exchanges got together, with one or two exceptions, and sent their films out by motor trucks to Fresno, Sacramento and Stockton and arranged temporary sub-exchanges in those cities where the managers of theatres within a radius of fifty miles or so called for their pictures. The exchanges not going into the plan operated their individual truck service, and in this way there were very few dark houses during the tie-up. It is the first time that there has been such helpful co-operation and it is stated that even in the cases of bitter rivals among exhibitors there was no attempt to harm "the other fellow" through the exigencies of the conditions.

theatre; George F. Sharp, manager of Liberty. The films were taken to the basement of the Liberty theatre and were thence distributed throughout the San Joaquin valley. This particular truck load was brought in by Mike Zar of the United and Huff of Vitagraph. Together they represented most of the S. F. Exchanges in Fresno. E. T. Wakefield of the Universal drove one of the film trucks to Fresno during the trouble and it is reported that he made the best time of any that made the trip, arriving fully three-quarters of an hour before he was expected.

During the tie-up W. W. Kofeldt of Pathe acted as distributor for the exchanges at Sacramento, and Mell Hulling of Pathe at Sacramento.

Short Notes from San Diego

FOLLOWING a preview of "The Miracle Man" at the Plaza, to which the newspapermen and a number of others were invited, the house management used a large amount of display advertising, with which was incorporated the criticisms from the papers. The picture has been drawing big crowds during its week's showing.

CATHERINE CURTIS, general manager of the new Catherine Curtis Photoplay company, stopped off for a day here while en route from Los Angeles to Needles, Cal., by airplane, where she planned to get her brother-in-law, Garrett S. Veeder, of New York, and take him back to Los Angeles. She was travelling in a machine owned by the Chaplin Aircraft Company.

ATTEMPTING to take a picture of the big crowd at the opening night of "The Miracle Man" at the Plaza, the photographer set off about $20 worth of flashlight powder and then had to announce to the audience that he had failed to open the shutter of his camera and that he had no more powder with him. But for that little piece of oversight he believes that he would have had the feature photo of the season.

MANAGER HICKS, of the Cabrillo, has announced a new schedule of admission which brings the prices to 25 and 35 cents, including war tax. The first picture under the new rates was "The Witness for the Defense," featuring Elsie Ferguson.

HEALTH officials have started a movement to compel some of the smaller houses, which they claim are now poorly ventilated, to install modern equipment to give their patrons more wholesome air. This action would probably effect about three houses.

LOUISE GLAUM in "Sahara," advertised by the management of the Superba as "one of the best big specials of the year," proved a good card at that house for a week's showing.

"JACQUES OF THE SILVER NORTH" came to the Broadway for a week and was well received.

HIPPODROME patrons for the week enjoyed Emmy Wehlen in "A Favor to a Friend," the motion picture number on the vaudeville program at that house.

THEDA BARA in "A Woman There Was," the week's attraction at the Pickwick, has drawn good houses, the management report.

MARJORIE BENNETT, sister of Enid Bennett, well known in the film world, is playing stock with the Virginia Brissac company at the Strand theatre.

THE CASINO, one of the 10-cent houses, is giving a daily change of program ordinarily, but for the second showing here of Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," which first appeared here at the Plaza, it was given for two days.

HOUSE MANAGER W. E. JONES, of the Superba, upon the week's showing of George Beban's "The Hearts of Men" used very elaborately for lobby decorations large hearts cut from red card-board, as well as a liberal number of cut-outs of Beban in the Italian character. The house reported unusually heavy patronage during the week, Mr. Beban's personal appearance each evening being an added attraction.

MAE MARSH in "Spotlight Sadie" proved a good drawing card at the Broadway, House Manager Black reports.

MANAGER AHRENS, of the Isis theatre, has discontinued pictures and has reopened the house to road shows.

THE family auto of W. E. Hicks, proprietor and manager of the Cabrillo, was badly damaged recently when it and a fire department truck tried to occupy the same place at the same time. Mrs. Hicks was at the wheel but escaped injury, almost miraculously.

PRISCILLA DEAN in "The Silk-Lined Burglar," showing at the Pickwick, has had good houses for the week's engagement.

Salt Lake and Vicinity

BRUCE SIMPSON, formerly salesman for Vitagraph exchange in Idaho territory, has resigned to take charge of the management of the Orpheum theatre in Blackfoot, Idaho. H. A. Black, salesman for Vitagraph, is breaking records in Montana in securing contracts.

L. E. KENNEDY, the new manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Salt Lake, has engaged J. J. Ryan as salesman for Idaho and Wyoming territory. T. W. Chatburn, assistant general manager, was in Salt Lake last week on a tour of inspection.

"THE WESTERNERS" had its first review showing September 2 in the Isis theatre. All the theatre managers in Salt Lake were invited and the picture was pronounced a wonderful production.

H. JUNES was in Salt Lake last week making arrangements for the construction of a new moving picture house in Moab, Utah. It will seat 600 people. According to Mr. Junes, a company has been formed to build four other houses in Southern Utah towns. Electric light plants and other construction work is contemplated in connection with the erection of the new houses.

D. H. FARQUAHAR has been engaged as salesman for the Idaho territory of Triangle films. He was formerly an exhibitor in Beaver, Utah, but gave up his business to fight the Germans in France. He returned to the United States a few weeks ago.

Paramount-Artcraft Week Scores on the Coast

IN preparation for its exploitations of Paramount-Artcraft week, beginning August 31, Harry Ballance, Los Angeles manager of that organization, maintained for several days preceding that date, nightly auto truck service to Needles, California, where connections were made with automobiles for various Arizona points, through which Paramount-Artcraft subjects were supplied to Arizona exhibitors for the week. The special service was the result of the recent railroad tie-up.

Locally, Paramount-Artcraft subjects swept Los Angeles, for of the thirty down-town houses, twenty of these booked subjects bearing the name of that organization.

Three of the principal down-town houses each carried Paramount-Artcraft features. At Grauman's, Enid Bennett, in "The Virtuous Thief," and the Fatty Arbuckle comedy, "Back Stage," were billed. The California showed W. S. Hart in "Wagon Tracks," and at the Kinema, "The Miracle Man," the George Loane Tucker special production, was exhibited.

In addition to these, at Clune's Broadway Wallace Reid was seen in "The Valley of Giants." The Victory had Bryant Washburn in "A Very Good Young Man." The Alhambra ran Ethel Clayton in "Men, Women, and Money."

Strike Causes Change in Bookings

WITH the resumption of railroad service through Southern California and Arizona after a week of confusion, resulting from a strike which stopped all railroad shipment of films, motion picture distributors of Los Angeles territory began, during the week of September 1, to readjust their booking schedules, and bring order out of the disorganized conditions which resulted from the emergency situation.

In many cases, especially in Arizona, where the emergency auto truck service of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade could not be operated, exhibitors, in order to keep from closing their houses, "swapped" pictures among themselves pending the time when scheduled booking could be resumed. In other cases, telegraphic instructions which had been sent for the transfer of exhibits from one house to another, miscarried. As a consequence, distribution executives are finding it necessary to employ special efforts in rearranging their schedules and locating film temporarily sidetracked.

With the prime object, however, of meeting the needs of the exhibitors and preventing dark houses throughout their territory, the Board of Trade succeeded on the whole in meeting the emergency with efficiency and satisfactory service; as a result of which, many expressions of appreciation have been received from out-of-town exhibitors in the district.

American Orchestra Increases

THE American theatre orchestra in Salt Lake City has been enlarged to thirty pieces and may be increased to fifty if the appreciation of the audience warrants the change, according to the management. Ted Henkel is director and Ollie Smith associate director. Large oil paintings have been inserted about the orchestra pit and the effect is very striking. Labor Day broke all records for attendance at the American theatre and the history of the show house has never shown such crowds as lined up before each performance.

Here and There on the Coast

REFLECTION of the present activities in the construction and alteration of motion picture houses in Southern California is shown in recent installations of equipment by J. Slipper and Company. Among these is the purchase by J. D. Johnson, Lyric theatre, Jerome, Arizona, a double seventy-five Herkner Transverter and a Minusa gold fibre screen. In addition, sales were made by J. Slipper of Simplex Projection machines to the Astra and Henry Lehrmann studios.

CONSTRUCTION has been begun at Santa Paula of a theatre seating 1200, which is to be named "The Electra." H. Bamgarten is the owner.

"THE TEMPLE" theatre at San Bernardino, under the ownership of J. D. Knapp, is receiving alterations and improvements which are expected to cost in the neighborhood of $12,000. The house will be extended to the rear for about twenty feet and an entire new front will be built to the structure. Room will be provided for about 200 more seats.

H. W. STUBBINS, Los Angeles, manager of the M. and R. Exchange, has received the print of "Virtuous Men," which that exchange is preparing to exploit in this territory. Another special feature to be handled, is the six-reel picture, "Royalty," starring Betty Bryce.

AT a special preview arranged by Field Carmichael, Los Angeles, manager of the Pathe Exchange, the special Pathe release of "The World Aflame," the Frank Keenan picture, was shown to labor organization officials and various representatives of civic organizations for their criticism. According to C. L. Myers, secretary of the Central Labor Council, the picture received the indorsement of organizations affiliated with the Council.

ESTABLISHMENT of a complete system of editors and cameramen for the entire west coast has been arranged for the production of the new Fox weekly and novelty release, according to B. E. Loper, manager of the Los Angeles Branch. The Weekly, Mr. Loper stated, will be of more varied interest than those at present on the market, and in addition to matters of national interest, will include subjects of special importance on the Pacific coast.

AFTER having been dark for a considerable time, the Garden theatre, a down-town Los Angeles house, opened the week of August 30th for the Fall season, beginning its programme with an eight-day run of "The Spreading Evil" which was placed there by the Los Angeles branch of The All-Star Feature Distributing Corporation.

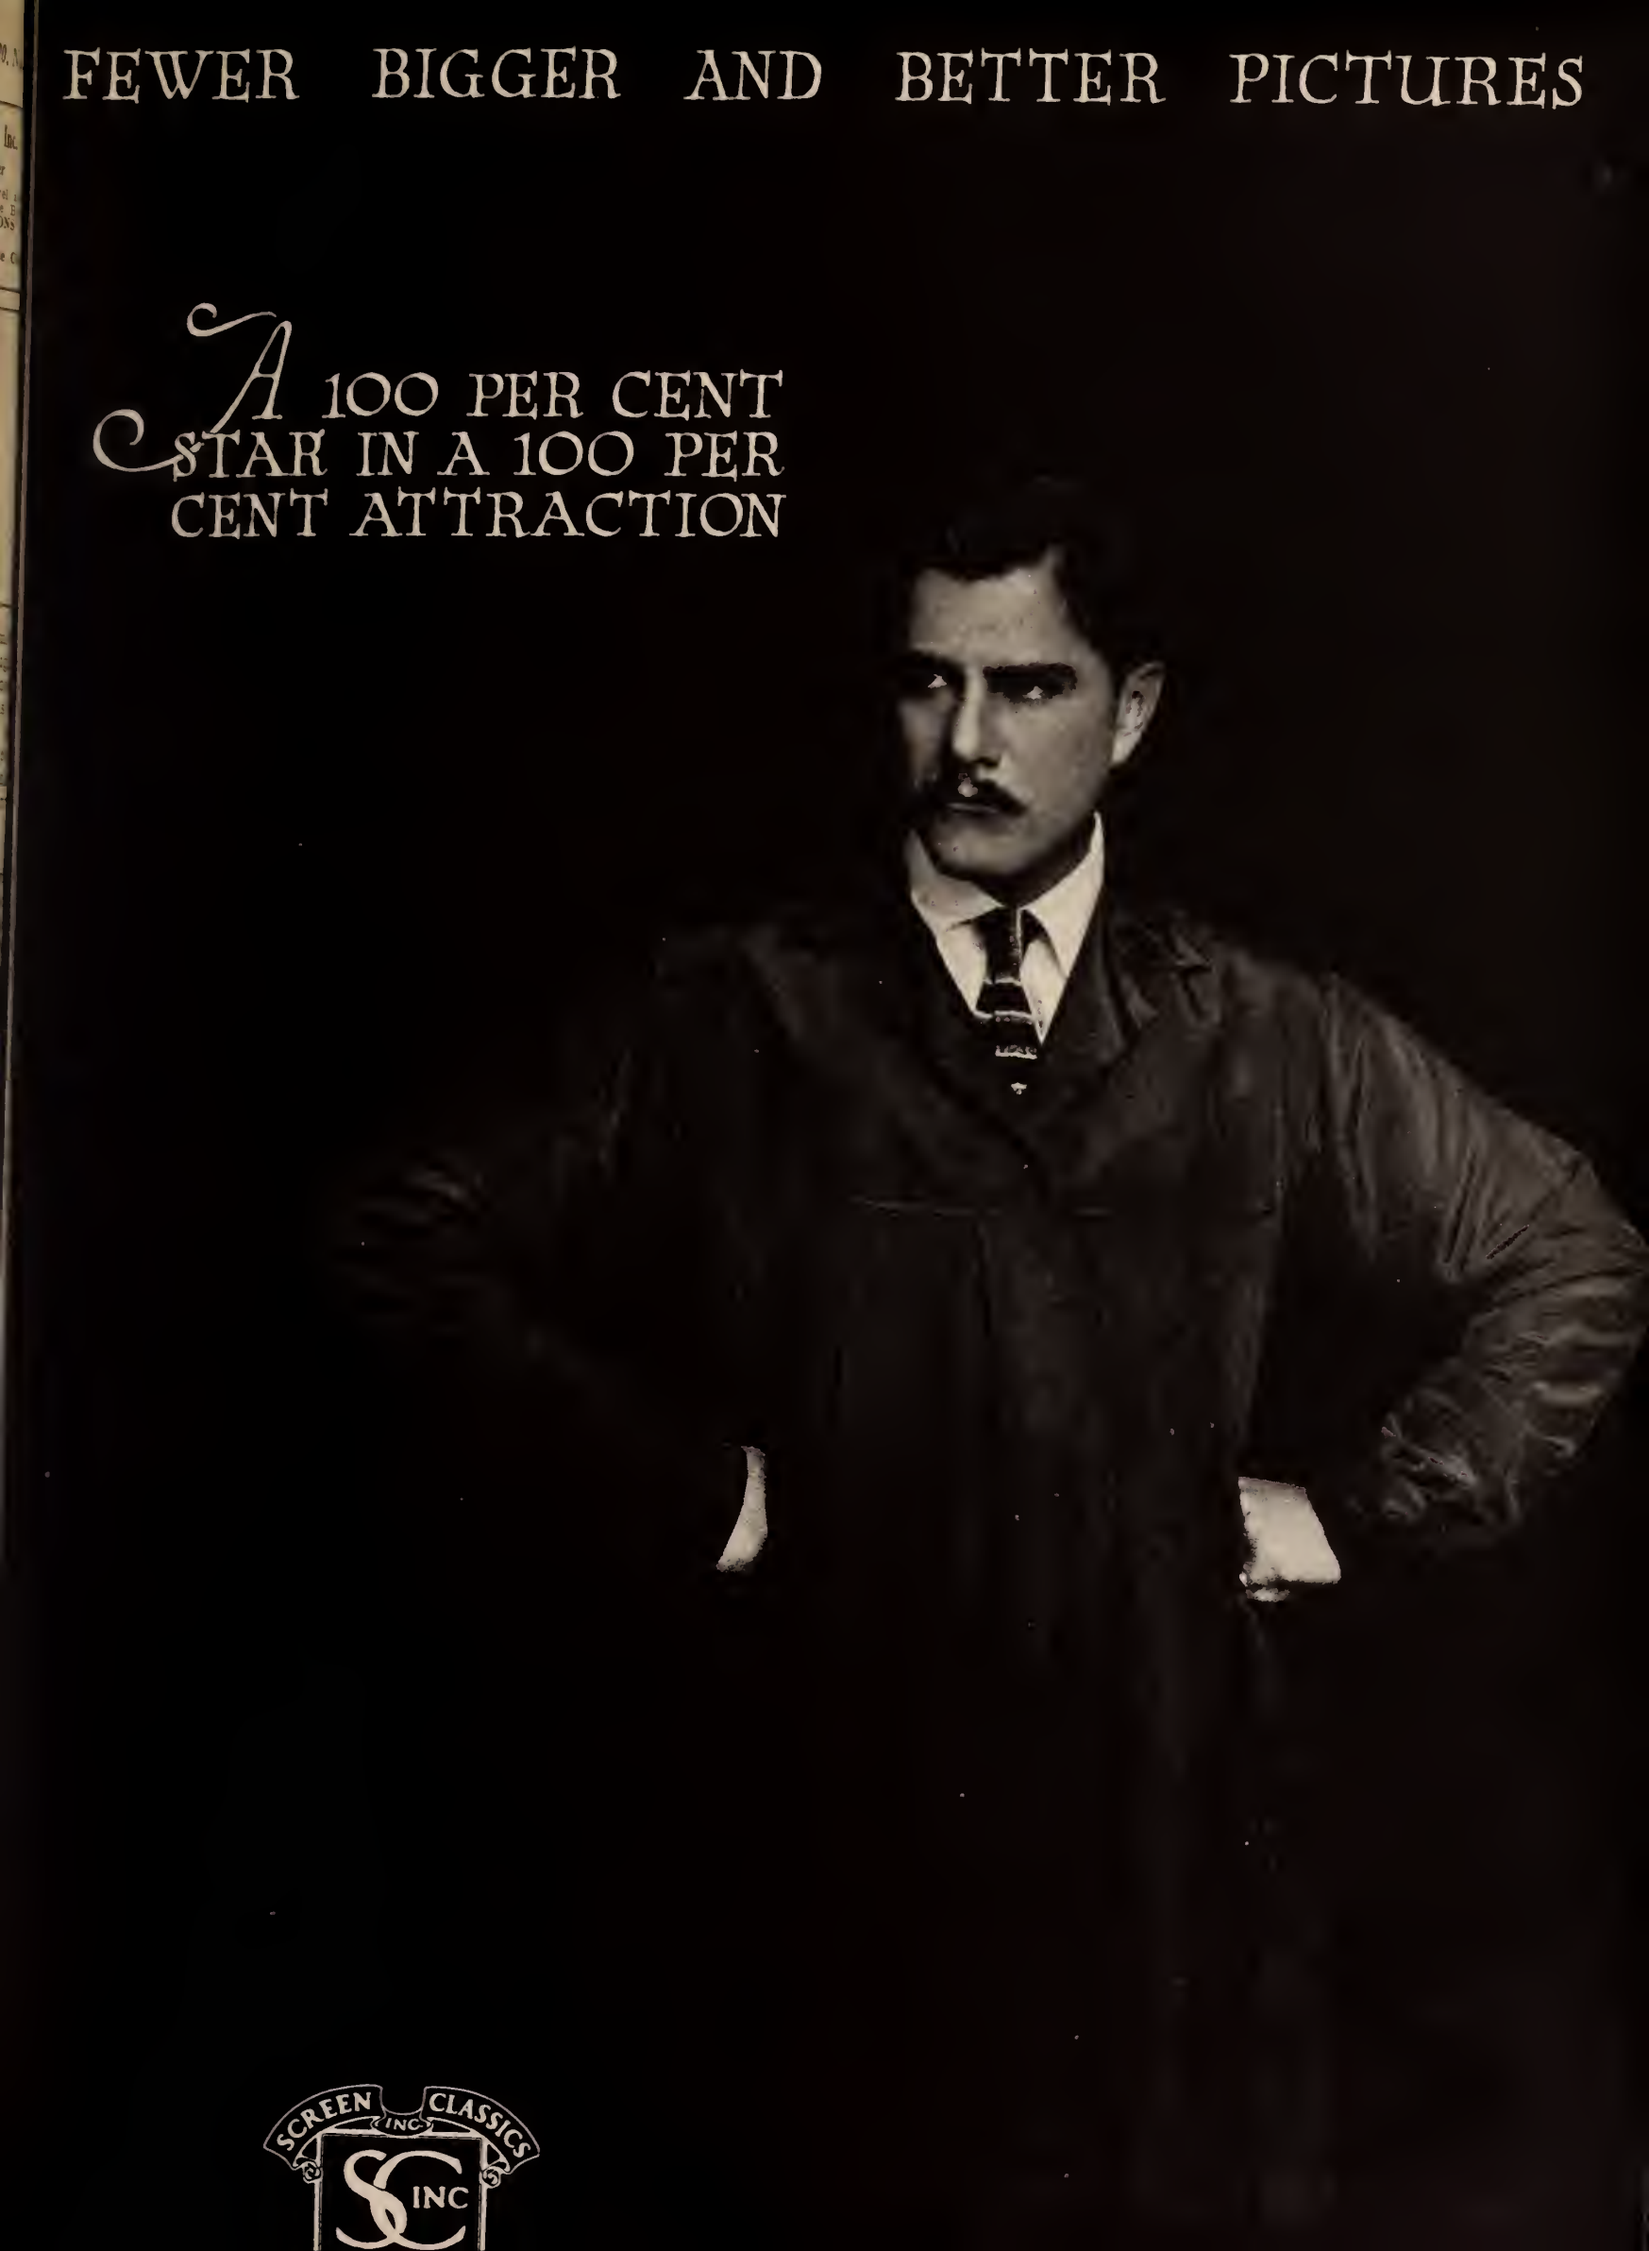
M. D. HOWELL, special representative in advance for Sol Lesser in exploitation of Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," has returned to Los Angeles, after having been on the road with the Sennett picture as far east as Cincinnati. He is making his headquarters at the local office of the All-Star Feature Distributing Corporation.

IN order to meet the emergency caused by the railroad strike in Southern California and Arizona, David Bershon, manager of the Universal Exchange, sent a truckload of Universal Subjects to Arizona during the week of August 25th. Accompanying the truck were Earl Sinks, Arizona salesman for the Universal, and a special cameraman, who filmed the incidents of the unusual trip across the desert.

A. B. LAMB, local manager of Metro forces, is authority for the statement that "The Brat," the Nazimova feature which had its premie at the California theatre the week of Augu 25th, broke all records for sales at that hous Crowds awaiting entrance were conspicuous during the week. Partly as a result of the e ceptional showing made by "The Brat," Met has closed more than 70 per cent of its sal of forth-coming releases in the California ter tory.

THE Hippodrome at Long Beach, Californi which has been playing vaudeville and music comedy, has been transformed into a motic picture theatre seating about 700, under th management of Messrs. White and Freshwate

ROY BOUGIE has sold the Crown theatre Sawtelle, California, to William M. Hill.



THE Navarro theatre, West Pico Street, Lo Angeles, with a seating capacity of 600, has bee reopened by Managers Darmody and Duffiel with a programme of Paramount-Artcraft r leases.

Intimate Items About People You Know

NOW that the vacation season is over and fishing, loafing and other summer sports are tabooed for the manufacturer, we should begin to hear plenty of talk about new devices, wonderful improvements and so forth, ad infinitum.

Just as if the advertising columns are ever lacking in such material.

What did we think of the Strand? Several things. Most of them complimentary, but a few—just a few—criticisms. They won't be mentioned here at this time, but will appear later in the editorial columns. Lou Hammond is to be congratulated on his pictures, considering the fact that it was the opening night, together with some of the handicaps he was working under.

Just a word from Bill Kunzmann, lobbying in Washington, D. C., for the National Carbon Co., in the interests of Projection. Bill is hoping great hopes that the industry's greatest globe-trotter, Will Smith, of the Nicholas Power Co., will regale the coming meeting of the S. M. P. E. with a breezy, snappy account of "Things as they be in old Paree."

We had a chance the other day to see a demonstration of another portable suit-case-type projecting machine. This one was slightly different from the others in that the intermittent movement was a distinct departure from all others. There was no intermittent sprocket, the movement of the film being carried out by a sort of rotary shutter which made no use of the perforations. Screen results were very satisfactory.

Charlie Pyle, formerly with the Barnes Organ, is going great guns with his new interchangeable sign systems.

Frank Netchert's fall catalog of floral novelties for theatre decoration is now being distributed.

Sam Weinstein of Menger, Ring Weinstein has returned after a long trip on the road in the interest of the firm.

Perhaps it doesn't look like a big season for Chas F. Campbell! Hendrickson of that company has just obtained a contract to do the electrical work in fourteen Moss theatres which are being altered and refurnished.

Last Week We Met—Watterson Rothacker

HE stops at the Biltmore when he comes to Manhattan Town, which is quite often. For "Watty" besides being a real humdinger in the laboratory game is also some traveler. No convention of film men is complete unless Rothacker is present.

It is a difficult matter to get the life story of a man of W. R. Rothacker's type in a space the size allotted. There are too many traits to mention and too many interesting anecdotes to reveal. But here's the best that can be done.

Rothacker's trip from a nonentity to a man of affairs in the motion picture industry has consumed but slightly over ten years. And consider, too, that his last birthday cake had but thirty-four candles. He's one of the youngest in the business and one of the most successful.

Long years ago as measured by accomplishments Watterson Rothacker was one of the mainstays on one of the best "elevens" that Lewis Technical School ever put out. He was a glutton for work, even as he is now. Judging, too, from present performances we imagine he was considerable of an expert at keeping the helmeted gladiator opposite him guessing what he was going to do next.

But college days have a way of ending. Then what? For Rothacker it meant a period of real work in getting out a small-town sheet in a still smaller town in Idaho. Evidently he ran the newspaper as a purely philanthropic proposition for he also tells of the time when he man-handled freight at night after the paper was printed.

A few years went by and Rothacker drifted back to Chicago and to the office of BILLBOARD which he managed for several years. But his position here was too confining to a man with so many ideas.

He felt the necessity of getting out "on his own" and having a chance to try out some of his schemes. He looked over the field like a general and then decided on the filming and developing. At that time the independent laboratory was not much in evidence. Rothacker believed by collecting the right organization and installing the latest and best equipment the work which the independent laboratory turned out should more than equal the product of the "labs" owned by producing companies. Accordingly he searched for exports in every process encountered in laboratory routine and soon had collected an aggregation that couldn't be beat for results.

There is little of the attitude of the "boss" about Rothacker in his relations with his assistants. As proof of this we would advise you not to attempt to see him at his Chicago laboratory direct after the lunch hour. It is more than likely that he would be found at the country club or in a secluded grill surrounded by his staff, talking—not golf, or horses, of which Rothacker has a fine string—but of office routine, laboratory results and other topics which might arise in the minds of Rothacker and his helpers.

It is said from various sources that Rothacker has several aces up his sleeve that are awaiting for a chance to be played. This is one of the principal reasons for his success at an age when most other men are just beginning—he is always creating. Not satisfied with inaugurating laboratory service that astonished experts he has gone into the producing game quite extensively, complete studio facilities having been installed for such purposes in Chicago. Then he has completed valuable research work in the color processes, with a view to the further standardization of laboratory work.

So you see, he must be pretty busy most of the time, with his laboratory, studio, traveling and research work. But he doesn't show it. Moreover, he is a hail fellow well met and hasn't found it necessary as yet to pull any of this "Too busy to see you" stuff.

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Transformer Troubles

AS we are going to get some new equipment, I am enclosing a blank cut from one of your magazines.

I am aperating two Simplexes, taking the current through a Hallberg Economizer and a Fort Wayne Compensarc, which I have wired in series-multiple. Yesterday after a fuse was blown I found that the Hallberg was very badly shorted in both coils and it looked as if the insulation had been all burned off. The transformers are about ten or twelve years old and I thought that was the reason the insulation was burned off, but an electrician told me that the transformers should not be wired as I have them. Is this true?

What is wrong with the motor when it will not start, but if given a slight twist in either direction it will run that way?

Yours truly,

(Sgned) RALPH V. PLEW.

P. O.: I have been using the transformers as stated above for the last eight months. If they should not be wired as I have them, how long would the coils last? If they would last a few months I would rather buy new ones myself rather than run on one transformer.

Comment: Transformer connections and the results from mis-connections would comprise a book if an attempt were made to discuss them thoroughly. In a case such as Mr. Plew described in his letter above, a thoroughly satisfactory and a complete answer could be given only by examining the burned out coils. Our theory of the cause of his trouble is formed by studying the situation at long distance and with insufficient data to work with.

We believe we are safe in saying that a Fort Wayne Compensarc and a Hallberg Economizer were never designed to be used in double harness, as Mr. Plew has used them. To explain why, it will be necessary to go back a little ways.

Both compensarc and economizer are really transformers and therefore have the characteristics of transformers. Now, in the first place two transformers should never be connected in parallel (or multiple) unless they are of the same design, by the same maker, of the same capacity and having the same characteristics.

If two devices which disagree in one or more of the particulars just mentioned are hooked up in parallel there is apt to be trouble with one of the transformers at least. Transformers in parallel divide the load in proportion to their capacities. But if their capacities are alike other factors enter which may work toward the destruction of one transformer. For instance, if the iron in one device is better suited for cores than the iron used to manufacture the other, then the latter will fall down in operation.

In your case, it is evident that you have been operating the transformers for some time with the same connections and without blowing fuses. It appears then that the trouble which finally caused a short circuit was a long time working itself out.

Although only a personal examination of the burned out economizer could tell exactly what happened, it is probable that the difference in charteristics between compensarc and economizer caused a circulating current to flow through the latter which overloaded it and finally burned it out.

If transformers are properly connected and used with judgment, age should not prove much of a detriment. There are transformers of large capacity that have been operating twenty-four hours a day for twenty years and still going. Your electrician was correct in saying your connections were wrong, but he should have gone further and explained why. Other readers should take note of your difficulty and hereafter make sure that a compensarc and economizer are never connected for team-work. Get two compensarcs or two economizers but never fifty-fifty.

Don't think that because your economizer lasted eight months this time the next one will duplicate its performance. It may last eight years or eight days, depending on circumstances. Put the cost of new coils into part payment for another compensarc and take no chances with a hitch up.

Answering your question concerning a motor, high mica between commutator segments is the most usual cause of such trouble as you mentioned. The mica, being higher than the copper bars, holds the brushes off the surface of the commutator, thereby preventing the flow of current from line to motor coils.

What Is Voltage and Amperage

HERE comes a man, League Member No. 1063, with a request for an article on the distinction between Voltage and Amperage. His request shall be granted and it is hoped that he understands it, because a description of these two much used terms expressed is simple language is like trying to answer the question, "What is Something and Why?"

The old reliable comparison between electricity and water may be the best. Current (or amperage) coresponds to the amount of water flowing through a pipe or in a river. Voltage corresponds to the pressure of the water or the velocity of the stream.

When you refer to current you mean that you have so much electricity in volume; a reference to voltage intimates that the electricity in question is under more or less force or pressure.

Speaking now in terms of definitions: An electric current is the flow of electricity brought about when a charge is communicated from one point to another. Current is measured in amperes. An ampere is really equal to 1-10 of the current which, flowing in a circular coil of one centimeter (.393 of an inch) will act on a unit magnet pole at its center with a force of one dyne for every centimeter of wire in the coil.

But you are not advised to learn that definition as its application will do you little good. If you remember that current is quanity of electric charges that will be sufficient.

As regards voltage and the "Volt" there is a definition (and the technically proper one at that) similar to the one used to define the ampere above. But it will not be given here and furthermore will be forgotten unless someone writes in for it.

Remember that voltage is pressure or force and that will suffice.

The Small Towner Hits Again

WHETHER or not the reader agrees with Lewis Garvin that the film destroyer is the "Great Projectionist from the city," he will consent to the writer's wish to "take the fellow by the neck who puts useless punch holes in films."

What these small town projectionists lack in salary they make up in their allegiance to each other. In the discussions carried on in these columns as to the skill of small-towner versus city projectionist, the noise has been very much in favor of the former. Perhaps the latter class is gathering together an avalanche of arguments which will be dumped on the trade papers in the near future.

Anyway, the small towner is far from a dead one. The letters show it. Keep up your interest in projection and you'll soon be showing some things to the best of city projectionists.

We shall remember Garvin's promise to tell us about the arc light at Russell Springs.

COLUMBIA, KY., Aug. 21, 1919.

Motion Picture News,
New York.

Gentlemen:

I just received the NEWS and took a little time and glanced through it. I noticed the fight is still on in regard to punch holes, marks and the bad conditions the films are received in. I wish to state that up until a few weeks ago that I was bothered a great deal with the punch marks, but we are off of that service now and I haven't been bothered with the marks any more.

I noticed some time ago a letter from an operator in a large town. The way I have the letter in mind, he seems to think that all small town operators are the cause of most of this trouble about punch marks and torn up films. I am a small town operator, and I think that if some of these Expert Projectionists, as they call themselves, who are nothing only Operators just like myself, operating for a living. I think if some of these big projectionists were to get out into the small town theatres and receive some of the films from some of their great brother projectionists, they would quit their big talk about the small operator who takes all the blame on his shoulders. I have been operating a picture machine for about eight years, and I think I know a great deal more about a machine than some of these great city projectionists who are getting anywhere from $25 to $50 per week for their work. I haven't had the honor to have a punch in my hands for the purpose of marking films and never will as long as I keep operating a machine, but I have often wished I had the fellow by the neck who put useless punch holes in the films. The trouble that I have been having until the present time is with the exchanges. I received a picture from the Universal Exchange at Cincinnati—a picture which we ran as a special. I had more trouble with this picture than I can mention, but I did keep an account of the patches I made, which amounted to ten. The places I patched the film had never been scraped, and I think they were just stuck together on imagination, the way they broke. Of course, most of tthe people at the show laid the blame on me for all the breakdowns that could have been avoided at the exchange with a little film cement and a knife or a pair of scissors.

Well, I guess this is all in regard to the punch marks and condition of films, so I will let you know what I am doing with my spare time if you can find any in this letter. My manager has two small theatres, the second theatre which we have just opened a few days ago at Russell Springs, Ky. I am operator and assistant manager for both of these theatres, when I am not operating, and on the road between the two theatres I am looking for special pictures which we present every few weeks.

You see, I haven't had much time to write you before now; but I just couldn't stand it any longer, so I just sat down and wrote anyway.

I am going to write again in a short time and let you know what kind of an arc light we have on the machine at Russell Springs. You may print this letter in the NEWS if you wish, which I would be very glad if you would just to show the Big City Projectionist that it is not always the small town operator that is causing all the trouble.

Yours truly, LEWIS GARVIN,
Local No. 799.

Volume Eight of Society of Motion Picture Engineers Transactions Off Press

PAPERS which were read at the last meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Philadelphia on April 14, 15, 16 have been published as Volume 8 of the Society's transactions. The subjects treated are varied and have been covered by their authors in a manner fully up to the standard set by previous treatises.

The first paper in the volume is the address by President H. A. Campe. He lays particular stress on the need for further standardization and greater co-operation amongst manufacturers in the motion picture industry.

William Roy Nott of the Research Laboratory, National Carbon Co., has a paper on "White Light for Motion Picture Photography," in which he describes the relative values of daylight and artificial light as applied to picture production. After discussing the effect of different colors of the spectrum he takes up in detail the "white flame arc" and describes a large number of high amperage flame arcs now in use in studios. Mr. Mott concludes with a very complete bibliography of the subject.

The next paper is by Mr. F. H. Richardson on the subject of "Some Phases of the Optical System of the Projector." In developing his treatise Mr. Richardson puts forward a theory relating to the divergence of the beam of light between aperture plate and projection lens. Results of tests which were made are included in the paper.

Following Mr. Richardson, Dr. Kellner of Bausch & Lomb discusses the optical system of the projector from the theoretical and manufacturing sides.

Dr. Story of the General Electric Co. also contributes an able discussion of Mr. Richardson's paper. By means of simple mathematical formulæ Dr. Story explains the factors governing the size of condensers. Both Dr. Kellner and Dr. Story are of the belief that relief from inefficiency in the optical system should be sought in the condenser, not necessarily in the objective.

Dr. H. P. Gage has submitted a paper entitled "Condenser Design and Screen Illumination." Throughout his paper Dr. Gage has made use of the corrugated condenser, hence it is seen that his remarks apply in general to the optical system employing a Mazda lamp as a light source. Each element of the system is discussed as to size and position and much of the reasoning can be applied as well to the arc as to the incandescent source.

"Adding Color to Motion" is the subject of a treatise by W. V. D. Kelley. Mr. Kelley relates briefly the history of photography in colors and describes the principal forms now in use.

The final paper of the Transactions is one on "Attachments to Professional Cinematographic Cameras," by Carl L. Gregory and G. J. Badgley. All of the more important camera attachments are described, together with their modes of operation. The authors also make worthy suggestions of attachments that are needed, but are non-existent at present. To the camera man or cinematographer this treatise will prove of great value as indicating the directions in which camera manufacturers are working in an endeavor to market an all-complete device.

Will Mazda Do the Work?

LEAGUE MEMBER No. 912 asks for information on Mazda lamps when used on throws up to 90 feet. He also wants to know who makes the most reliable incandescent bulb and ends up by asking if Mazda lamps are as satisfactory as the D. C. arc.

Roughly, the Mazda lamp is suitable for pictures up to 12 feet in width at a distance of 90 feet. Just before the war, the manufacturers of incandescent lamps got together and decided on the limitations of their products. Previous to that time, information regarding Mazda projection was rather meagre. Stories were circulated that the incandescent lamp would soon take the place of all arcs; other stories carried the news that the lamps were only good for 30- or 40-foot throws and were unreliable at that.

Both stories were untrue and misleading. The Mazda lamp has been improved until within its limitations it is a most satisfactory source of light for projection purposes.

There are now two sizes of Mazda lamps for projection: the 600-watt and the 900-watt. A theatre of any size at all needs the 900-watt, so that the smaller bulb can be ignored in this discussion.

As far as the light on the screen is concerned, there is no fault to find with Mazda projection, just so long as it is used within its limitations. Mazda lamps originate light rays that are slightly yellower than the arc, but this point is not one to condemn them. An arc badly handled emits light rays of poorer quality than a Mazda in normal operation. Incandescent projection produces a screen picture of even intensity whereas an A. C. arc under the same circumstances might give uneven screen illumination.

So much for the light giving qualities of Mazda. In operation, the Mazda is far superior to either A. C. or D. C. arc. Once the lamp filaments have been adjusted on the optical center and the reflector image likewise made to assume its correct position, the projectionist is through with the lamp house and contents. Provided proper current and voltage are maintained there is nothing more for him to worry about.

But therein lies the greatest source of trouble and up to the present time the main bugaboo of incandescent projection. Principally because of the lack of sensitive regulation the lamp was submitted to excess voltage for periods of time which, though slight, cut down the life of the lamp to a really disappointing figure. If a lamp, sold with a guaranteed life of 100 hours, was by accident or carelessness submitted to a 5 per cent excess of voltage for only a minute or two the lamp might burn out at the end of 50 hours. Such results were discouraging to the exhibitor who had to buy lamps so frequently.

If a Mazda lamp of the 900-watt type was installed, that meant 30 amperes at 30 volts. It was up to the projectionist to see at all times that the voltage remained at 30. For this purpose he was and is in most cases today provided with a hand-controlled regulator. If he happened to be taking current off a supply line having bad fluctuations he was up against it. He knew or should have known that a minute's carelessness on his part if the voltage jumped to 32 or 33 would mean a reduction of one-half in the life of his lamp.

But there are signs of the appearance on the market of several automatically controlled regulators. These are the only types suited to projection work. Hand control has no right of existence and will without doubt disappear entirely w the new regulators pop their heads over counter.

You ask for a comparison of Mazda and D. You have taken the two worst examples, but shall hear the truth.

Because of claims which in the beginning g the impression of extravagance and promoted trust of their products manufacturers of Ma lamps are now much more careful of their st ments. Not that their previous figures were honest. They were slightly over enthusiastic, th all.

Recent publications from the makers claim eq satisfaction with Mazda as compared to A. C. a up to 60 to 65 amps. and D. C. arcs up to 30 an and for throws up to 90 or 100 feet with a scr not larger than 9 feet x 12 feet. Thus you for yourself what figures limit the usefulness the lamp. After measuring your theatre and e mating your conditions you can act accordin At 30 amps. no Mazda lamp will better the scr results from a well handled D. C. arc. But bel that figure the incandescent will begin to g Of course at any of the amperages mentioned saving in current by the use of a Mazda lamp be considerable. Assuming that you find a 9 watt lamp does the same work as a 60 amp. A. arc, which has a voltage drop between carbons 38 volts, it is seen that the saving is nearly 60 cent in current consumption.

Any one of the "big three" will supply you w high class lamps: Westinghouse Lamp Wo Edison Lamp Works and National Lamp Work

PROJECT-A-LITE

Transformers were never known to burn out a lamp.

We challenge successful contradiction of this statement. Some dealer who has his own axe to grind has made a statement to one of our distributors that lamps have been burned out on account of the transformer. COME OUT IN THE OPEN AND MAKE THAT STATEMENT IF YOU DARE.

Project-A-Lite Regulators are also furnished for direct current at any voltage desired down to the 32-volt battery or small generator systems.

We manufacture and FULLY GUARANTEE both transformers and adapters to be free from mechanical or electrical defects and to do the work for which they are designed.

We quote verbatim a part of one dealer's letter to us:
"Why the regular dealers do not care to push your equipment is because in doing so he is losing the cream of the business in lamphouse parts, such as condensers, lugs or terminals, carbon jaws, etc." Right here we want to say that there are not many dealers who do this, most of them are honest, upright men who will give the exhibitor the best on the market for his use, but the letter we quote tells you the reason. Mr. Exhibitor, why some dealers are small enough to knock any device that SAVES MONEY FOR YOU.

Look into the Project-A-Lite devices for economy and service—it's there all the time.

Write us for information; many are doing it and we are busy telling them what we can do with Project-A-Lite. We want to tell you, too.

Two Arcs and One Compensarc

League Member 1028 asks:

How can I connect a 60-amp. Compensarc w both arcs burning at once?

Answer:

It cannot be done, assuming that your comp sarc is the transformer type.

If you connected two arcs to a compensarc economizer by any scheme of connections what ever you would have trouble in operation. Wl your second arc was struck, the first one would out. This method of running two arcs on c machine is called "stealing the arc."

Your only remedy is to get two compensarcs, use one on each arc.

Stage Equipment — Theatres Worth While — Auditorium Lobby

Brooklyn Comes Into Possession of Greatest Motion Picture Theatre in the East

WHEN the new Brooklyn Strand opened its doors to the public on August 30 another step forward had been taken in motion picture playhouses. Without a doubt the new Strand is more imposing, the decorations more elaborate and the appointments in general more beautiful than in any other picture theatre in this country, which is the equivalent to saying in the world.

The structure has been raised at the corner of Fulton street and Rockwell Place, Brooklyn,

Illustration showing the arrangement of loge seats, and also method of entrance to balcony with the main entrance on Fulton street. The front of the theatre is modelled after a Greek facade, two stories in height. Colored Seraffito panels ornament the freize which combined with appropriate Latin quotations placed on both sides of the marguire and serve to strike a keynote harking back to the days of old Rome when play-houses were real works of art.

Upon entering there is seen the most imposing lobby ever constructed in any theatre. It is larger than any other lobby in the country, if not in the world. The design, with its marble furniture represents in a general way the patio of a typical Pompeiian home. Wall decorations are of painted Pompeiian ornament worked out in a color scheme of red and yellow. Wall columns are black and white Vermont marble. These staircases in themselves are works of art, lending an air of spaciousness to the already perfect lobby. An ornamental iron and leaded glass screen separates the upper part of the lobby from the balcony mezzanine. This arrangement has the effect of throwing the balcony and mezzanine into one, thereby adding to the grand appearance of the lobby.

View of the lobby and grand staircase as seen from the main entrances. In the background on the mezzanine floor are the leaded glass partitions

gold with bronzed caps and bases. Leading from the lobby on either side to the balcony are the grand staircases, twelve feet in width and built of

Once inside the auditorium the spaciousness of the new Strand is immediately evident. The auditorium with a floor area of 125 ft. by 96 ft. is amply decorated with mural paintings and ornamental style of architecture has been adhered to here.

There is one balcony with a seating capacity of 2900. An excellent view of the screen may be had from any one of the seats, the slope being sufficient to permit of no interference. Entrances to the lobby can be affected in two ways, from the mezzanine floor direct to the front rows of the balcony or by another series of stairways leading from the balcony mezzanine half way up the balcony.

Adequate facilities have been provided for the eventual presentation of vaudeville. The stage is 85 ft. by 36 ft. and is equipped with all the necessary dressing rooms and appliances.

The theatre building contains all the latest modern conveniences such as luxuriously furnished smoking rooms for the men and rest rooms for women on each floor. A semi-circular mezzanine forms a lounge for all the patrons of the house.

An orchestra of thirty pieces led by Alois Reiser presents a high-class musical program fully in keeping with the remainder of the house. The grand pipe organ is played alternately by C. H. Smith and Frank S. Adams.

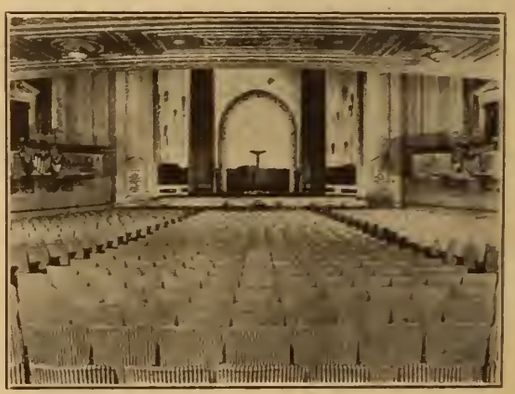
Sanitary Covers for Theatre Chairs

THE well-known supply house of Dwyer Bros. & Co., formerly of Columbus, Ohio, have recently equipped a factory for the manufacture of theatre chair covers. This factory, which is located at Cincinnati, is one of the most complete in this country, having been equipped with the latest power sewing machines, electric cutting machinery and electric pressing equipment. Although operation was started but a short time ago, the plant is already engaged in executing many large orders from theatre managers who have been impressed by the products. Mr. S. Barrett McCormick, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis; Mr. Tom Reilly, Ohio Theatre, Cincinnati, and the Harry Davis Enterprise Theatres of Pittsburgh have added to the comfort of their patrons and the attractive appearance of their theatres by covering their theatre chairs with the Dwyer Sanitary Chair Covers.



The effect of the floral and stripe designs in cretonnes, tapestry linens, etc., of which the covers are made, creates an atmosphere of warmth and comfort while the white cream covers in drill and other material at once give that cool appearance that is so much desired in hot weather.

The covers are made to special order only and are cut and tailored to the special design of the

he Blackstone Theatre, Pittsburgh's Latest, nother Example in Progressive Theatre Work

HE beautiful new Blackstone theatre, erected by Isaac Guckenheimer, the well known Pittsh exhibitor, on Fifth avenue, the Broadway of Steel City, was thrown open to the public on ast 7. Thousands of theatre-goers passed by icket booth on that day and were agreeably ised by the artistic symmetry and colorful y of the new amusement house.

ch had been exepected of the new edifice for s generally known that Mr. Guckenheimer was ng no expense to make his theatre take high among other theatres, but notwithstanding nowledge the public was considerably astonat the results arrived at and the proprietor of the new enterprise was complimented on all sides for having given to Pittsburgh one of the coziest, prettiest, most sanitary and most comfortable theatres, not only in that city, but in others as well.

Nothing but latest ideas in everything pertaining to architectural beauty and the comfort of an audience have been made use of in the construction of the Blackstone. Quite a number of the motion picture theatres of Pittsburgh have handsome marquees and entrance lobbies, but those of the new theatre are without doubt the most striking of any possessed by any theatre in the city. The entrance lobby is designed along French lines, is elliptical in form and decorated in two tones of brown and gold. It is in harmony in every way with the beautiful color schemes of the interior of the theatre. The tile floor continues out to the curb, which is an unique feature in entrances to theatres.

The auditorium, which has a seating capacity of 750, is designed in the Adams style. The entire floor of the auditorium is of tile, with wainscoted walls, marbleized, and the general decorations are in old rose, ivory and gold surmounted near the ceiling with a night sky and landscape. The lighting scene affords good lighting throughout, without glare or interference with the showing of the picture

The Blackstone will have one of the largest organs in the city, a magnificent new Hilgreen-Lane organ, which will be one of the most attractive features of the theatre, as the acoustic properties are of the best.

The Shaw Method of Six Color Cinematography Based on the Additive Process

An Interesting Description of the Invention as Described Originally in the British Journal of Photography

IN the production of moving pictures in colors as hitherto suggested, a rotary band screen was provided having arranged thereon three or more filters in which alternate color was a shade of red, the other colors being green and blue.

For projecting pictures it was also suggested to dye the films corresponding to the colors of the screens through which the corresponding negatives were taken or to employ similar screens.

The invention has for its general object to provide means whereby the natural shades and tones of the subject photographed can be more nearly reproduced on projection; and the more specific object is to reduce to a minimum the "flicker" effect in color moving picture projection.

With this end in view the invention consists in the production of a moving picture film bearing continuing aspects of a subject in successive groups of six picture image-sections, each section showing a color selection and three of which being of red color are alternately disposed in their relation to the other three picture image-sections of the group, of which only one is of green color selection and the remaining two are of primary color selection other than red.

The invention also consists in a method for projecting moving pictures in colors in a moving picture projector without the aid of color filters in which the picture image areas of red color selecting of a film bear a red color tint and the other picture image areas each a green color tint.

Analyzing the problem of "flicker" common to moving pictures in colors comparison has been made with the regular "black and white" moving pictures and seemed that the trouble could be remedied if the positive film ready for projection in colors could be made of such quality that the differently colored separated pictures-sections comprising the image should not only show a difference in the opacities of the color separated picture-sections, thus controlling and selecting the colored light which it permits to pass, but these opacities should be arranged and regulated to such a degree that if projected without color filters they should show, with the exception of the red color separated picture-sections, imagies closely resembling the "black and white" moving picture where the amount of "fllicker" is usually at minimum.

This theory, later found to be a fact, is based on the view that the disturbance or "flicker" which is perceived by the retina of the eye is due to violent light changes caused by quickly and successively moving these picture-section opacities alternating in contrast of strong light and shadows; what in one of the positive picture image-section is expressed as a transparent light-passing spot is an opaque light-preventing spot in the next following picture image-section.

For illustration, if we think of the spectrum as one chain of graduated colors and hues extending from one end of the spectrum to the other, as soon as we take any link out we break the continued line of the chain and certain hues or shades of colors will be missing; the gradual color scale will be disturbed, the absorption bands will be sharply defined and a "gap" between the primary colors of the spectrum will be formed which would cause upon the retina of the eye a sensation similar to looking upon a board marked with black and white checkers, a sensation causing an immediate disturbance to the eye, and if such a sensation is continued for a length of time the eye fatigue and "flicker" increases in proportion.

A similar sensation of "gaps" is caused upon the retina when different sharp cut primary color filters are used in forming the different color separated opacities on the film. Besides causing "flicker" these "gaps" prevent the eye from perceiving the colors in their natural shades and hues, as each missing link represents a color shade or hue which is necessarily a part of the spectrum.

Further analyzing the "gaps" it was observed that in the projection of the different primary colors, the "flicker" was mostly trying upon the eyes when green or blue-green colored light was being passed by sharply cut color separated opacities; the red colored light being passed by the red color separated picture opacities did not cause much "flicker" or pulsating effect upon the eye.

From that time on efforts were directed to picture section opacities representing separations of wave-lengths different from red, by regulating the opacities translating the photographic details from orange, green, yellow to blue shades of the subjects to such an extent that when a positive was made from a thus regulated negative film and was projected, for instance, in monochrome, say green light, a graduated scale of different hues of green color was perceived ranging from deep green to a very light blue green shade, according to the natural colors of the subject; the green light sifting through the translucent or semi-translucent varying opacities of the picture image-sections and forming these different hues of green color without any 'gaps."

A positive is made from this negative film and although red, green, yellow and blue color filters were used in the taking, it is possible to project the positive with two primary color-tilters only, namely, red and green. The picture image-section o color selections passing red colored light an picture image-sections of green, yellow and color selection each passing green colored ligh

The patentee believes himself to be the fir use in taking moving pictures in colors a mo color screen filled with six color-filters so arra and selected to register on the panchromatic n tive film groups of six color selected picture in sections, three of which represent red color and the balance of three color selected pi image-sections representing green, yellow and values and so arranged that the picture image tions of red color selection are registered other one and the picture image-sections of g yellow and blue color sections are each regis once in every group of six picture image-sec when a positive is made therefrom to projec picture image-sections of red color selection light of red color and the picture image-sectio green, yellow and blue color selection each light of green color.

Thus, in each group of six picture image tions, the red images, alternating in projection the green images, and each green image show different density or shade of green color influ by the difference in the opacities of the green low and blue color selections, form in the pr tion of each group of six pictures image-sec three different pairs of color mixtures, and overlapped in the eye of the observer by persis of vision produce moving pictures in colors, nearly approaching colors of nature with a mum amount of flicker; or the positive film be the successive groups of six picture image-sec of color selection can be directly tinted, dy toned photographically, in which case the p image-sections of red color selection will b red color tint and the picture image-sectior green, yellow and blue color selection will bear a green color tint, and the projection c positive film will take place without any recr color filters.

A Tripod Adaptable to A Cameras

SOME time ago in these columns ther peared a complete descriptive article on th Akeley Camera. This camera, which found favor with the Signal Corps, contains so interesting points of design and operation th article just mentioned was received with wi terest. At the time the description was giv features of the tripod were but lightly to upon since the camera proper was the subj the story. In the article which follows the A tripod will be dealt with so that those whc found other tripods lacking in some manne be informed of the advantages of the Akeley.

Fig. 1 shows the tripod complete. It weig pounds, has a length extended of 5 ft. 8 i collapsed of 3 ft. 4 in. Its head is made c aluminum, triangular in shape, each side c triangular head being 7 in. in length.

The legs are made of straight grain mah 1¼ in. wide and ½ in. thick. It will be r rom Fig. 1 that the legs have a particularly wide pread at the top. This feature insures ragidity nd good support. A thumbscrew attachment, also een in this figure, makes it possible for the legs to e quickly detached from the aluminum head. One advantage of the simple straight sticks of which the legs of the tripod are composed is that such construction makes it easily possible to substitute another stick—made on the spot, if necessary—in case of breakage.

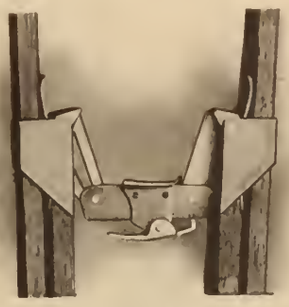
Shows truss locked—which when in this position slightly bows legs outwards giving tension which results in the remarkable rigidity. In this position, the end of the truss bears against steel springs, which bearing leather washers to prevent slippage, holds tightly against the outer and upper sticks and thereby locks the tripod.



CUT 2

To unlock—thumb is placed on upper thumb piece of lock and middle finger presses lock lever which releases catch—pressing down with thumb breaks lock as here shown.

Sheet brass is used to make the cappings. These are riveted through thus reinforcing the sticks. The toggles are also of brass, with the exception of the locks which are of hardened steel.

The points are made of cold rolled steel, case hardened, with hexagonal base and chisel shaped to provide the best ground grip.

Binding of the legs is unknown with the Akeley Tripod even in the dampest weather. After the locks have been released there is plenty of free play which does away with all chance of swelling and consequent sticking.

By another pressure of the thumb the second half of lock is broken as shown in this cut—then this lock serves as a band to actuate the lower leg freely up or down. When at the desired length, the center truss is then easily and quickly returned to position as in Cut 1—while the lock proper latches by a spring and prevents the truss from any possible collapse until intentionally actuated by the operator. This means that the tripod in a few seconds may be adjusted to any position—which is not possible with the several thumb screws of the usual type.

This tripod, as has been intimated previously, was developed to accompany the Akeley Camera, which has obtained a name as a quick acting instrument. Extra weight was therefore discarded wherever possible without sacrificing steadiness at the same time. As a result this tripod is light in weight, perfectly rigid, easily and quickly adjustable and permanent in its adjustments. For motion picture work each one of these features is a requisite and the Akeley Tripod seems then to be fitting well into the scheme of things for the cinematographer.

The History of "The Marseillaise"

By J. C. Cuthbert Hadden
(In Musical Opinion)

THERE is no patriotic song in existence which has had more power over the people or taken a great share in their military achievements than the "Marseillaise." In the quieter times of the third Republic, Frenchmen have learned to listen to it with little more than a thrill; but its effects were altogether different in the days of the first Revolution, when the people were wrought up to fever heat amid wild scenes of bloodshed and warfare in their own streets—when women "were fighting with the ferocity of wild beasts and the heavily laden tumbrils were rolling on day after day toward the scaffold." In those days it made the blood tingle in men's veins, and whole armies and assemblies sang it, in the words of Carlyle, "with eyes weeping and burning, with hearts defiant of Death, Despot, and Devil." The words "Aux Armes! Marchons!" were heard resounding in every corner of the country. They helped to win the victory of Jemappes for Dumouriez's forces, forty thousand all singing them as they marched irresistibly on the enemy. A Republican general asked for "a supply of one thousand men of a new edition of the 'Marseillaise.'" Another reported: "I am going into battle; the 'Marseillaise' will command with me." Klopstock, the poet, declared that the song had caused the death of fifty thousand Germans. Of course, there is an element of danger in a song of this kind—an element of which we have some experience nearer home in "The Battle of the Boyne"; and as a matter of fact the "Marseillaise" was for many years prohibited from public use. Not until 1879 were the military bands allowed to play it. It was kept in constant thraldom—always feared, always watched like a lion ready to break forth from its den and a second time spread desolation and carnage over half the nations of Europe. In one sense, therefore, it was not quite what Carlyle calls it—"the luckiest musical composition ever promulgated." And yet France might not have been the France she is today without it, for Fletcher or Saltoun's familiar aphorism applies as much to a country's national anthems as to its national song

An English writer has declared that only a French patriot can properly sing the "Marseillaise," it would be less of an exaggeration to say that only a French patriot could have composed it. Absurd statements appear from time to time in connection with the history and origin of the famous song; but there is not the slightest doubt that both words and music were written by Rouget de Lisle, an "inspired Cyrocan colonel," who was quartered at Strasburg when the volunteers of the Bas Rhin received orders to join Luckner's army.

As the son of royalist parents, and himself belonging to the constitutional party, De Lisle, an engineer captain, declined to take the oath to the constitution abolishing the crown. He was therefore deprived of his military rank, denounced and imprisoned, only to escape after the fall of Robespierre. He appears to have been greatly admired among his associates for his accomplishments, he being at once poet, violinist and singer. He had even tried his hand at three pieces for the theatre, which, however met with no great success.

It was on the evening of April 24, 1792, that he wrote the "Marseillaise." That night he was one of a social party at the house of Baron Dietrich, the Mayor of Strasburg. The baron's resources, we read, had been so greatly reduced by the necessities and calamities of war that nothing better than garrison bread and a few slices of ham could be provided for dinner. Dietrich smiled sadly at his friend and lamenting the scantiness of his fare, declared that he would bring forth the last remaining bottle of wine in his cellar, if he thought that it would help to inspire De Lisle in the composition of a patriotic song to stimulate the courage of the young soldiers as they marched out. The ladies signified their approval and the last bottle of wine was produced. De Lisle said nothing at the time, but returning to his lodgings he set to work in a fit of enthusiasm and before daylight dawned he had completed both the words some of them had been, as it were, "in the air" for months beforehand. Thus we find that in an address from the Club De l'Auditoire—of which De Lisle was a member and probably the poet—such sentences appear as "To arms, fellow citizens. The standard of war is unfurled; the signal is given. To arms! The hour to fight has arrived. Victory or death!

But whether or not the words like the music, were due to a sudden burst of inspiration, it is certain that the music was hardly dry on De Lisle's manuscript when Mayor Dietrich who had a good tenor voice, was singing the new song to a party of friends at his house amid the greatest enthusiasm. It was only an afternoon's work to have the music copied and arranged for a military band, and on April 29—four days after its composition—the song was played at a review by the band of the Garde Nationale. On June 25 it was sung at a civic banquet at Marseilles, when it was received with such tremendous applause that the decision was at once made to have it printed. This was immediately carried out, and under the title of "Chant de Guerre pour l'Armee du Rhin" it was distributed to the volunteers of the battalion just starting for Paris. On July 30, the army entered the capital singing the inspiring melody and to its strains they marched some days later to the attack on the Tuilleries. From that time to "Chant de Guerre" was called "Chanson des Marseillaise"— name which has sometimes led to confusion as to its locale of its birth, but evidently adopted because it was first sung by the battalion of volunteers from Marseilles.

It is doubtful if there has ever been a song that has had more power over a people than the "Marseillaise." Something of this has already been shown and much more could be added. During the route of Ducrot's division after Froeschwiller, M. Ludovic Halevy (making his way with other fugitives to Phalsburg) relates how the company, battered by the elements and disheartened by disaster, suddenly took heart and hope when the tall Tambour-major Berne striding in front, lifted his gilt staff as a signal and let off the "Marseillaise" the soldiers striking in one by one and becoming new men under the intoxicating influence. It all reminds us of Heine's French drummer who could not speak German, but "could make himself very intelligible with his drum. If I did not know what the word "liberte" meant, he drummed the "Marseillaise," and I understood him."

Oddly enough, poor Dietrich walked to the scaffold accompanied by the strains of the song he had indirectly helped to call into being. As for De Lisle, entering the army again, he made the campaign of La Vendee under general Hoche; was wounded and at length went into privacy at Montaigne (his birthplace) where he remained a poor lonely broken-hearted man until the second Restoration. His family had some little property among them; but a brother seems to have taken advantage of the composer, and the latter was forced to go to Paris, where only a small pension—granted by Louis XVIII and continued by Louis Philippe—prevented him from starving. He passed away in a friend's house at Choisy-le-Roi on July 27, 1836, being then in his seventy-sixth year.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"The Fatal Fortune"

(S. L. K. Serial Corp.—First Three Episodes)

THE open season for serials has arrived, and with the various announcements which producers have made concerning continued photoplays the exhibitor will not have to use a microscope in looking for this type of screen entertainment. If he happens to select the new S. K. L. serial, "The Fatal Fortune," which marks Helen Holmes' return to the silversheet, he will be displaying a good sense of showmanship, for the picture is well calculated to draw patronage not only because of its enlivened action, but because it presents the one-time serial queen after an absence of several seasons.

The author, Walter Pritchard Hall, has conceived a typical serial plot for the star. By drawing his chief character as a newspaper reporter he has reinforced his story from the start with adventurous action. It is mostly melodramatic in theme if one may judge from the first three episodes, although here and there the tension is lifted to exploit a note or two of heart interest. The plot is concerned with the rivalry of wealthy South Sea traders. The hero is the son of one of the men; the heroine, the daughter of the other. Both are innocent parties in the conflict of the traders.

The action does not take long in getting started for the girl's father is mysteriously murdered, and it is her purpose to run his assassin to earth. The suspense is established in her determination to outwit the gangsters who are employed to steal her father's map of the Islands. But "Wolf" and "Blinky" are such slow thinking hirelings that it almost seems as if they would be left at the quarter mile post before the story is finished.

Donald Mackenzie's direction is old-fashioned when it comes to the employment of the players. He has permitted them to "emote" to the nth degree. The continuity might be improved. Still the serial is absorbing and carries about every element known in the dramatic scale. Oh, yes, the mysterious character is there. The star is supported by Lieut. Jack Levering, William Black, Frank Vanderlee and others.—Laurence Reid.

"Belgium, the Broken Kingdom"

(Educational—One Reel)

EDUCATIONAL presents in this pictorial aftermath of the war a highly interesting number. It marks the first of a series of scenic films produced by the Red Cross pertaining to the war. The recent conflict seems like something from the distant past so heroic are the ruins. The spectator is conducted through Ypres—that mere shell of a city which was so stubbornly fought over. And the Yser Canal brings out clearly how tenaciously the Belgians kept the invader back. This stream of water acted as a barrier, for native engineers used it to flood the surrounding country. How Belgium bled is more than once realized when one views the desolation of the little kingdom.

A joyous note is felt when the deported children and others who were sent away to avoid the enemy are safely returned to their parents and relatives. The picture carries its pathetic quality, too, for certain of the elders scan the little faces in vain for their own loved ones. The power of the camera is felt here. It brings us face to face with one of the horrors of war.—Laurence Reid.

"His Naughty Wife"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

THE latest Sunshine Comedy does not quite reach the mark established by its forerunners, since the material concocted is more or less of an antiquated pattern. Of course, any idea is preposterous in most any film comedy because the piece de resistance is usually exaggeration of the business in hand. Yet here it seems as if all the old "laugh-getters" have been resurrected to supply the mirth. Trick photography has its inning, too, noticeably in the employment of the skidding automobiles.

The fun starts in a doctor's office and soon reaches a banana peel or three. Then on to a row of babies hanging on a line. And so the skids are applied. The cars find the inevitable wet pavement and dash through various walls with perfect nonchalance. The piece takes its title from a pretty wife who loves her liquor, but the plot never intrudes to its sorrow. The zippy action takes care of that. The titles keep apace with the jazz and pep of the "business."

It will earn the laughs, however, because a quintette of capable funmakers are in charge. Harry Gribbon, Bobby Dunn, Harry McCoy, Florence Carpenter and Slim Summerville can dish out the laughter from most any kind of an idea. And so it will score.—Laurence Reid.

"Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement"

(Educational—September Issue—One Reel)

THE latest screen supplement issued by Photoplay Magazine introduces a quintette of stars. The cameraman has journeyed down to Bayside, L. I., and there he has given us a peep of the Talmadge family. Norma, Constance, Natalie and Mrs. Talmadge are photographed together and the cry of "camera!" is temporarily forgotten. Then the supplement turns to Fred Stone, who shows his versatility at a rodeo show. The comedian is thoroughly at home in and out of the saddle and he sends out a thrill in "bulldogging" a steer.

And Allan Dwan escorts the spectator next to his filming of "Soldiers of Fortune." The noon hour has arrived and the players are enjoying a state of relaxation. A picturesque location. Mary Maclaren follows here with "Dog Days" and we are given several interesting close-ups. Wallace Reid and company making mob scenes for "The Lottery Man" round out the supplement. It seems as if every human being in Hollywood has assembled for the test. This Edueational is serving a purpose. It take the favorites right into your home. The patron may feel that he knows them intimately.—Laurence Reid.

Universal Screen Magazine

UNIVERSAL'S latest offering in its animated Magazine (No. 31) is varied enough to suit most any taste. A couple of cartoons are shown which are decidedly unique. One presents the courtship of Mr. and Mrs. Mosquito. It seems that the male of the species is less deadly than his mate. He cannot see the lady of his heart since he is blind from birth. Hence he feels her presence through vibration. If she attracts him he gets rather wobbly in the legs. But his love like any male's is a thing apart. After milady has caressed him to her heart's content she promptly puts him to death.

Fables of Funnyland is the other cartoon and it shows how a small boy can tease a certain huge bird to the danger point. The living aeroplane picks him up and drops him down a hollow tree. Arriving at the bottom Mr. Frog takes him in charge and introduces him to the business end of Mr. Bee. And he is propelled to earth again, sadder but wiser.

Lillian Russell appears and instructs the ladies how to comb their hair. It is quite an art to keep the snarls out. Hair like a cat's back must be stroked in the right way. Then we are introduced to Futurist Movies. This is indescribable. But from a shapeless mass the features of Marshall Joffre are eventually recognized.

Messrs. White and Pinck, dealers in paint in Buffalo, N. Y., present themselves in a close-up. And to complete the Magazine the product, Thermite, a scientific discovery, is shown as a metal which heals other metals.—Laurence Reid.

"The Rajah"

(Rolin-Pathe Comedy in One Reel, Featuring Lloyd, Pollard and Daniels—Released Sept. 7)

TO augment the clever work of the three principal characters there has been introduced into this film a bunch of well trained animals.

It is considered by the writer as one of the best Lloyd comedies in a long time and no doubt cost considerably more to produce and more time has certainly been spent in working out the many comedy situations.

One of the Ringling's best known freaks takes part in this and the fun is fast and furious. The star is a speed fiend and is chased by the Oriental cops. But he manages to catch a glimpse of a girl and stops to pay her a social visit.

The Rajah objects to this and at one time has the hero caged in with an apparently ferocious lion. But the lion was not hungry or was possibly a vegetarian. And the hero finally elopes with the heroine and the harem is thrown in gloom. A sure fire bet on any bill.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 25. 1919.

"THE HEART OF YOUTH"
(PARAMOUNT)

Simply an Inoffensive Little Picture

HERE is a picture especially appropriate for children's matinees, lyceum courses and chautauquas. Immaculately clean and as exciting as a charade. But the little white kitten furnishes the climax when it rolls in the catnip strewed over its own grave. Silly and nonsensical for blase picture fans, or most persons with adult minds.

However, this picture is so unusual that the average audience will stare at it in amazement, and some may even like it. If it is kept off the main lines of travel and only played at store shows and nickleodeons on the branch lines. North and South, it may please.

Just the sort of picture that the Ohio and Pennsylvania Censor Boards would thoroughly enjoy and would impose upon their constituents perpetually. A dove of peace that innocent children and nice old ladies will be pleased to witness.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lila Lee comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— for ——— days in her latest Paramount picture, "The Heart of Youth." This is heralded as especially appealing to the younger set and to those adults who wish to view the heart of youth reminiscently. Pronounced a wholesome picture for all mankind.

The star portrays the role of a pretty girl living with her grandfather in the country. A camp belonging to a wealthy man is located nearby and the local attorney attempts in vain to settle the rights to the spring which bubbles forth between the two properties.

In spite of the feud that exists between the two old gentlemen, the son of wealth and the daughter of the settler meet and fall in love. Visiting children from the camp raise havoc at the settler's house after receiving permission to make molasses candy.

This further widens the breach between the two families. But the two young sweethearts remain loyal to each other. Finally a note left by the youth in a lover's letter box in the old tree places the hero and heroine at odds also. The mischievous children had inserted the cook's switch in the place of the flowers he had enclosed with the note.

When the wealthy man's younger children made the pet cat of the settler's family the offering is allowed to flow away from its natural basin. And in retaliation the wealthy man hires some thugs to tear up all the settler's fences.

A struggle ensues between the two forces and during the excitement the little son of the wealthy man falls in a nearby lake and is rescued from drowning by the heroine. This reunites all and the feud is through. And the little long lost cat also appears in to join in the general rejoicing, having escaped from the well.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked your best bet is to recite the list of former attractions that Lila Lee has appeared in. Then the folks that saw her in any one of the other pictures and liked her, will attend this time also. Mention "Such a Little Pirate," "A Daughter of the Wolf," "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," "Rustling a Bride," and "Rose o' the River."

A special bid should be made for the youths and misses. A special matinee for children should be arranged as children are always good boosters and will like this picture. Have this matinee during the early part of the showing so that you can realize the benefit of it during the balance of the engagement.

Lila Lee in her Paramount picture, "The Heart of Youth"

PROGRAM READER

If they spoiled all the nice juicy pies of your grandmother and if they spilled sticky molasses all over the kitchen floor;—How would you feel?

And if they broke the neck of the dove of peace and stole the pet kitten of your little brother;—What would you do?

She was too nice a little girl to really hate her wealthy neighbors. But she had been patient long enough. There was one last straw that broke the camel's back. And camel's are really valuable nowadays for various reasons.

The note she had received from her sweetheart was acompanied by a switch or a wig of false hair. How could she know that mischievous children had stolen the flowers that had originally enclosed the love letter?

In order to spring a surprise upon the common enemy she emptied the basin of the spring and let out the overflow. This caused consternation and provoked a real neighborly row.

But she finally brought order out of chaos and also an everlasting peace over the entire neighborhood. And the pretty girl was united to her youthful lover.

Here is a wholesome youthful story by Paramount which comes to this theatre next week. It is entitled "The Heart of Youth" and stars Lila Lee.

CATCH LINES

Feuds are as nothing to youthful love.

And the cat came back bringing joy;—but it was a white cat.

Sweet reminiscences return with the heart of youth.

Molasses candy and mince pie were big and vital things in the days of youth.

The Heart of Youth brings peace to the hardened hearts of the older folks.

"THE MARKET OF SOULS"
(INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

High Quality Drama of Great Appeal

CONSIDER this the best Dorothy Dalton picture since "The Flame of the Yukon." It gives her the opportunity of appearing as one of the society revellers at a high class cabaret and later as a sweet modest nurse, and she captivates in both situations.

Fortified with a most excellent story, and supported by a fine cast, she registers appealingly. The direction is very good as are also the sets, photography and laboratory work. A touch of Spiritualism is injected, but is so cleverly done that it will undoubtedly be accepted by the most scoffing skeptics. The women will especially enjoy this picture as it is sympathetic and suspensive throughout its entire continuity. A high quality drama of great appeal.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, good puller and very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

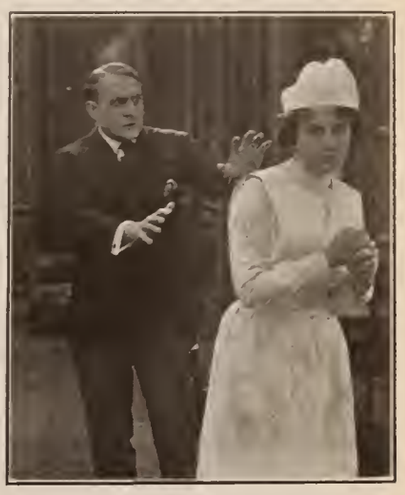
Dorothy Dalton is coming to the ——— theatre for a ——— days engagement beginning ———.

"The Market of Souls" is her latest Paramount attraction produced by Thomas H. Ince, and has H. E. Herbert, Philo McCullough, Dorcas Mathews and Donald McDonald in the cast.

This is heralded as her greatest picture and shows her in the role of a pretty young nurse coming to New York City. She visits a woman friend who with her husband is entertaining an unscrupulous young man.

The four attend a New Year's Eve celebration in a fashionable dining resort and screen critics are said to have declared that this was the most elaborately staged scene of revel ever produced in motion pictures. It is here that the young girl meets the quiet brother of the ne'er-do-well she is accompanying.

The good brother is worried about whether his brother took good care of the girl and calls on him. In self defense the brother tells him that the girl visited him in his room but that he repulsed her. During the quarrel which followed between the two brothers the good brother is blinded.



It was the first nursing job the girl had and she used an assumed name so that he would not know that his nurse was the kind of a nurse that would attend such lively cabaret parties. They grow to love each other. When the erring brother is caught by the girl trying to rob her patient she persuades him to go to France with the army and make a man of himself. He does this and is killed over there.

When the operation is performed on the eyes of her patient he wants to see the nurse who he has proposed to. And he curses her. As she leaves the house she learns of the death of his brother in France and returns to him. But in the meantime the erring brother, or his ghost has visited him and vindicates her in her lover's eyes and they are reunited.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you can declare that it is the best production with Dorothy Dalton since her "Flame of the Yukon." Get the star's photographs and half-tone cuts in as many places as possible. And emphasize that this is a Paramount-Artcraft picture produced by Thomas H. Ince. These are all well known names and brands.

The next thing is the title. "The Market of Souls" is an attractive title and the entire combination of big names and title should be sufficient to bring them in if you bring this compelling combination of names before the public often enough. Therefore you should use not only the newspapers and billboards but also plaster the town with snipes, throw-aways, window placards and long quarter-sheets, streamers, banners, door knob hangers, etc., etc. "Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton in her latest Paramounts-Artcraft production, 'The Market of Souls'."

Dorothy Dalton in an Ince-Paramount, "The Market of Souls"

PROGRAM READER

One brother was an erring brother and the other was the quiet one embittered against women.

And the scene was an active one in a leading New York dining resort on New Year's Eve.

The quiet brother was dining in a temporary secluded corner but he saw his wild young brother when he entered. He was one of a party of four. But who was the charming unsophisticated young girl with him?

When he learned that she was a young nurse just arrived from a small country town he cautioned his brother to take her to her hotel at once. The young man did this but attempted to force his attentions upon her. She thereupon left hurriedly for the nurses' home.

The good brother, worried at the fate of this beautiful young girl in his brother's care, called upon him immediately after the girl had left the place. In self defense, so that his brother would push the inquiry no farther, the ne'er-do-well declared that she had tried to make ardent love to him but that he had repulsed her.

When the other brother told him that he did not believe him and a quarrel started during which the good brother was temporarily blinded.

And his nurse was the young woman of the cabaret. But he did not know this until after the operation which gave him back his eyesight and after he had already proposed to his invisible young nurse.

Then the denouement, the heartbreaks, and and final victory of love.

This is shown in dramatic detail in "The Market of Souls" coming to this theatre next week and starring Dorothy Dalton.

It is a Thomas H. Ince production, a Paramount Picture.

CATCH LINES

She certainly paid in remorse for that one wild New Year's Eve.

A pretty nurse from the country takes part in the revels of a Manhattan New Year's Eve celebration.

"THE LOST BATTALION"
(W. H. PRODUCTIONS)

Should Pull Strong and Is Very Pleasing

PRIMARILY the filming of an outstanding event of great valor that will go down in history as one of the big situations in the World War, this is also a production with a well connected story containing romance, pathos and humor in great abundance. And the clever subtitles fit in perfectly.

In addition to the original famous heroes appearing personally in this picture the director has also provided a good cast of professionals to augment their efforts. It has a heart appeal and should be of particularly keen interest to not only all returned soldiers and sailors, but to their relatives and many friends as well.

Those exhibitors generally skeptical of showing any of the so-called war features should give this picture the proper exploitation to insure the big opening, and the reviewer feels confident that the merits of the production as a picture will continue to bring them in for the balance of the engagement.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities should be about the same everywhere. It should pull exceptionally strong and will certainly prove very pleasing as a picture.—Length, 7 reels.—Released September 8.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Lost Battalion" is the big feature production scheduled for a ——— days' engagement at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Remembered as the outstanding historical event of the late war it has been presented in the film with the original survivors. Major-General Robert Alexander, U. S. A.; Lieut.-Colonel Chas. W. Whittlesey, Major Geo. McMurty, Capt. Wm. Cullen, Lieut. Arthur F. McKeogh, Lieut. Augustus Kaiser, Private Abraham Krotoshinsky and the other famous heroes of this gallant band are all portrayed and assisted in re-enacting the dramatic event.

The producer has not failed in injecting the romance, pathos and humor in an entertaining as well as keenly interesting and well connected story of this great and stirring adventure. The carrier pigeon who came through the forest of fire minus one leg and one eye is also shown.

"Come and get us" was the reply of the depleted troop of American soldiers to the Germans after many days of hard defensive fighting. And everybody knows the famous answer of Lieut.-Colonel Whittlesey to the German commander.

This film not only shows the siege but it also shows first the great melting pot in which forty-two different nationalities were brought together as a fighting unit for Uncle Sam as the famous Seventy-seventh Division.

Deep into the Argonne Forest and completely surrounded by the Germans these heroes fought for so many days without food or water. They were hemmed in a sort of ravine with the enemy hordes all about them. Finally after losing every messenger they had dispatched back to the main lines one finally came through and reached the main body of the American army.

The gallant rescue of the game defenders is all history and is completely portrayed in this great screen production authorized by the United States Government and enacted by the heroic survivors.

PROGRAM READER

Surrounded for many days in the Argonne Forest the surviving heroes of that famous event of the late war have re-enacted the great adventure on the film.

It is officially authorized by the United States Government and is entitled "The Lost Battalion."

Those that appear in the film which comes to this theatre next week are Major-General Robert Alexander, U. S. A.; Lieut.-Colonel

His father and mother's English might have been a bit broken but the fighting blood was perfect. One of the "Lost Battalion" heroes

Chas. W. Whittlesey, Major Geo. McMurty, Captain Wm. Cullen, Lieutenant Arthur F. McKeogh, Lieutenant Augustus Kaiser, Private Abraham Krotoshinsky and others of the famous heroes of the great siege in the Argonne Forest.

The romance, pathos and humor is injected also in an entertaining story embellished with the soul-stirring thrills of deeds actually accomplished.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should go the very limit on exploitation to bring them in the opening day. The picture will do the rest for the balance of the engagement if you secure the right opening. And the fact that the members are the actual heroes re-enacting this great adventure will give you the opportunity of inserting their names in all your advertising.

A good tie-in is an arrangement with the World War Veterans or the American Legion or any local organization or returned soldiers. Give them a certain percentage if you deem it advisable. The newspapers will surely go the limit on this one and you should play it to the skies.

Photographs and half-tone cuts of the officers and privates most prominent should be displayed wherever possible. And emphasize that this is not only the authorized re-enactment of the Lost Battalion in the Argonne Forest but mention that the romance, pathos and humor is there also in a superbly produced and well connected story.

"The Lost Battalion" can be found at the ——— theatre.

Sole surviving heroes re-enact their great adventure for the screen.

Forty-two nationalities in a fighting unit for Uncle Sam.

The biggest event in the World War is filmed for future generations.

"TOLD IN THE HILLS"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Should Satisfy and Entertain Majority

THIS is a familiar story well directed and with star supported by a generally good cast and an army of extras. The scenery is especially wonderful and photography is excellent. Although produced in a big way it did not register so heavily with the reviewer as a whole. But this should satisfy and entertain the majority.

A great length of time is encompassed in the story which reaches through two generations and considering all this the continuity writer and cutting editor managed to do very good work. The story compels the heroine to persistently pursue the hero and at the same time develops a stubborn streak in him. This does not ring true nor does it court sympathy for either of them.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and quite pleasing; Family, big puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, good puller and very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 21.—Tom Hamlin.

Directed by George Melford.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert Warwick comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ——— in his latest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Told In The Hills."

This is the screen version of the famous story by Marah Ellis Ryan and is described as a stupendous production employing thousands of Indians, soldiers, etc. While the story opens in Kentucky the scenes are shifted to Montana in the great open spaces.

In this production, Thomas H. Ince has surrounded Robert Warwick with the following cast of well known screen players: Ann Little, Wanda Hawley, Margaret Loomis, Eileen Percy, Tom Forman, Charles Ogle, Monte Blue, Hart Hoxie, Jack Herbert and Guy Oliver.

A Southern mother who is dying receives the pledges of both her sons to care for her ward, a beautiful young girl. The younger brother is untrue to his pledge and afterwards goes to New Orleans and marries. The elder brother visits him and tells him that the ward had become the mother of the younger brother's child and that he had married her to give the child a name and had settled all his possessions upon her to provide her with the necessities of life.

He sternly commands the young erring brother to refrain from communicating with her and then he journeys to Montana where he becomes known as "Gennessee Jack." He is alleged to be a squaw man and this raises another barrier when he meets the one girl in the mountains.

How he becomes friendly with the Indians, his rescue of the soldiers who are hemmed in by the Indians, the repentence of his erring brother, and the winning of the one girl, is dramatically told in this massive screen production.

SUGGESTIONS

Captain Robert Warwick is one of your best bets for exploitation when you book this picture. And your next best bet is the well advertised brand, Paramount-Artcraft Picture. Then the author and title, Marah Ellis Ryan's "Told In The Hills." This is a combination that you can spread yourself on and place in every available place possible.

For lobby display the western stuff suggestive of Indians, soldiers, etc., would be very appropriate. A social list should be mailed especial classy announcements by mail. And just because the cast contains many names that have drawing qualities it would be well to publish the names in as many locations as possible.

A noble brother finally reaps the rewards of a great sacrifice.

PROGRAM READER

She thought he was a squaw man,—but she loved him.

There must be some good in this big strapping fellow who rescued the regiment of soldiers from the Indian warriors who had hemmed them in the mountain fastness of Montana.

And then an old trapper told her the truth. He was not a squaw man.

But what held him back from an avowal of the great overmastering love she knew he had for her?

It was then that the erring younger brother came seeking repentence. He had terribly wronged his elder brother and the girl learned that the elder brother whom she loved had married the girl that the younger brother had wronged and after bestowing all his worldly goods in her name had left for Montana to become a hermit far away from all white women.

There are many dramatic situations in the Paramount-Artcraft picture coming to this theatre next week. It has been adapted from the famous story by Marah Ellis Ryan, "Told In The Hills."

Robert Warwick is the star and he is supported by a notable cast augmented by thousands of Indians and soldiers in a massive production.

CATCH LINES

Soldiers mistook the peace message of the Indians and a massacre was imminent.

A little Kentucky girl in Montana loved the big strapping fellow,—then she heard that he was a squaw man.

An erring brother's repentence at the eleventh hour gave one woman and one man untold happiness.

A great and intensive love born in the great out-doors.

"LA BELLE RUSSE"
(FOX)

Theda Bara Appears in Obvious Domestic Drama

THEDA BARA'S latest offering harks back to the old school of fiction and drama when it was the popular thing to weave stories around the aristocratic scions of British nobility. The development of the ancient plots was invariably concerned around the heroic attitudes which were struck off by these heroes when they condescended to marry beneath their station. And David Belasco belonged to this historic school when he conceived "La Belle Russe"—the same school which turned out Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth, Laura Jean Libbey and Bertha M. Clay.

But the producers had the foresight to turn the ancient material to advantage by making it up-to-date. The late war is introduced and the dual role figures to show the star's famous characterization of a siren. A novel twist is gained by introducing the role for a climax. As twin sisters—one, a model of virtue and the wife of the honorable lord; the other, a sort of female Jekyll—she differentiates the characters with a goodly skill. Her performance is the chief point of interest in a story not conspicuous for any dramatic high lights.

The plot is so obvious that the suspensive value is lost sight of entirely. The technicalities have been well arranged; the supporting cast is adequate. Forget its ancient vintage and you will like it. —Length, 5 reels.—Released September 21.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Theda Bara, the Fox star, will be seen again at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest production entitled, "La Belle Russe." This is a picture with an English setting, and affords the actress with a dual role of twin sisters, La Belle Russe and Fleurette, Parisian dancers. As the latter, she marries the scion of an aristocratic English family, one Philip Sackton, much to the disapproval of his mother and brother. And so he is disinherited. With his income cut off the young husband takes up painting while Fleurette engages in teaching dancing lessons to children. Comes the great war and Philip enlists for king and country and through his bravery soon wins a commission. A fellow officer acquaints him with a story of his past, of how he had become involved with a Parisian dancer, La Belle Russe.

Eventually he is invalided home where he finds that his mother has undergone a change of heart. Having lost her other son in the war and believing that Philip might not return, the aristocratic lady has taken in Philip's wife and little boy. Indeed the house of Sackton must go on. But as Philip has his fellow officer with him the latter is surprised to find in the former's wife the woman who had intrigued him years before. As he upbraids her Fleurette puts in an appearance and declares herself to be Sackton's wife. Her explanation is that financial difficulties had caused her to accept her sister's generosity. So the little family is reunited.

Miss Bara appears to striking advantage in the dual role, and has the benefit of excellent assisting performances rendered by Warburton Gamble and William B. Davidson. The story is an adaptation of a play written by David Belasco, the well known theatrical manager and playwright, while it was produced under the direction of Charles J. Brabin.

SUGGESTIONS

David Belasco is the author of this picture and it would be well to start your exploitation around him. Mention that he is one of the biggest figures in the amusement world and use his name in connection with all advertising that you do. You should be able to create considerable interest in this picture by playing up the title. It is a colorful one and fits Miss Bara's personality to a dot. The story you can play up as a tremendous heart theme. There is a wealth of sympathy in the characterization. It presents a woman who marries outside her circle—a circle far above her station in life. And use teasers in question form as to what takes place.

Arouse interest in the picture by appropriate catch lines and mention that the star has a different kind of role here. Mention that she is the star of "Kathleen Mavourneen."

The gentleman is waiting, but Theda Bara is loath to make an appearance in this scene of the Fox offering, "La Belle Russe"

PROGRAM READER

Because Philip Sackton had married a notorious dancer, a woman far removed from his station, his mother disinherited him. But Philip was a man first and an aristocrat afterward and he resolved to abide by his marriage vows. And the war came to England and took Philip away. And during his absence Lady Sackton, realizing that his boy was the last of the line, suffered a change of heart and graciously provided for the child and his mother.

A gripping climax is introduced when Philip returns home with a fellow officer. The latter recognizes in Sackton's wife a woman who had once intrigued him. As he denounces her in Philip's presence the latter realizes that his heart is crushed. Then something occurs to pour oil on the troubled waters. A woman entered identically like the wife in appearance. She was the real Mrs. Sackton. Her twin, La Belle Russe, had attempted to take advantage of the situation by assuming the other's identity. This is an interesting picture—"La Belle Russe," which comes to this theatre soon with Theda Bara as the star. It is written by David Belasco.

CATCH LINES

See "La Belle Russe"—a story written by David Belasco. It shows how a brave woman risks all to save her son's heritage.

They were twin sisters—La Belle Russe and Fleurette. The former was a wicked siren while the latter was a model of feminine virtue. But because Fleurette married a titled Englishman, the event caused him to be disinherited. What happened? See "La Belle Russe" with Theda Bara as the star.

"THE PERFECT LOVER"
(SELZNICK)

Eugene O'Brien Stars in Sentimental Drama

"THE PERFECT LOVER," which presents Eugene O'Brien as a star, is another picture which relies heavily on its sentimental interest for success. It almost seems as if it has been too widely exploited if one considers the subject matter. Yet the personality of the star, his popularity with the feminine portion of the film public, coupled, of course, with the colorful title, should give the feature an extended life for a number of months—a longer life in fact than is usually accorded the average offering.

The offering is not entitled to any mark of distinction insofar as its theme, characterization and treatment are concerned. Indeed it conveys a hackneyed idea albeit one which meets a deal of response from the picturegoer. A character who sinks to the depths after basking in the sunlight of prosperity is certain to encounter sympathy in his adversity. The picture may disappoint those who contemplate seeing something of a light nature since it makes a strong bid for pathos.

The story is told in narrative form and offers little drama but a great deal of false sentiment. It doesn't ring true, much as the sincerities are striven for. Mr. O'Brien gives it breadth and vitality through his appreciation and intelligence. And he is assisted by a very capable cast. Mr. Ince's direction is praiseworthy, especially, in regard to details and atmosphere.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Eugene O'Brien, one of the most popular actors on the screen, makes his debut as a star in "The Perfect Lover," a Selznick Pictures production which will be shown at the ——— on ——— of ——— week. This is a story particularly suited for Mr. O'Brien's talents, since he is considered pre-eminent as an exponent of romantic acting. He appears as Brian Lazar, a young artist who dreams of a career as a painter of beauty. It happens that Mrs. Byfield, a love-starved woman, is attracted by a portrait which he has painted. And being informed that his talent might go to waste unless he has the proper financial backing, she promptly sees to it that he is advanced sufficient money for his art.

The young man is installed in a handsome studio and Mrs. Byfield sits for a portrait. But she has a deeper motive than to pose, for there comes a realization that she can have love and devotion—things which have been unattainable. With Mrs. Byfield as his sponsor, Lazar becomes the vogue among society women, not because of his artistic ability, but because of his good looks and charm. Indeed, he is "the perfect lover." After many months of living in an atmosphere of idleness among doting women with weary eyes and insatiable lips—women whose husbands have no time to be lovers—he rebels. So he returns to the country and marries the little girl whose picture brought him fame.

However, he has forgotten how to paint. He is a craze no longer. His wife is taken ill. And when one of the women he formerly knew threatens to have him arrested she chances to discover the plight of his wife. So Lazar is permitted his freedom. Perhaps the inspiration will come again. Who knows? The picture is an adaptation of Leila Burton Wells' story, "The Naked Truth." Ralph Ince directed.

PROGRAM READER

They were rich, these men—so rich that they had no time to find out where their money went. They neglected their wives for the almighty dollar. They gave their wives everything except the very thing they wanted most—the love of a man. They were love-starved, these women. So they got tired of waiting and looked elsewhere for the love they craved. They went to "the perfect lover." He was a struggling artist but they soon had him on a pedestal. And because of his irresistible charms he fascinated them.

He filled the void in their aching hearts. They fairly begged for his love. And he didn't deny them. But only for a time. Then he tired of their fawning manner. What did he do? How did he work out his problem? What became of him? Did he remain "the perfect lover"? See Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," which comes to this theatre in the near future. A big treat awaits you.

SUGGESTIONS

You don't need to employ ad stunts to put this feature over. You've got a big star—a star who has a tremendous popularity with the feminine portion of the film public, and you have him in a picture which carries a big box-office title. Why, it should sell itself. Still it is only fair that your patrons should know what is in store for them. So play up Eugene O'Brien's name to the limit. He has been identified as one of the most popular leading men on the screen and your patrons are all familiar with him. Pick up the "fan" magazines and you will find him the most interviewed actor in the film world. The women will flock to see him and so well the men. He is natural and sincere.

Let your audience know that he makes his debut as a star here. Make use of your local editor. You might induce him to run a "perfect lover" contest in the paper. And you can give an autographed picture of Gene O'Brien to the person writing the best theme on the requirements of "the perfect lover." Use catch lines and mail your invitations. You should pack them in if you play it up properly.

CATCH LINES

He was a handsome youth. And so the love-starved women petted and pampered him. But was he happy? You must find out for yourself when you see "The Perfect Lover" with Eugene O'Brien.

These society women worshipped him. They were love-starved. Their husbands were too busy to pay them attention. So they made an idol of the artist. Did he turn to clay? See "The Perfect Lover."

They called him the perfect lover. He gave them every attention. Gracious of manner, solicitous of their welfare, why they fairly worshipped him. He was so different from their plodding husbands! Then came a time when—See "The Perfect Lover."

"THE FAITH OF THE STRONG"

(SELECT)

Pleasing Story of Canadian Northwest

HERE is Mitchell Lewis again in the heroic role of a Canuck and since he can play the picturesque figure a little better than anyone else, there is no reason why he should enlarge upon his characterization despite the fact that he chances the risk of being called a one-part actor. Naturally the stories which are his allotment are invariably similar in plot and treatment.

The same quotas of heart interest, pathos, conflict and romance are there in their accustomed places. And he still embraces the opportunity of arousing sympathy, because he is usually an outcast when sentiment is measured out. He may be a lawless fellow as in this instance, yet he is a diamond in the rough, because of his tender solicitude for the opposite sex. Thus he is the same outstanding figure as when he gave life to the Canuck of Rex Beach's "The Barrier."

A simple story is "The Faith of the Strong," and because of its simplicity it is real. The action is elemental, naturally, but it never overreaches the mark. The picture has a moral, too, which emphasizes its value. The Canuck finds faith in himself and restores it to a woman when she is on the brink of oblivion. Quite a pathetic scene, this latter one. "The Faith of the Strong" is a pleasing picture—one that can be featured on almost any program.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Robert North Bradbury.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Faith of the Strong," Mitchell Lewis' new Select picture, which comes to the ——— on ——— of ——— week, is a virile story of the Canadian Northwest, where men and women live according to their own code of morals, and to violate them is to die. Its chief character is Paul La Rue, a fearless and lawless member of the lumber camp of Louis Rey. The camp is divided into two factions—one, the lawless element ruled by La Rue; the other, the church-supporting population which lives under the kindly government of the community minister.

Yet beneath La Rue's rough exterior, his fearless disregard of life there lurks the utmost tender feeling for women. And so he rescues Babette, a girl of the woods, from Jean Follet. The latter burns the church and La Rue, who has experienced a change of heart toward the house of worship, plunges into the seething flames to rescue the bible. And when he is dying from his wounds the result of his rash act, he has occasion to bring a blessing to Ena, who has run away from her supposed husband, by offering to marry her and give her expected child a name. La Rue fights the battle against death. He wants to live in order to mete out punishment toward Follet. And when that opportunity presents itself Ena gives Jean by declaring that she loves him.

But the brute earns his just deserts for he is killed by a dog when attacking Babette again. Thus Paul wins his wife's friendship and love. Mr. Lewis makes La Rue an unforgettable character—a character that will live with his 'Poleon Doret. Other members of the cast include Gloria Payton, Patricia Palmer and Frank Whitson.

PROGRAM READER

Big of body, big of heart. Paul La Rue had a noble regard for women. He might be lawless and careless with men but where women were concerned he could be as gentle as a girl. And he had faith in mankind. How Paul had never regarded the church very highly but when it was set on fire he didn't hesitate to plunge into the flames to save the bible. And he received terrible wounds. But he prayed to live and make his enemy suffer. Then as he thought the end was near he offered to marry a woman, a stranger. She had run away from her supposed husband and her baby would have no name. So big, smiling Paul La Rue, helpless on his cot, graciously offered to marry her. He expected to die but the child would have a name. And so the woman's faith was restored.

How Paul lived and won the love of his wife is told in a stirring finale—a typical Mitchell Lewis finale. It is a BIG story, as "The Faith of the Strong." It presents a theme based upon faith and devotion. Come to this theatre next ———. You won't be disappointed.

Always cast in vital roles, Mitchell Lewis will be seen next in "Faith of the Strong," Select Pictures star series

SUGGESTIONS

Mitchell Lewis is the best actor on the screen when it comes to the interpretation of stories laid in the North country. And since he has made a big name for himself in "The Barrier," "Code of the Yukon," "Children of Banishment," and other vital pictures of the Northwest, you know pretty well how to exploit him. You might mention that the role he has here approaches the unforgettable 'Poleon Doret. And surely your patrons will remember that lovable character. He is supreme in playing the man of the woods.

Spread his name about and use stills of him in his picturesque garb. Bring out the theme and that it shows the power of faith. Mention that the hero goes through fire to establish faith in himself and that he offers a love with no hope of having it returned, merely because of his faith in humanity. Play it up as a stirring melodrama of action and suspense—a melodrama of heart throbs and pathos—a melodrama of sacrifice and conflict. You can dress your lobby in the atmosphere of the picture if you go in for sensational exploitation. But concentrate principally upon the name of the star.

CATCH LINES

He was a fearless, lawless trapper and he scoffed at the church. But he had a big tender heart which had only to be awakened to lead him in the right way. So he plunged into the flames to save the bible. What came of it? See Mitchell Lewis in "The Faith of the Strong."

Far up in the North country where nature rules and man obeys lived Paul La Rue. Big of body, big of heart, he showed a friendship, so beautiful, so strong, that no human power could destroy it.

"THE VIRTUOUS THIEF"

(INCE-PARAMOUNT)

Absorbing Story of a Woman's Sacrifice

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN has come to the front again with another of his absorbing melodramas of a woman's sacrifice and her fight for honor. He has woven his ingredients so compactly that the idea behind the story is made recognizably real. And nowhere does the plot and characterization falter. Indeed these prime essentials are incorporated for their full value which is to hold the attention through ever increasing suspense.

The story has been done before. But that is not important. The idea of a girl who gladly substitutes for her thieving brother in order to spare him the stigma of arrest is always an interesting one. So much so, that audiences will not quickly tire of it. And the story builds surely to its dramatic climax, unfolding on its way a breath of sentiment, a note of pathos, and a gripping conflict between the employer and his wholesome stenographer.

If there is any flaw in the structure it can be found in the finale which is arranged too quickly to be wholly consistent. A crime figures which supplies an element of mystery. Yet this is largely counteracted by the arbitrary conclusion. Still the picture is absorbing all the way. Enid Bennett makes a charming heroine. The others fitted.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Enid Bennett in a picture of human frailties with the elements of action and suspense ever dominant will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "The Virtuous Thief" is the name of it and it bears the Ince-Paramount brand. Miss Bennett has been identified with a number of good things at the ———, but the management is of the opinion that her latest offering eclipses anything in which she has ever appeared. "The Virtuous Thief" was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, which is sufficient proof of its excellence. Indeed he is the acknowledged leader among screen authors and his latest contribution is good testimony of his ability. Fred Niblo was the director in charge and his work deserves the highest praise. He has kept alive the dramatic highlights and the moral of the theme with admirable appreciation.

Miss Bennett is seen as Shirley Armitage, a stenographer, who goes to work for a scoundrel to save the honor of her brother who in a moment of temptation robbed his employer. This man takes advantage of the power he holds to attempt the ruin of the girl. Her brother's written confession is in the safe and when she seeks to gain it the employer appears. And she is further compromised when Haskell's wife follows in order to gain evidence for divorce proceedings. Later in the evening Haskell is mysteriously murdered. Suspicion points to Shirley.

How she is able to establish her innocence and restore faith in her brother is a clever dramatic turn, one that will give a refreshing finish to the picture. Miss Bennett is charming in her role and she has been surrounded by an unusually strong cast including Niles Welch, Lloyd Hughes, William S. Conklin, Dorcas Matthews and others.

PROGRAM READER

Dick Armitage didn't mean to steal from his employer. And he thought by making a clean breast of the affair that the theft would be quickly forgotten. But he did not know Walter Haskell. Stern, vindictive, the latter warned him that he would be arrested if the money was not restored in three days. And the evidence was against him in the shape of a written confession. But Dick had a sister, Shirley, who gladly accepted the responsibility of saving the family honor. She would go to Haskell, become his stenographer, and thus repay her brother's theft. But she didn't reckon on his unholy love. Try as she might she could not obtain the confession until the "other woman" came. Then—

But you must see this absorbing drama of a woman's fight for the honor of the family. It presents one stirring episode after another.

Enid Bennett is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "The Virtuous Thief," a Paramount offering

SUGGESTIONS

There is a special apeal about this feature which should net you good box-office returns if you advertise it as a tale of a woman's sacrifice and love for her family. It should have an appeal for the business men of your audience—also the office girls—the girls who are employed in clerical capacities. Treat it in a dignified way as a story which presents a deal of truth of the pitfalls which an unsuspecting girl may find before her when she steps into the business world. Treat it as a mystery. Use your catch lines so that the plot is more or less hidden. And play up the title and the author. In fact your patrons should be well acquainted with the name of C. Gardner Sullivan by this time.

Feature the star and mention the other fine pictures she has had in the past. Bring special attention to that other admirable picture of hers—"The Haunted Bedroom."—Doubtless your patrons will recall it when you feature "The Virtuous Thief." Your advertising should suggest the character of the story. Concentrate upon its atmosphere and give a prize for the best definition of the title. Ask your patrons "can a thief be a thief and be virtuous at the same time?" Teasers in the shape of the above would be be a good advertising angle.

CATCH LINES

Her brother had dishonored himself. For his sake she must save him. But when her scheme was working well she found herself trapped. She too, was branded as a thief. But when the reckoning came! You'll be glad you saw "The Virtuous Thief."

She had opened the safe and the evidence was within her grasp. Suddenly she saw a hand on the knob of the door. Caught! She had spurned this man's unholy love but he had carefully laid his plans.

"FOREST RIVALS"
(WORLD)

World Offers Romance in Canadian Wilds

ANY story which has for its background primitive love, set against the forest primeval, is certain to contain an appealing quality. Thus, while the subject matter of World's latest offering is cut from an ancient pattern, still it has its compensation through the primitve romance, and the atmosphere which is generated. There are times when the arbitrary arm of coincidence reaches out and robs the feature of its suspensive note. And at other times the story becomes unduly theatrical. Yet this condition is due principally to the idea which is not endowed with sufficient strength to carry over five reels.

The result is the director has been compelled to use repetitious scenes. The primitive spirit, however, has been excellently caught. A daughter of the woods breaks the bonds of her environment and marries outside and above her station. And to accomplish this a wealth of conflicts is given expression. A matter-of-fact story, but one which please after a modest fashion, because it takes the spectator back to nature.

Certain details might have been caught more accurately and some of the players might have appeared more lifelike. However, Arthur Ashley and Dorothy Green enacted the principal roles in a fitting manner.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 15.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Julie Lamont ..... Dorothy Green
Tom King ..... Arthur Ashley
Henri Lamont ..... Jack Drumier
Harry Reynolds ..... Kempton Greene
Jean Dubois ..... Clay Clement
Pierre Dubois ..... John Davidson
Andre ..... Frank Montgomery
Marie ..... Evelyn Axzel
Isabel King ..... Madge Lee
By Charles Sarver.
Directed by Hary O. Hoyt.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley are the stars of the World Picture, "Forest Rivals," which comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———. This is a thrilling story laid in the wilds of Quebec. And so it presents primitive people who are involved in primitive passions. The primeval forests compose an ideal background for the characters. All of Miss Green's winsomeness and Mr. Ashley's charm of manner are called into play during this fast moving drama.

For former is seen as Julie Lamont whose father is engaged in illicit dealing in whiskey, while Arthur Ashley plays the part of an American engineer who is surveying territory in the woods. Inasmuch as Julie is the only white representative of her sex in the community naturally she is much sought after by the Dubois brothers who are whiskey smugglers. Julie abhors the suitors and will have nothing to do with them. And when each plans to carry her off a war between them follows. The girl makes her escape to the Haunted Rock where the American, Tom King, and his friend, Reynolds, find her. And because Tom is a strange type and comes from a different world, Julie falls in love with him. A love which is reciprocated. The jealous brothers attempt to kill King but he successfully outwits them and in the end is left unmolested to take care of his new-found love.

A pretty romance punctuated with thrilling action, the whole of which is laid in a charming setting of virgin forest. Such is "Forest Rivals," a story from the pen of Charles Sarver and directed by Harry O. Hoyt. The stars are surrounded by such competent players as Jack Drumier, Kempton Greene, Clay Clement, John Davidson and others.

SUGGESTIONS

The principal angle to emphasize in this feature is the nature of the story and its setting. As it is a tale of the North country it would be the best plan to bring out the atmosphere in every possible way. Make much of the scenery for there is a wealth of woodland uncovered. The title is attractive and can be advertised in the shape of catch lines and teasers. It suggest a story of the woods—a story of intense rivalry in love. Mention that the story concerns three men and a girl—two of whom are from her own environment.

Emphasize that it carries a gread deal of action and suspense and that the thrills fairly crowd each other to find expression. Tell that it concerns primitive love as found in primitive forests. And don't neglect the stars. Arthur Ashley has long been a World satellite, having appeared in a number of plays. And Dorothy Green has been featured a number of times. The other members of the cast might be mentioned for the benefit of your "fan" patronage. You should play up the picture with plenty of atmosphere.

Scene from "The Forest Rivals," a World offering with Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley

PROGRAM READER

Julie Lamont was a product of the Quebec wilds and she longed to burst the bonds of her environment. All around her the men she knew were engaged in smuggling whiskey to the Indians. Especially vicious were Jean and Pierre Dubois and they were intensely jealous of one another. Now there happened to be an American engineer, one Tom King, who was surveying land in her vicinity. And he discovered her plight and fell in love with her. She was so different from the women of his environment—this untamed creature of the wilds. So Tom and the Dubois brothers became forest rivals. And they fought to the death for the hand of the girl.

Such is this story of the wilderness which comes to the ——— next ——— under the title of "Forest Rivals." It is crowded with a tense line of action which will thrill you through and through. Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley are the stars. It is a World Picture. Come and see it. It is dramatic and picturesque.

CATCH LINES

Jean and Pierre Dubois were children of nature. They lived in the wilds of Quebec and both were jealous rivals for the heart of Julie Lamont. And in the depths of the forest they had another rival in an American. What happened? See "The Forest Rivals."

In which a daughter of the woods hears the call of civilization as uttered by an American. See Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley in "Forest Rivals."

She had no place to seek refuge from her hated suitors. But into the wilds plunged an intrepid American and she found a haven of rest at his camp. Follow her adventures in "Foresst Rivals," a picture of primitive love enacted against primeval forests.

Quick as a flash she drew her gun and the bullet sped on its mission.

"THE SUNDOWN TRAIL"
(UNIVERSAL)

Salisbury Has Compelling Story Here

MANY have been the stories written around the gold-mad days of California, and Bret Harte and all his successors have been drawn upon time and again for the screen. It would seem as if nothing new could be told about this picturesque chapter of American pioneer life. Yet J. G. Hawks comes along and by elaborating certain details has contributed one of the most vital stories of that period which have ever graced the screen.

It is mostly a thing of characterization rather than drama, for it presents several unique studies of types. Still the conflict is there and grips you with its power. The author has utilized the idea of the marriage market. Which is novel to say the least. The lonely miners conceive the plan of bringing women to the camp in wholesale lots—respectable women who migrate from the East and South. And in their number is one who furnishes the keynote of the drama.

Stirring scenes punctuate the plot, one of which depicts man against man. Not a fight with fire arms but with bowie knives. Other truthful details are present in rich abundance. The atmosphere, the backgrounds, the quaint people are real. A theatrical note here and there will be easily forgotten. Monroe Salisbury portrays a heroic role that will live in the memory. Exhibitors can't go wrong here.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

"Quiet" Carter ..... Monroe Salisbury
Velvet Eddy ..... Clyde Fillmore
The Girl ..... Alice Elliot
Mexican Girl ..... Beatrice Dominguez
The Planter ..... Carl Stockdale
By J. G. Hawks.
Scenario by Waldemar Young.
Directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Monroe Salisbury, the popular Universal star, will come to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest photoplay entitled "The Sundown Trail." This is a story of the gold-mad days of California—a story which can be told in a thousand versions and still interest redblooded Americans. "The Sundown Trail" follows the river bank and in the camp of Spanish Bar lives its most respected citizen, "Quiet" Carter. The community doesn't boast any members of the feminine sex, so it is arranged to import several respectable women to drive loneliness from the hearts of the miners. The wagon train arrives and the lucky miners draw their selections and marry on the spot. "Quiet" Carter does not hold a lucky number and is content to remain a bachelor.

Now among the ladies is a girl who has a deeper mission than to become the wife of a stranger. She is after her child who has been kidnapped by Velvet Eddy, a notorious gambler. A quarrel ensues between him and Carter and the latter lives. The dying man's last request is that the child be taken care of. So "Quiet" assumes the responsibility. In the meantime the young mother has met with an accident which robs her of her memory. And Carter gladly offers her a home and protection. When the Vigilantes threaten to run her out of camp (they mistrust her to be a scarlet woman) her benefactor marries her. And her memory comes back when her villainous brother-in-law arrives and carries her back to Virginia.

Carter is nearly broken-hearted, but he discovers evidence which establishes her true identity. And his sorrow is turned to happiness when she believes in him. So they return along the Sundown trail. Mr. Salisbury contributes a lifelike portrayal of the Forty-niner and his support is entirely capable. Rollin Sturgeon directed the picture from a story by J. G. Hawks.

SUGGESTIONS

You can make up your mind to give this feature all the exploitation it can stand. It is one of the best things of its kind ever screened. So play it up to the limit. Stories of '49 are ever popular. There is a glamour about that period in American history which has endured and will continue to endure. Feature it as a romantic but stirring drama of the gold-mad days of California. The title would be a good leader for your catch lines. And you can get up some interesting copy about the courageous Argonauts who journeyed to California with no thought of the morrow—with no thought other than to make the earth give up its golden treasure.

Send out your circular letters here. Get in touch with the people who don't come very often. They will be your patrons after seeing this. Play up the star. He is always dependable. And you can bank on him and his popularity. Dress up your lobby in the atmosphere of the story. And have your music appropriate. Dress your ushers in crinolines. You can spend money here and it will be returned to you in box-office.

PROGRAM READER

Don't you like to pick up a story of the days of '49 when that courageous band of Americans settled down in California to hunt for the golden treasure? Don't you like to see such a story picturized upon the screen? Doesn't it cast a spell over you and don't you live the spirit of that picturesque period? Aren't you thrilled with the atmosphere? Don't you wish you could have lived for a day at least in the pioneer West—to have experienced the sensation of finding gold?

You can live it for an hour—a thrilling, satisfying hour next ——— when Monroe Salisbury comes here in "The Sundown Trail." You will forget time and environment when you see this picture of the days of '49. One thing is certain, these strange explorers lived. Some were black of heart, others were clean. But they LIVED. They fought, they drank, they danced, they loved. And they did all these things with fierce abandon. The morrow? Why it might never come. So they LIVED. So live with them next ———.

CATCH LINES

A tale of the days of '49—a tale of the gold-mad days of California—a tale which is irresistible in its appeal. Such is "The Sundown Trail." Don't miss it.

They were lonely miners—these men of Spanish Bar. They had gone west in '49 and left the girls behind them. Now they were lonely. And they wanted wives. And the women came—a lovely group of women from the South. This is only one of the interesting incidents of "The Sundown Trail."

Would you be as adventurous as your grandmother? Would you go by wagon train to a strange country to marry men who are total strangers? Not likely. Yet these brave women of '49 did just that. And they were proud of it! See "The Sundown Trail."

Arthur F. Beck Is a Man of Many Activities

Quiet Personality Cloak That Covers Doings in Varied Companies; Successful Productions

A QUIET young man who has been known up and down Broadway these many moons as "having something to do with motion pictures," but whose leisurely and smiling habit may have suggested to certain of his friends that the "something" was more or less indirect and academic, was suddenly asked by an interviewer to state just what covered his sphere of activities.

Arthur F. Beck, the said quiet young man, revealed himself as president and treasurer of Artco Productions, Inc., now engaged in producing a series of six special productions starring Leah Baird in Broadway plays by Augustus Thomas—two have already been released on the world's markets, namely, "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano," just being released this week. In both of these, Leah Baird has done some of the finest work of her screen career. The Hodkinson Corporation is enthusiastic over the records of first-run exhibitors, who report phenomenal business on "As a Man Thinks." The third of the Artco series is just now in course of production—"The Capitol"—the company being this week in Washington, D. C., where most of the scenes are laid.

Mr. Beck is also president and treasurer of Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc., now in the eighth week of production on the fifteen-episode serial, "The Isle of Jewels," starring Stuart Holmes and Miss Frankie Mann and a big supporting cast headed by Wilfred Lytell. This is being produced for Pathe for release in October.

As executive in the new film of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., producing a series of four big specials per year for W. W. Hodkinson, distributed through Pathe, Mr. Beck has Doris Kenyon under his wing in stories by Louis Joseph Vance. The final week of production on "The Bandbox," the first of this series has convinced the entire Beck organization that this will be one of the season's big successes. Says Mr. Beck:

"Miss Baird's next Thomas play, "The Capitol," is one of the finest plays Thomas ever wrote and one which has a star role to which Miss Baird is admirably suited. I shall be ready in a few days to make a special announcement with regard to the plans for Miss Baird after the ensuing year.

"Doris Kenyon, who is known for very fine things in the way of emotional pictorial drama, has a play in the Louis Joseph Vance story, 'The Bandbox,' which suits her better than anything in which I have ever seen her. Miss Kenyon will be starred in several other plays already selected, the titles of which I wil lreveal later.

"We are already pretty well fixed for talent, among the well known names on the payroll being those of Leah Baird, Doris Kenyon, Stuart Holmes, Frankie Mann, Wilfred Lytell, John Webb Dillon, Alexander Gaden, Robert E. Haines, William Davidson, Billy Welch, Walter McEwan, Gretchen Hartman, Donald Hugh McBride and others.

"I have acquired the rights to plays by four other big authors in addition to Augustus Thomas, Louis Joseph Vance and Charles T. Dazey. Mr. Dazey wrote the serial, 'The Isle of Jewels,' which struck the Pathe organization as being one of the best bits of romantic pictorial drama in sustained form that they have ever run across.

"Our directorial staff so far includes Perry Vekroff, who directed Alice Joyce, Olga Petrova and many other famous picture stars; George Irving, who used to be one of Charlie Frohman's best and is now directing Miss Baird's plays, and R. William Neil, who after finishing the Paramount-Artcraft production, 'The Career of Katherine Bush,' took up the reins for 'The Bandbox' and with Miss Kenyon is enthusiastic over the possibilities of this mystery story.

"We are using in our present producing activities, the Biograph studio in the Bronx, the Pathe studios in Jersey City and the Crystal studios and laboratories, besides crowding the Erbograph Company with laboratory work All told, I may say that we are fairly busy and that we hope to be still busier, as next week will see the announcement of two more important acquisitions to be distributed during the coming year by one of the country's big distributors." We might add, the interesting fact that Arthur F. Beck is today the biggest individual producer in America. All of the Beck enterprises are under his personal supervision and few men in this focal center of picture activity have been busy to better purpose.

Indigestion Weakly Makes Its Bow

The first release of the Bulls-Eye news absurdity, "The Weakly Indigestion," has made its appearance. Eight current news items are cleverly burlesqued in from one to three scenes. According to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, which is behind the venture, "The Weakly Indigestion" is the most novel form of screen entertainment devised. Mr. Cohen states that the news items contained in the "Weakly" are all authentic and that the offering differ from the "regular" news weekly only in treatment. A large number of state rights buyers have already contracted for the novelty, which is released weekly in one reel.

Roof Garden Set in "Lombardi, Ltd."

A roof garden theatre, the stage of which has a proscenium opening of 36 feet and a proscenium height of only ten feet less, was designed by M. P. Staulcup and erected on one of the dark stages at the Metro studios in Hollywood, for "Lombardi, Ltd." the comedy drama by the Hattons in which Bert Lytell is starred for Screen Classics, Inc., under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General.

New Bulls-Eye Home

On September 10 the studios of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation will be removed to 5815 Santa Monica Boulevard. Hollywood, formerly occupied by the Clifford Photoplay Corporation. Milton L. Cohen, Bulls-Eye president, who returned to New. York recently from the coast, personally inspected and approved the new studios.

Aero Landing on Fox Studio

Plans Being Altered to Permit of a Landing to Hold at Least Two Planes

ANOTHER novel feature is contemplated for the new William Fox building—the biggest motion picture plant under one roof in the world—which is now well on its way to completion at Tenth avenue, 55th and 56th streets—two minutes from Broadway.

William Fox has taken up with his architects, William Dried and the firm of Carlson & Wiseman, the practicability of erecting on the roof of the new building the first airplane landing platform for passenger-carrying planes in New York City.

In accordance with Mr. Fox's suggestions, draftsmen are engaged upon alterations in the original plans to allow for the addition of this structure, permitting the landing of at least two regulation passenger planes, with hangars for even more.

The platform is to be made of an all-steel framework, and is to be so designed in relation to the roof proper that it will not interfere with the superb lighting facilities which are to be made the outstanding feature of the new studios.

Upon the completion of the upper story and roof of the building, it is planned to continue along with the erection of this platform, so that it will be completed within the time schedule on which the contractors are working—the building to be ready for formal opening ceremonies October 1st.

To accomplish this, the contractors will engage a special crew of workmen for the airplane platform alone, and work will be pushed with all speed, regardless of expense, to finish on time.

Work so far on this unique building has progressed finely, and it is declared by the Fox officials that they will have not only the most beautiful studio in the world, but the most complete plant for the production of photoplays from start to finish. Every facility known to modern science is being made a part in a genuine thing ot beauty. Brick and marble, offset by clean white concrete, steel and bronze, are the principal materials used in the construction, and the effect is said to be exceedingly artistic.

De Havens Finishing Up a Comedy

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven of the National Studios have nearly completed the latest of their de luxe comedies entitled, "Boys Will Be Boys." William Seiter, who is responsible for the production of all of their recent successes, is directing. The story was written by him in collaboration with Bob McGowan.

Hutchinson Leaves the Western Photoplays

Charles Hutchinson, "stunt" player in a number of serials and latterly with Western Photoplays, Inc., for whom he made "The Great Gamble" serial, has severed his connection with that company through an arrangement mutually satisfactory.

More Trade Showings on "Six Feet Four"

American Film Company representatives in various key cities of the country are arranging to hold trade showings of "Six Feet Four," the big six-reel special feature of American life which has been in course of production at "Flying A" studios and laboratories for the past six months.

"Six Feet Four" was adapted by Stephen Fox from the popular novel by Jackson Gregory and was filmed under the direction of Henry King. William Russell plays the role of "Buck" Thornton, known as "Six Feet Four" by reason of his generous allotment of inches. In the supporting cast are Vola Vale, Harvey Clark, Charles K. French, Clarence Burton, Al Garcia, Jack Brammall, Jack Collins, John Gough, Calvert Carter, Perry Banks and Anne Schaffer.

The production is released by Pathe.

A Christie Comedienne

Lillian Biron, who was formerly connected with Mack Sennett comedies, has been engaged by Gaiety Comedies, Inc., to play leads with George Ovey, the featured comedian in the new series of Gaiety Comedies, the first of which is being produced in Los Angeles and which will be released through a chain of independent exchanges.

Metro's Cast Director

Melvin Ballerino, formerly connected with Motion Picture Service Bureau in Los Angeles, has been engaged to cast players for Screen Classics, Inc., and Nazimova Productions. Mr. Ballerino will be assisted by Joseph Whalen.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Universal Newsettes

FOUR feature productions are in course of being staged at Universal City. Of these, the most elaborate is said to be "His Greatest Success," which is being prepared by Eric Von Stroheim from a story written by Baroness de Meyer. The production will have an all star cast, including Sam de Grasse, Una Trevelyn, Clyde Fillmore, Maude George, Leo White and May Bush.

Mary MacLaren's current starring vehicle, "No Experience Required," is being directed by Eddie Kull under the supervision of Tod Browning. The story was written by Frank R. Adams and Violet Clark prepared the screen version. The supporting cast includes David Butler, Johnnie Cook, Carl Stockdale, Lydia Knott and Charlotte Woods.

Henry McRae is prepared to take a company to Japan where oriental scenes will be made for the new serial starring Marie Walcamp and titled "Petals of Lao Tze." Harlan Tucker plays opposite Miss Walcamp, and initial scenes have been made. The story was written by J. Allen Dunn and the continuity by George Hively.

Director Douglas Gerrard is preparing for the cast of the Monroe Salisbury vehicle, "Buried Alive," a story written by F. McGrew Willis.

"The Story of the Tiger Hunt," written and produced by Major Jack Allen has been completed at the Universal.

Director Reeves Eason is filming a two-reel western melodrama, "The Fighting Line," written by Karl Coolidge and scenario by Jack Jevne. Art Acord and Mildred Moore are playing the principal roles, and the supporting cast includes George Fields, Chris Enriquez and Charles Newton.

Florence Turner is directing and playing the leading role in "The Village Blacksmith," a one-reel comedy. Gwendolyn Logan is author of the story.

The signing of a contract for world rights on "The Confession," Henry Walthall's latest. Left to right, Bertram Bracken, director; Arthur Bernstein, promotion manager for George H. Davis, who is signing, and on the right Isidore Bernstein, producer

Director Norman Dawn is taking the finishing scenes for "Lasca," the six-reel special feature starring Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts. The story was adapted for the screen by Percy Heath from the poem written by Frank Duprez.

At the Ince Plant

TWO new subjects have been begun and two are well under way toward completion at the Thomas H. Ince studio at Culver City. Of the new productions, Charles Ray, in a comedy being directed by Jerome Storm under the working title of "He Who Hesitates," finds himself in another role specially fitted to his unique skill at characterizations. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, the leading woman is Millicent Fisher, while others in the cast are George Webb, Thomas Guise and Andrew Robson.

Production of the third of the comedy dramas being made by Thomas H. Ince, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May co-starred, has been begun with material adapted from the stage success, "Mary's Ankle." The continuity was written by Luther E. Reed.

"Americanism vs. Bolshevism," the big Ince special, has nearly been completed and director Fred Niblo has succeeded in putting in film most of the large spectacular scenes, in some of which an army of one thousand Bolsheviks was employed. The special is said to be one of the strongest presentations of the sociological situation in the United States that has been screened. In it Lloyd Hughes plays one of the principal roles, supported by an all-star cast.

Hobart Bosworth, his director, Irvin Willat, and their company have returned to the studio from San Francisco where many scenes were made of the Pacific battle fleet at the harbor there, for the special Ince production starring the noted actor.

Paramount-Artcraft

CHANGES in executive forces resulting from a preliminary announcement several weeks ago, developed the week of September 1st, when Charles Eyton became general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky forces on the west coast, succeeding Milton E. Hoffman, who has left for the east for special duties at the eastern plant after which he will go to London to assume charge of Famous Players-Lasky British Productions, Ltd. Under the general management of Mr. Eyton, Fred Kley becomes studio manager at the Lasky studio, while Frank E. Garbutt will have the management of the Morosco plant. Preparation for the additional productive activities at the coming season being made at the Morosco studio include the construction of a new glass stage which it is said will be one of the largest on the coast.

Cecil B. de Mille began production this week of "Why Change Your Wife," the companion piece to "Don't Change Your Husband." Tom Meighan and Gloria Swanson will have the leading roles with Alvin Wyckoff at the camera.

Having completed the latest production for his diminutive star on the west coast, Walter Edwards left for New York on September 15th, where he will resume direction of Marguerite Clark in the first of her new series to be produced in the east for which the working title has been chosen "Easy To Get." Fred Robinson, Director Edwards' assistant, accompanied him.

Bryant Washburn, Donald Crisp, his director, and several of the company have left for Chicago where scenes will be made in the business district for the latest Washburn picture "It Pays To Advertise." It is expected they will be in the eastern city only for a few days.

Productions of "The Tree of Knowledge" is progressing rapidly under the direction of W. C. de Mille with Major Robert Warwick and Wanda Hawley in the leading roles while Kathleen Williams has the principal heavy part.

Concluding scenes will be made within a week of the latest Wallace Reid picture, "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.", which James Cruze is directing and in which Lila Lee plays opposite the star.

Ethel Clayton is working at the Morosco studio in "More Deadly Than The Male." Robert G. Vignola is directing.

The arrival is expected daily of Harry Houdini from New York to begin production of his next Paramount-Artcraft feature. Reports to the studio indicate that Houdini's latest production, "The Grim Game," made before he went east to fulfill stage engagements is creating a sensation among exhibitors.

About Metro Players

CHANGES in production are noted at the Metro studio, three pictures having been completed and two new ones in course of preparation for staging.

After two months of intensive screen work, in the course of which many elaborate stage settings and unusual detailed care with secondary items were employed, "Lombardi, Ltd.", the striking screen version of the stage success, with Bert Lytell playing the stellar part, has been completed. Final scenes were made the week of September first of a score of "ponies" and show girls, who took part in a theatre scene.

"Fair and Warmer," the farce in which May Allison was starred, also has been completed. After an extended period of production work, final scenes have been made this week of a cabaret scene with the employment of an unusually large number of dancing girls.

"Please Get Married," in which

Charles Parrott, director in chief of Bull's-Eye comedies

Viola Dana stars, is the third to be finished so far as the camera work is concerned. The three are now being cut and titled and are to be the first of Metro's new Screen Classics. Director-General Maxwell Karger has arranged for an all-star production of a story based on "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the play by Thomas Hardy. Alice Lake has been engaged for the leading feminine role.

Newest of the Screen Classics to be filmed is "Old Lady Thirty-One," the Rachel Crothers stage success. The cast for this is now in process of selection.

Vitagraph News Bits

UNDER the direction of Chester Bennett, Earle Williams began work the week of September first on the leading role in an English romance with a Japanese setting called "The Far East." The story was written especially by H. H. Van Loan.

Because the location of his preceding picture, "Vampire Alley," was so rich in material, Noel Smith has begun another two-reel comedy with a New York East Side tenement district setting. In it Jimmy Aubrey Dick Smith and Babe Hardy are featured and unusual action, it is said, is obtained in the back yards of the tenement teeming with humorous incidents in the lives of Bowery denizens.

After rehearsal of a week with fifty girls with whom he was staging several dancing numbers, Larry Semon has begun production of his two-reel comedy laid principally in a metropolitan cabaret city depicting the cafe scenes, which is the largest ever built at the West Coast Vitagraph studio, and is said to be complete in every detail even to having a negro jazz band.

The final action has been begun of Montgomery and Rock's production of life in prehistoric sporting days under the direction of Gilbert Pratt. The comedy is said to be replete with amusing side lights on the "stone age stuff."

Fox Studio Doings

WITH a story of an artist's life in Greenwich Village of New York City for a vehicle, Peggy Hyland has begun work in a new feature under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell. Although this noted English actress has been shown principally in stories of a comedy angle, this latest subject, called "A Girl in Bohemia," is said to be straight drama. Included in her support are Joseph Swickard, Elsie Shumway, Edward Cecil and Betty Schade.

Production is well under way of the latest Gladys Brockwell feature, "The Devil's Riddle," under the direction of Frank R. Beall. William Scott has the leading role opposite the star.

Scenes of life among the Boers form part of the South African setting of "The Heritage of Eden," the latest Madlaine Traverse feature being directed by Edmund Lawrence. The company, which began work this week, has spent much of its time on location in Cahuenga Canyon. George McDaniels has been engaged to play opposite Miss Traverse.

Views of a few of the branches of Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope Syndicate, Ltd., of England, through which Vitagraph will send its films broadcast through the British Isles

The Scott Dunlap Company with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair as stars, is in San Francisco obtaining exterior scenes of crowds for Dunlap's latest picture, "A Little Prayer for Rain."

Four comedy companies are at work, under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth, making William Fox Sunshine comedies, while five other comedies have been completed and are being cut and edited.

Director Eddie Cline, with Mme. Le Varnie and Slim Summerville as his principal players, has taken his company to Balboa Beach, where they are staging several bathing scenes.

Roy Del Ruth has "Kewpie" Moran, Blanche Payson and "Tiny" Warde at work in a short comedy regarding which there is much secrecy, as it is said that Del Ruth has succeeded in obtaining the much sought original twist in his productions.

Frank Griffin is directing Marvel Ray, Ethel Teare and Slim Summerville in still a third comedy, while Bill Franey and twenty-four bathing girls are furnishing the action for director Jack Blystone's latest fun-maker.

Here and There

PRODUCTION has been begun by the Robert Brunton organization, with Ernest C. Warde directing, of a forthcoming J. Warren Kerrigan subject, "Live Sparks," a story of the Texas oil fields. Fritzi Brunette plays opposite the star, while in support are Zelma Maga, Clyde Benson, Joseph J. Dowling, John Stepling, Roy Laidlaw and Mary Talbot.

Most of the latest Gale Henry comedies, now being made under the direction of Herman C. Raymaker, will be staged in the air, at an aviation field at Long Beach, California. Miss Henry will be filmed operating a plane at an altitude of 2,500 feet, while Director Raymaker and the cameraman will follow close by in another plane.

First of the new Gaiety Comedies featuring George Ovey is under production, with Craig Hutchinson directing, and Lillian Biron playing the principal feminine role. The material for the story was written by Hutchinson.

Francis Ford has completed his double activities of directing and playing the principal part in "The Mystery of 13," the fifteen episode serial which has just been completed at the studio of the Francis Ford Productions. The film is now in the process of cutting and editing and the first releases are being prepared for the Eastern market.

Production by Louis Burston of "The Hawk's Trail," the fifteen episode serial starring King Baggot, with Rhea Mitchell and Grace Darmond in the principal feminine roles, is well under way at the Burston studios, under the direction of William Van Dyke. The serial is said to be one of a different type, in which Baggot plays what amounts to a Protean role, appearing as an entirely distinct character in each episode.

Hank Mann has resumed work as the principal comedian in a series of short comedies being produced by Morris R. Schlank, following the comedian's discharge from the United States Service. The pictures are in one reel with Madge Kirby playing opposite the comedian, and direction is by Robert Kerr.

Production units for three of the forthcoming features under Goldwyn's new policy of screening "fewer and better pictures," have begun work and the week of September first found each off to a flying start.

Under the direction of Wallace Worsley, the third Eminent Authors' Production, Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," is well under way with the author acting in collaboration with the director. An especially strong cast, it is said, has been chosen in staging the picture, which has Milton Sills and Naomi Childers in the leading roles. Included in the support are Irene Rich, Charles Clary, Alec B. Francis, Jane Sterling and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Victor Schertzinger is author of his latest production starring Mabel Normand which he has just begun. The story as yet has not been titled and grew out of his association with the vivacious comedienne. Cullen Landis again is the star's leading man, while the long cast includes George Nichols, Edward Jobson, William Elmer, Andrew Arbuckle, George Kunkel, Milton Brown, John Burton, Joseph H. Hazelton and Manuel R. Ojeda.

Pauline Frederick has begun playing the principal part in her newest production, under the direction of William Parke, the title of which has not been chosen. Her preceding feature, "Letty," from the story by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, is being prepared for prereviews, and final editing of the subject is being supervised by its director, Frank Lloyd.

Clarence Badger, Will Rogers and their supporting players have returned from Randsburg, California.

Geraldine Farrar began work the week of September first on the third of her series of special Goldwyn productions, playing the stellar role in a Spanish story by an author whose name for the present is being withheld. Reginald Barker is directing and Lou Tellegen is the noted actress' leading man.

AS THE NEW DAY DAWNED.

Policy Principle

BIG WORDS these days. And representing big VITAL things.

Producer-distributor policy today is almost as important as pictures.

Because it spells success or failure to the average exhibitor.

An unsound policy adopted by such a dominant organization as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation would be fatal.

Fatal to all factors—producers, distributors, exhibitors and the picture-supporting public.

We appreciate our great responsibility.

Every policy we have sponsored has undergone the acid test of actual performance.

Each new policy we have announced and put into operation has been based on fundamentally RIGHT principles.

It has, in every instance, supplied the needs and requirements of the great majority of exhibitors.

And, finally, every policy we have advocated has received the eventual support of all right-thinking exhibitors.

We are wasting no time on idle promises.

We point back to our record of achievement.

We stand solidly on past performance.

We have made good with each succeeding policy shaped to fit the times.

We have vision and can accurately gauge our needs as an industry.

We gave you the Feature Program. Then the Star Series.

They solved the problems of their times.

Now we offer you the flexible Selective Booking Policy.

It is the solution of the industry's present problems.

And we shall foresee and prepare for future changes.

POLICY? YES! PRINCIPLE? YES!

WHAT GRAUMAN CAN DO, YOU CAN DO.

AND what did Sid Grauman do?

It was in a week of his greatest competition. Other theatres were billed to play pictures heralded as super-supreme. It was the toughest week of competition he'd had.

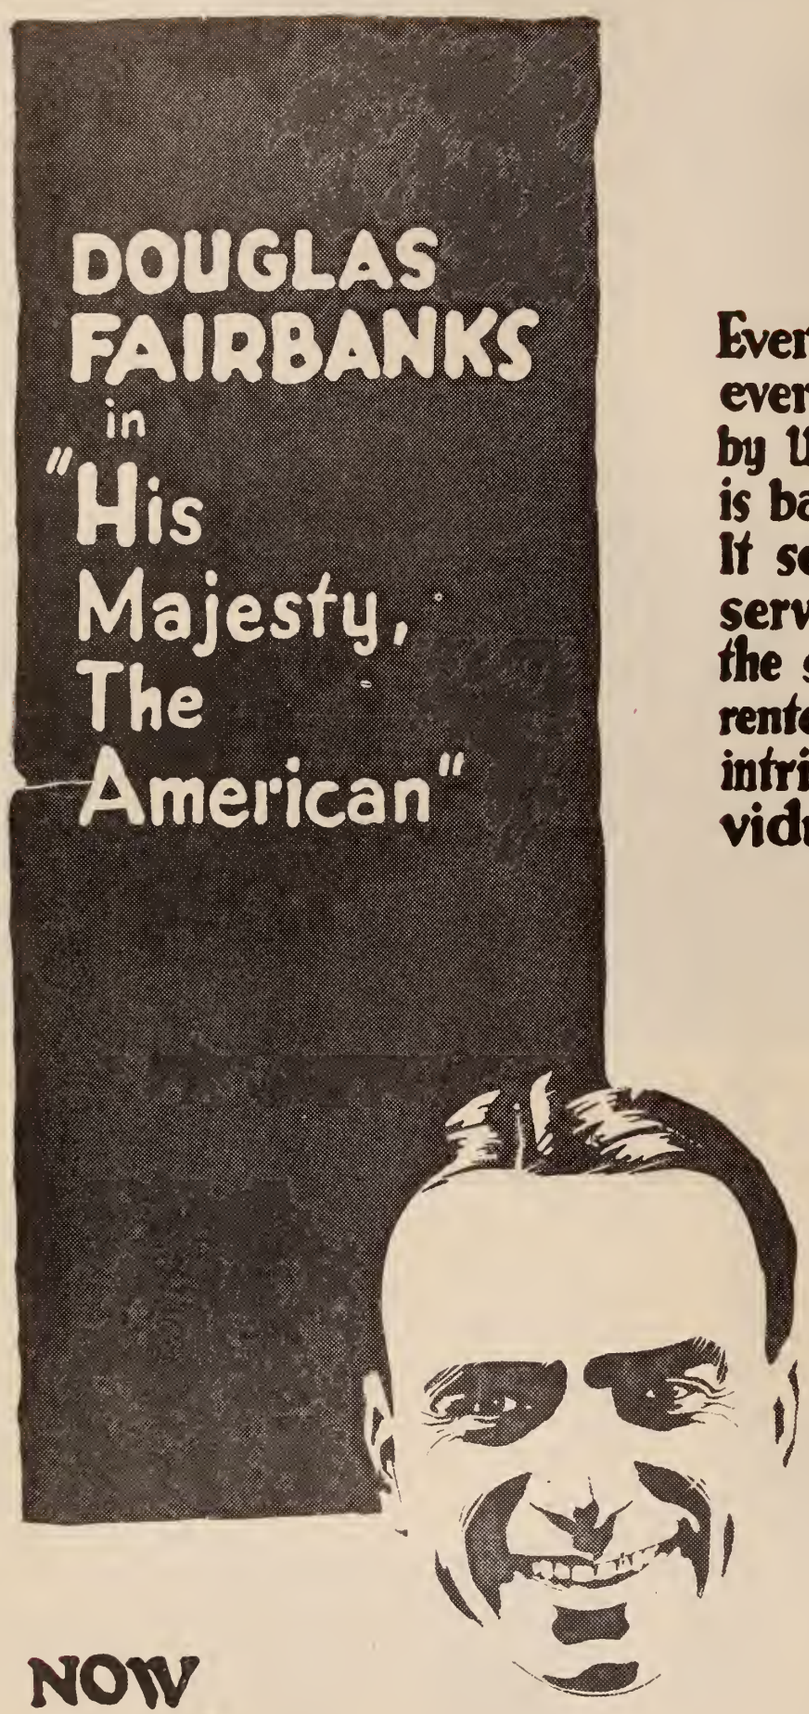
So Sid Grauman featured "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," the Paramount MACK SENNETT Comedy, with Ben Turpin as Uncle Tom. And he packed them in for a week.

He knew it was a feature (though it runs but 2,000 feet). He billed it as a feature, advertised it as a feature and made feature money on the result. A despatch from Los Angeles tells the story:

"Grauman's here billed 'Uncle Tom Without the Cabin' as entire feature. It has created great furore and wonderfully favorable comment. They are doing record business. Theatre packed at every performance against competition of big stars."

What Grauman can do, you can do.

The new season Paramount MACK SENNETT Comedies can be made the big feature of any program, if properly exploited and presented. All that is necessary is for the exhibitor to forget the old precedents and not be afraid of breaking down the old idea that footage and not quality is the feature.



Paramount MACK SENNETT Comedies cost as much to make as the average feature and they have as great drawing power. Try it and see.

What Grauman can do, you can do.

LOS ANGELES EVENING HERALD

KINEMA

There is something about a Salvation Army lassie's blue bonnet that starts a flow of admiration. Particularly is this true since the great war. No other product of the store counter or modiste's shop appeals more strongly to the finer senses of man—or woman. To the wearers of it who risked that which is most sacred to lend a helping hand to distressed mankind we owe a debt of gratitude which we cannot pay, even though we try from now to eternity.

When you are sitting comfortably at the Kinema, this week, in a seat made for your comfort, you will grasp what I mean. The newspapers and magazines have devoted columns and pages to the glorification of the Salvation Army lass and her doughnuts, but in the film, "The Blue Bonnet," you see enacted some of the hardships which were these lassies' lot in France, and then you wonder that you hadn't had greater respect for the wearers of the blue and red before.

The photoplay, splendidly done by the National Film Co., in the making of which President Parsons spared no expense, is the latest vehicle for Miss Billie Rhodes, who, after this picture, is to be known as "The Sunshine Girl." If ever a screen personality spread gladness, certainly little Billie does. Her face radiates wholesomeness, gobs of joy flow with every "ism" of her cunning mannerisms. Watching her dance gayly upon the silver sheet is like dreaming about fairies. Her every action is real and sincere. I can picture but one other actress portraying the sweet, tender-hearted Capt. Ruth, and that is a girl named Mary, whose work before the camera is too well known to require further identification. Billie is simply irresistible.

"The Blue Bonnet" is a "war play" only in the sense of atmosphere. The theme is one that tugs at the heart-strings, swells your throat with pathos and sinks soul-deep the doctrine of tenderness. The battle scenes are realistic enough, especially the "prop" snow, which does not look manufactured at all, and the acting is superb on the part of everybody concerned. This is conspicuously apparent in the case of the interpreter of the pawnshop keeper, whose name I regret to say I cannot recall. The photographer, too, has supplied some excellent scenes of New York life and Director Chaudet was right on the job when the troop-carrying leviathans steamed past the Statue of Liberty. The latter's direction of the photodrama would be flawless were it not for an occasional interruption of plot due to the story making too long jumps. But then the cutter may have been to blame, who knows?

Billie Rhodes had a "prettier" role in her first feature play, "Hoopla, the Circus Girl," but in "The Blue Bonnet" she has more opportunities for real acting. And she takes advantage of them, crowning herself with not only the reviewers' praise but with the fans' plaudits. There are only a few who really cause hard-boiled critics to choke with emotion or sentiment or whatever it is that brings the lump to your throat, and Billie Rhodes is one of them. I suppose she hits thousands of others the same way.

MAJESTIC, GRAND RAPIDS

A PROTEST TO THE TRADE

I am the man who wrote and directed, and acted the leading part in " The Pinnacle," which, I understand, Mr. Carl Laemmle intends to release as a Universal-Jewel Production de Luxe.

" The Pinnacle " is the only picture that I ever directed, or wrote, or acted the leading part in and for that reason, I suppose, I may be accounted " green "—as green as grass—but, just the same, I have my own ideas as to certain practices in the moving picture business, and I am paying for this space to tell you what I think. And I know I am right.

I refer to the growing tendency on the part of company officials to change the titles of pictures without consulting the Author or Director. I say that this action is often ill-advised and almost-without-exception a direct slap at the feelings of the Author—or Director. Specifically, I would refer to " The Pinnacle."

When I went to Mr. Laemmle and sold him this story I sold him more than a mere story—I sold this gentleman part of myself. " The Pinnacle " was the child of my brain—and heart. I had created it—I loved it. I doubt if any author ever put in more time and care—more honest hard work, in building a story than I put into " The Pinnacle." It was written, I might say, with my heart's blood.

And the title was just as much a part of the picture as any scene in it. I had thought of it always as " The Pinnacle "—the name exactly and precisely fitted the picture. It was the only title for it—of that I am sure.

But now Mr. Laemmle—without consulting me—is about to change the title.

He is going to change it to " Blind Husbands."

" Blind Husbands! " Can you imagine it to yourself?

A beautiful title, a meaningful title, a title that meant everything to the man who created it, a title that represented months and years of creative effort in producing this picture—all this tossed away in a moment for a name which is the absolute essence of commercialism. A name in which there is no beauty—no sense of the artistic. A name which I would have rejected in disgust had it been submitted to me. I would, in fact, have been ashamed of myself had I ever thought of it.

Mr. Laemmle says he changed " The Pinnacle "—my creation—to " Blind Husbands," because " Blind Husbands " would draw more people for the theatre. He expressed it as his belief that there were more blind husbands in the world than pinnacles, and that therefore more people would come—and bring their husbands. He said he changed it because he wanted to make sure of its success.

I know the kind of success Mr. Laemmle had reference to.

He meant " commercial success." He did not think of " artistic success." To be sure—the last is already assured him. " The Pinnacle " cannot escape being an artistic success. But I wanted to make " The Pinnacle " (" Blind Husbands," Ugh!) complete in every way. Now—gentlemen—that can not be done. You will have to take a perfect picture with an imperfect title. That is just how strongly I feel about it.

I do not think he did right in changing the title of my picture. And I think that the trade will agree with me that authors have more rights than producers think. I think we should assert them more frequently.

" Blind Husbands " will draw crowds—yes—but already its new name is making its Creator—and Director—and Leading Man very, very sick.

"The DRAGON PAINTER"

THE ultimate in art, in acting, in production has been reached in the latest Hayakawa offering. It towers above them all, as an artistic triumph.

Purely as an exhibition of the veritable last word in splendor and beauty it would be acclaimed. On the merit of Mr. Hayakawa's acting alone it would be extraordinary.

But both of these qualities have been fortified by a plot of rare originality and dramatic sympathy and tension. The wondrously woven picture of art, drama, and skill of performance is a real masterpiece.

This is one the exhibitor will hear old patrons rave over and see new patrons clamor at his doors to see.

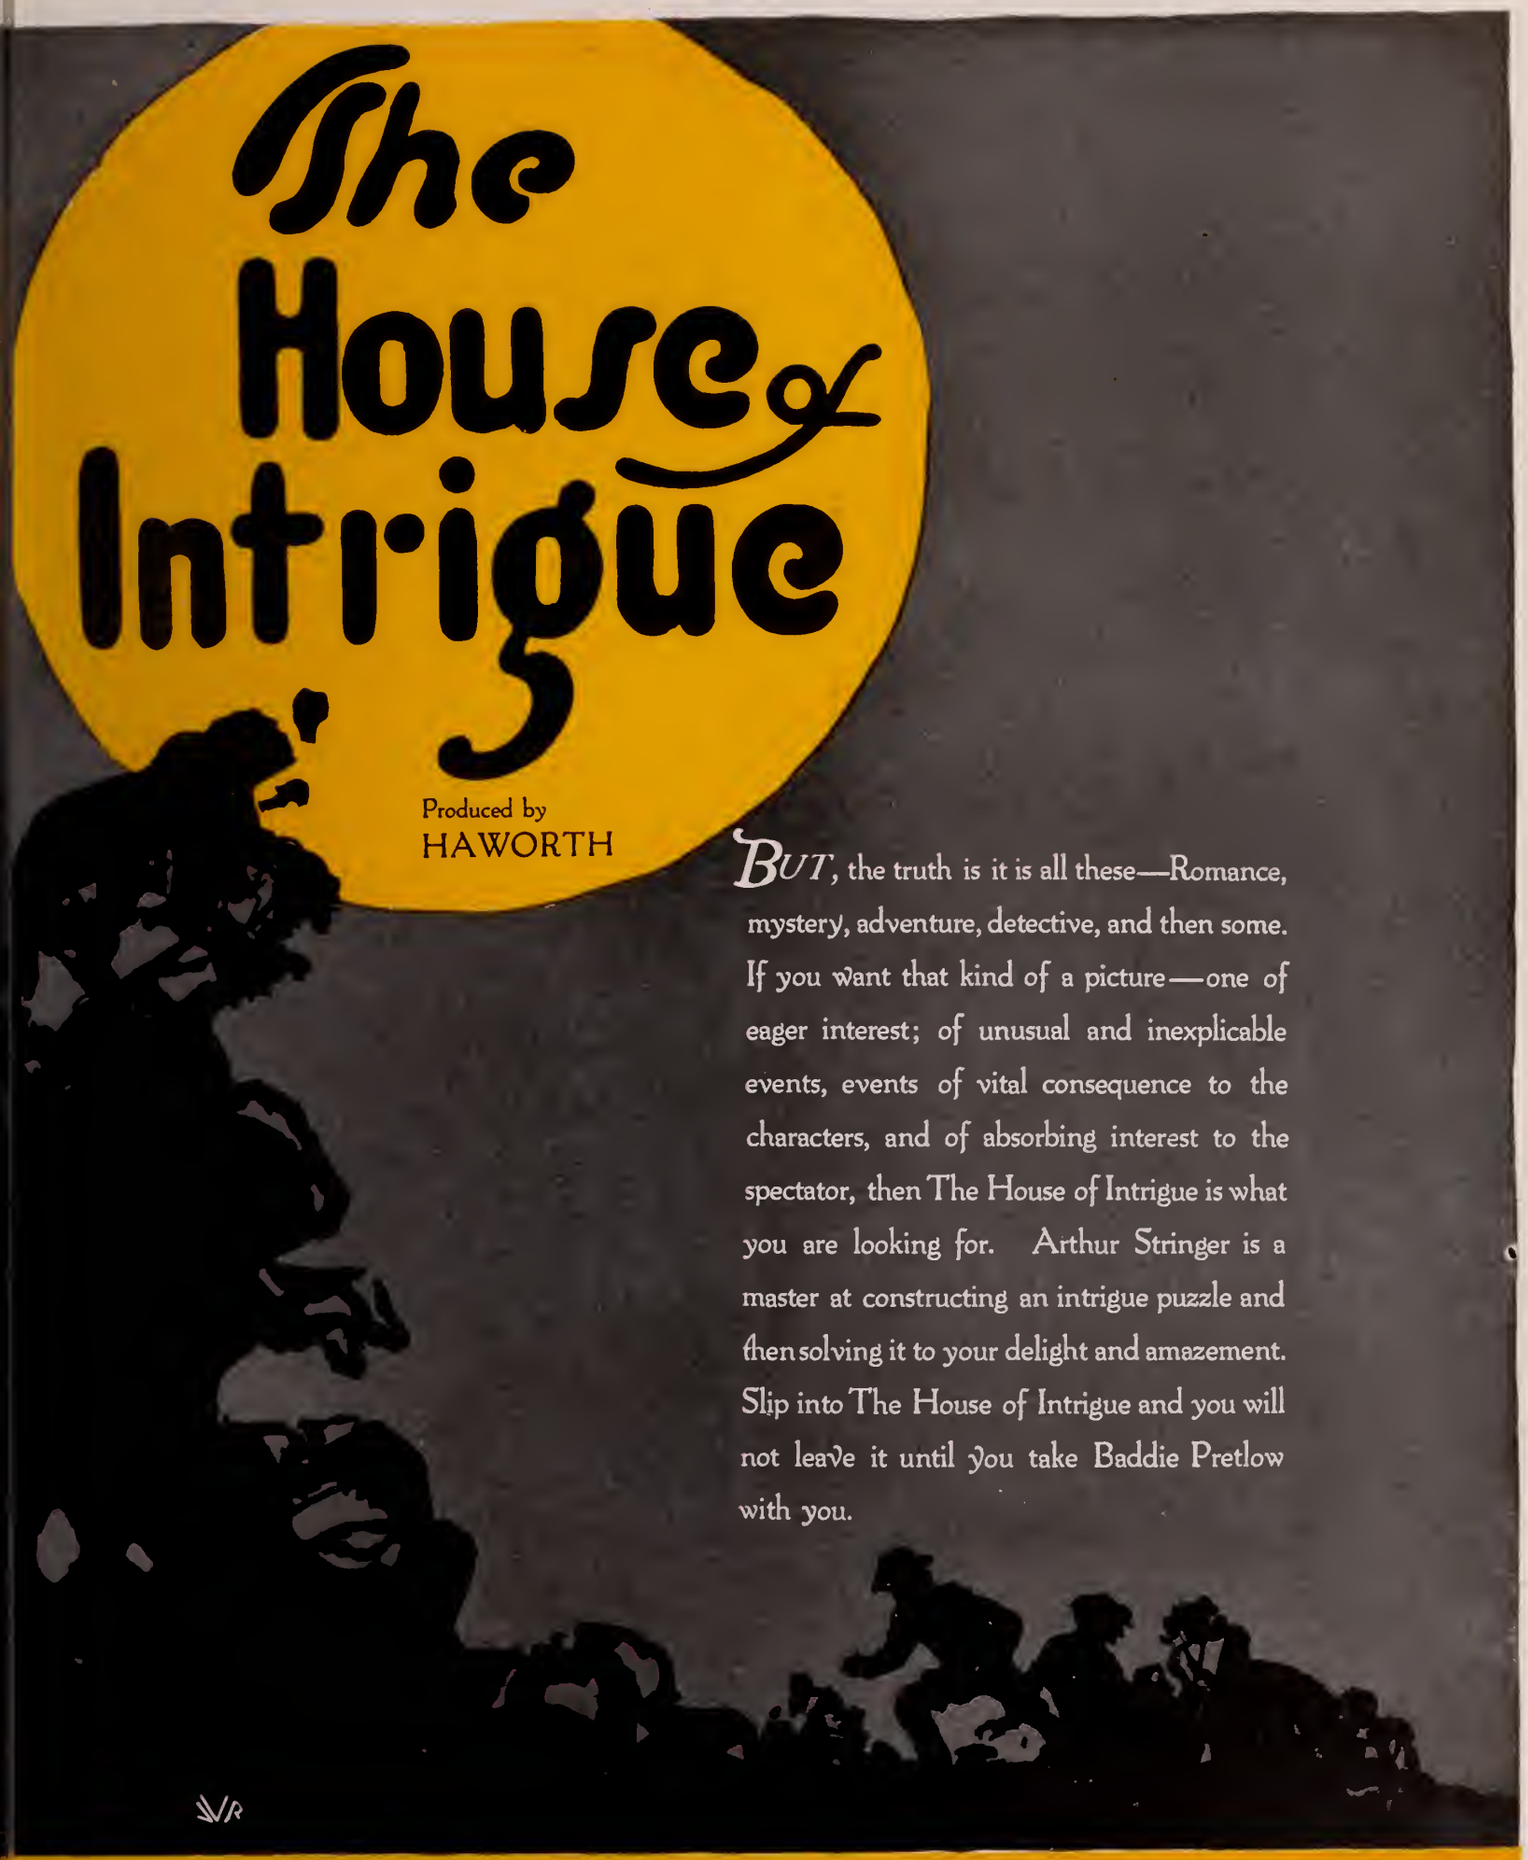
Because there is a detective in it this might be called a detective play.



Because there are many thrilling adventures it might pass as a thriller.

Because there is mystery every moment it would not be unreasonable to set it down as a picture of mystery.

Because there are love and sentiment, touches of humor and bits of delicious background it might pass the censor as a romance.

The House of Intrigue

BUT, the truth is it is all these—Romance, mystery, adventure, detective, and then some. If you want that kind of a picture—one of eager interest; of unusual and inexplicable events, events of vital consequence to the characters, and of absorbing interest to the spectator, then The House of Intrigue is what you are looking for. Arthur Stringer is a master at constructing an intrigue puzzle and then solving it to your delight and amazement. WISDOM

Odin, the greatest of the Norse gods, knew more than any other being—yet he wanted his knowledge to be absolute. So he sought the giant, Ymer, guardian of the well of wisdom. Ymer put Odin to a test of wits that would have baffled any lesser being, and then exacted an exchange of one of the god's eyes for a single draft of the recondite waters that revealed to him alone all truths of ages past or yet to come.

How much more fortunte than Odin is the up-to-date foreign buyer of film! —For though wisdom is as rare today as it was before the Ragnarok, he may read the answer to all his problems by merely directing his intelligent eye to this:—

In 1917, when the war was at its height, we visited every open Capital in Europe, studying critically the motion picture needs of each community. Twice a year since then we have studied the varying and changing conditions on the ground, and all during this time we have been acquiring rights to the finest and most representative of America's film productions, with a special view to their value and appropriateness in Europe.

In other words, we have specialized for you, and made ourselves your experts. We offer standard films of extraordinary value; serials, comedies, scenics, specials and star series, all brand new. "The Last of the Duanes," a gripping photomelodrama, began a two weeks' run at the Central Theatre yesterday. It is a William Fox picture and William Farnum is very much the star. As the hero of this Zane Grey story Mr. Farnum does enough "stunts" to satisfy a half dozen ordinary stars. Buck Duane is an outlaw down in Texas in the days when the Rangers were beginning to bring law and order into that State. But he is a good sort and spends most of his time and the greater part of his energy in fighting other outlaws, the real "bad men" of that part of the country. Finally, by capturing the two worst men in all Texas Duane wins a pardon from the Governor and returns home in triumph. Louise Lovely plays the heroine. The photography is excellent. The thrills provided by Mr. Farnum must be seen to be appreciated, and even jaded movie fans will enjoy this supermelodrama of the screen. A Mutt and Jeff picture and a Sunshine comedy round out the two hour entertainment.

At the Central Theatre William Farnum appears in a film transcription of Zane Grey's novel, "The Last of the Duanes," covering himself with desert dust in a good cause. Word has been quietly slipped to Broadway that this is "the greatest Western melodrama ever screened," and it certainly makes a noble try at that record. Mr. Farnum performed the prodigies of a hero whose curly hair has given him the strength of a Samson.

AT THE CENTRAL.

At the Central Theatre there is a new programme headed by William Farnum in a Fox picture, "The Last of the Duanes." It is a thrilling story of the West, with Mr. Farnum in a role that gives excellent scope to his powers. Fine photography and a good cast augment a consistent and well-directed story. While the feats of horse riding and the rugged, picturesque background make the picture exciting. Louise Lovely is the heroine. On the programme there is also a Sunshine comedy that gets many laughs. The musical accompaniment is another feature.

William Farnum is the puissant hero of a lively motion picture thriller at the Central Theatre this week, where Zane Grey's novel "The Last of the Duanes" is shown in film form.

It is a story of Texas and the Texas Rangers—a story full of action and with plenty of sentiment.

"The Last of the Duanes" a Vigorous Screen Story—Other New Feature Films.

A vigorous and virile story of the West is told in "The Last of the Duanes," with William Farnum in the star role, which was screened at the Central Theatre yesterday There are enough thrilling stunts and beautiful scenery to tickle the palate of even those who may think they are "fed up" on Western stuff.

The scenario, taken from Zane Grey's novel of the same name, pictures the work of the Texas Rangers. The caption writer, however, must have had his fill of the wild and movie West, for he ended the picture with these facetious words:

"He (the hero) recovers. They are married, live happy ever after and

At the Central Theatre William Farnum is being presented by William Fox in a screen adaptation of Zane Grey's "The Last of the Duanes."

There is a wonderful chase across the mountains and the foothills and an escape via a waterfall that looks to us as high as Niagara. But he does escape and after being hunted for a long time is pardoned, and, as the final title says, succinctly, "This is the end. He recovered. They were married and lived happy ever after and raised a large family of children." We liked that title. Most directors do it by showing the orange blossoms and the baby's cap and their little Cedric playing with a collie at the age of three. But J. Gordon Edwards directed it. That is the answer—or perhaps the credit should go to the title writer.

In the cast are Lonise Lovely, the girl; Frankie Raymond as H. [illegible], vampire.

Mr. Farnum as a Ranger.

William Farnum in "The Last of the Duanes" supplied an interesting photo-drama presented by the William Fox Company in the Central Theatre. Miss Louise Lovely shared the stellar honors in this romance of the famous Texas rangers. Mr. Farnum was resplendent as the ranger, who risked his life daily for the good of Texans and love of Jennie Lee, whose parents were killed by outlaws. The views of the mountains and valleys of Texas are important features.

The picture is adapted from Zane Grey's novel of the same name, and in Buck Duane Mr. Farnum has one of the best roles in his repertoire.

FARNUM'S NEW PHOTO-PLAY THRILLING

"The Last of the Duanes," at Central Theatre, an Immediate Hit.

"The Last of the Duanes," a thrilling picture story woven about the exciting life of the Texas Rangers, is scoring a tremendous hit at the Central Theatre, where it opened Sunday, with William Farnum in the leading role.

The scenario for the play was taken from the novel of the same name by Zane Grey. The production is even more thrilling than the book, because of the manner in which the scenes and dramatic incidents have been picturized.

In addition to the interesting and dramatic episodes in "The Last of the Duanes" the action of the play is speeded up with several spectacular stunts which grip the audience.

William Farnum is unusually well cast in the play, and appears to great advantage in the Southwestern romance, with its picturesque background.

The scenic effects, photographed in the mountains and on the plains, are exceptionally clear and beautiful, and soon made the audience feel that they were actually living the dramatic story as it was unfolded before them on the screen.

Handle With Care!

Statistics presented by Motion Picture News some three years ago first gave birth to "The Eighty Per Center" when they proved that this percentage of the country's motion picture theaters seated less than six hundred and fifty each, and the average admission price was 10½ cents.

The figures served then as a warning to the industry—in its first roseate flush at the discovery of "Big Money and Big Pictures"—and apt to forget all too quickly the "Eighty Per Center" and his problems.

The years intervening have seen travail for the "Eighty Per Center" through war taxes, draft-swept communities, higher rentals, etc. But on the other hand they have seen in many instances an increase and improvement in methods of aiding the "Eighty Per Center" to better exploitation and increased revenue.

Motion Picture News has at present under way a country-wide canvas intended to bring these statistics up-to-date.

Even as compiled to date they prompt no end of interesting calculations. For one thing, they cause us to ask—"Where is the 'Eighty Per Center' of yesteryear?"

Here are the conclusions presented by three hundred and thirty-four theaters in a list of widely scattered cities, towns and villages having an approximate population of three-and-a-half million.

The seating capacity averages at seven hundred and eighty six seats. Two years ago a canvas of the entire country placed it at the five hundred mark.

The admission prices over this list average at 17 cents—including the war tax. Two years ago it clung to the ten cent neighborhood.

Figuring that these theaters fill to their seating capacity one and a half times each day—thus reaching a compromise between the large city theater which assuredly fills over two times a day and the small country theater which opens its doors only that often in a week—we reach the estimate that these theaters are showing to approximately thirteen per cent of their communities population.

Dexteriously reading the law of averages we find that thirteen per cent of 110,000 gives us 14,300,000 as the daily attendance at photoplays in the United States.

Fourteen odd million at an average of seventeen cents a seat and we find that the picture industry has a gross income at the box office of over a million dollars a day!

Three hundred and sixty-five millions a year! Passed over box office slabs in payment for entertainment paid by Mr. and Mrs. Public.

Surely no warning need be repeated that Mr. and Mrs. Public must not be forgotten—even in this year of internal industrial antagonisms and feverish sales activity.

Mr. and Mrs. Public are paying a goodly price for their entertainment. In the year that is coming we are going to ask for more.

Have we given dollar for dollar value in the past? Are we prepared to give dollar for dollar value in the future?

Three hundred and sixty-five millions is a lot of money!

Handle it with care.

[Some one says: "The fly-by-night stock-jobbers will use such figures as you quoted above and flaunt you as authority. We say: "Nay, nay. The wily sucker-hunter won't mention 'Motion Picture News' in his ad. For when the prospective victim learns that there is a trade paper in this field, he writes for information on the proposition and farewell stock jobber."]

Speaking Editorially

Wentworth Tucker

Wentworth Tucker, Assistant-Treasurer and a Director of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Inc., died of pneumonia at Hahnemann Hospital, New York City, Saturday afternoon, September 13th.

Mr. Tucker, whose residence was at 139 East 66th Street, was a prominent insurance man with offices at 1 Liberty Street. He was born at Albany, New York, in 1878, the son of Luther H. Tucker and Cornelia Strong Tucker. His grandfather was the founder and his father the editor and publisher of The Country Gentleman.

He was educated at St. Mark's School and at Union College. He had his business training in the Commercial Bank at Albany and later engaged in business enterprises in Gadsden, Ala.; Baltimore, Md., and Dubuque, Iowa. In New York City, where he returned in 1906, he was Vice-President of the Staten Island Beach Land Improvement Company and Secretary of the New Virginia Syndicate. He was Secretary and Treasurer of Exhibitors' Times, Inc., which was founded in 1913, and later became MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Inc.

Mr. Tucker was commissioned a Captain in the 12th Regiment, N. G. N. Y. He was a member of the Alpha Delta Phi, Army and Navy and Great Neck Golf Clubs. He is survived by a widow, Marion Miller Tucker, and by his brothers, Carl Tucker, of New York, and Luther H. Tucker, of Albany.

Why Not Percentage Booking?

WITH film rentals—especially the first-run figures—increasing at a pace that seems to imply no limit, the question of percentage booking is going to come more and more to the fore during the coming year.

At present there is a natural and wide difference of opinion on the subject among both exhibitors and exchange men. For one thing, no standard basis of reckoning has yet been developed, each individual picture presents its own necessities.

Motion Picture News is anxious to hear from exhibitor and exchange readers on this question. Even more than opinions it is seeking suggestions towards concrete figures. Is it possible to apply the same percentage figures to all productions? On an average, what percentage of the gross receipts constitutes a fair return to the producer? Should there be any considerations in the nature of guarantees—either for the producer on the cost of his picture, or the exhibitor on his overhead and advertising?

Only suggestions from the field on this subject are worth a tinker's dam. A well sharpened pencil, backed by a mathematical brain, can figure out fifty-seven varieties of percentage schemes in New York. But it will be rare if one of the fifty-seven survives contact with a real box-office.

Those Exploitation Men

WE have just received a breezy confidential letter from one of our correspondents in a city somewhere between fifty and a thousand miles distant from New York.

"This city," he writes, "has just had its first experience with the new fangled 'exploitation' and it is one fine farce. Such and Such a Company sent an exploitation 'expert' here to put over—. Would you believe it—there was not a single feature or human interest story in any of the papers prior to its run? Of course, there were a few one sheets placed around town. But why engage an 'expert' to put up one sheets? Manager Smithjones, who put the picture on in cooperation with Such and Such a Company, got out some very attractive ads, arranged a special stage setting, and planned a ministers' meeting to see the picture. The exploitation man looked on."

There's only one moral to this story.

The successful motion picture exhibitor is not entirely a child in arms. And the personal exploitation representatives who presume to aid them must be armed with something more than Broadway reputations.

Welcome to "Contact"

HERE'S a cheery word of welcome for "Contact" the latest entrant in the film house organ field. "Contact's" subtitles describe it as "Sparks from Live Wires. The Between Conventions Meeting Place for First National Boosters."

"Contact" is a real, honest-to-goodness house organ—intended solely for "inside the organization" consumption. It has no message or interest for the exhibitor—First National being satisfied to place its reliance for that function on the established medium, the picture trade paper.

Both for attractiveness of make-up and value of contents we are prepared to award the honors to "Contact." In the handy Printer's Ink size—but, with due reverence, more snappy in appearance—its pages contain a frank exchange of ideas on many important organization subjects. A few of the chapter heads include, "How Louisville Solves the 'One Man Town' Problem," "Time and Money Saving Systems for the Bookers," "Granting Reductions—How, When, Where and Why," "Few Contracts at Big Prices versus Volume at Less Rental," "A Record that Follows Up Contracts for Play Dates."

The President and the News Weekly

"I AM very much interested and deeply gratified to learn that the Fox Film Company is intending to devote its News Weekly to the promotion of universal and lasting peace. It can render the greatest service in this direction. The Moving Picture News Weekly as an educator and a power for good can be made of the greatest service to the nation and to observant people everywhere throughout the world, and I congratulate the Company upon its public-spirited plans."

Such is the text of a letter signed—"Cordially and sincerely, Woodrow Wilson."

Surely an infant News Weekly could hope for no more auspicious christening than a word of benediction from the nation's President; especially when, to that specific word of praise, there is added a general tribute to the screen and its New Weeklies that the entire industry can well cherish.

Almost a Page in History

THE entry of the Hudson Bay Company into the motion picture field through its association with the Educational Films Corporation, as chronicled in the news pages of this issue, marks an event that is almost historic.

Back to our schoolboy days go our recollections of the mystic power of the name "Hudson Bay," of the visions of hardy pioneers and sturdy explorers who carried civilization into the wilderness under its banner.

Surely there is reason for congratulation on both sides. To Earl Hammons and his associates in Educational for the work so well done as to have merited the attention of an organization of "Hudson Bay's" calibre; and to "Hudson Bay" for its well exercised choice in selecting the means of its motion picture debut.

Film Salesmen and the Trade Paper

This Exhibitor Battled Up-Hill to Success, But After Discovering MOTION PICTURE NEWS He Wonders Why Some Salesman Did Not "Put Him Wise" Long Ago

A LETTER FROM W. H. WAGNER

Manager, Carthage Opera House, Carthage, New York

WE are new subscribers to MOTION PICTURE NEWS and what few numbers we have received to date lead us to believe that we've been losing a lot of money by not having subscribed before. Fact is, we accepted your first invitation and you won't have to extend it again.

In a previous letter you asked that we let you know what our policy was and what conditions existed here. I believe that it might prove of interest to some of the small town exhibitors to hear what we have done here.

This house was built about eleven years ago by a local fraternal lodge at a cost of over $50,000, and is one of the best equipped theatres in northern New York. It was financed originally by a bond issue, most of the bonds being circulated among the members of this lodge. Through gross mismanagement the theatre (managed by a committee of six lodge members) went on the rocks and upon failure to pay the interest on the bonds it was sold at a bankruptcy sale for $10,500 and not one of these lodge members ever received a dollar on their investment.

Naturally, every one of them was sore and a natural born knocker for the house. I believe that there was also an agreement that none of them would ever patronize the house or in any way aid in its success. For a period of eleven years it was opened and closed with great regularity by numerous managers, several of whom now are filling pretty big jobs in the film world.

We came in as strangers and after a careful analysis came to the conclusion that the reason for most of these failures was due to the fact that they were licked before they started, in that, knowing the reputation of the house, they were afraid to invest any great sum, and started in buying the very cheapest service. Then they waited to see what would happen—and it usually happened.

On the first of last January we opened with a modest statement that we were going to give the public the best that money could buy, and we gave it to them. From the first day until the present time we have not had to invest another cent, the house has been self-supporting. We broke down the lodge boycott by giving a series of benefits and if a boycott ever existed there is no evidence of it now.

We catered to the classes, the better element, and the masses followed along, as they always do. Our competition, with a main-street location and larger seating capacity, stood the gaff for about three months and then quit cold. (Our house is on a side street and every person who comes in has to be dragged down.)

We buy the best program pictures obtainable and such specials as we can secure and present at a reasonable admission. We care nothing about the age of a picture if it is clean on the town and in good shape.

We only allow an exchange to sting us once. If they tell us it's a special and we find it only a fair program picture, that particular exchange is out of luck; we never give them another opportunity to trim us.

We find most of the exchanges and their representatives to be on the level and considerable credit is due them for the assistance and advice given us and which was in no small measure responsible for our success. The big deals and double crosses do not concern us, we send in our little service check each week and get value received and for the amount of capital invested I believe that we are showing as good returns as many of the big town houses.

The point I want to bring out is that after eleven years of failure, with a strong local prejudice, an off location and about every draw-back that a house could have, we were able to register a success by simply giving the public the best at a price they could afford to pay. We have talked with a number of our fellow exhibitors in the surrounding territory and they tell us that they slip over a cheap feature once or twice a week. We don't. We give the same quality every day in the week and the result is that it has become a slogan here, "Always a good show at the Opera House," which I believe is mighty good advertising.

The News is going to make a better showman out of us and it will enable us to know what we are buying and what it is worth. It occurs to me that every film representative on the road should be a booster for you, for in helping you and making a subscriber out of the exhibitor he is helping himself and the exchange he represents. We've been going along blind for the past eight months and I don't recall that any film representative ever suggested that a trade journal would be of any assistance, and I can see where some of them could have secured a contract if I had known that what they said was backed up with something besides their own house publications.

Another thing—our patrons belong to us, have confidence in us and believe what we tell them because we never exploit anything until we know it is worthy of exploitation. We have many opportunities to book percentage pictures where the admission could be raised to our financial benefit. Unless it is out of the ordinary and worth the increased admission we pass it up. We don't propose to allow any state right men or hop-scotchers to play horse with our patrons after it has cost us no little sum to secure their confidence.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

JUST as I read all your leading articles I have this week read, prominently displayed, a story entitled "More about the press books we see," from the hectic pen of Mr. George N. Briggs.

It would be perfectly easy to start a campaign or a controversy or a yell symposium about most any subject that you see and permit your writers—staff men—or contributors—who assume full knowledge of conditions all over the country, and from that assumed position to sweepingly attack any given subject, policy, plan, system or thing.

The difficulty with such a controversy is that one hesitates to indulge in it because it would seem any answer would be a confession, and the trouble with such a controversy is that it gives the impression to exhibitors that all press books, no matter from what source or from what company, are thoroughly bad and not to be considered for use under any circumstances.

It has taken a long campaign of editors and good editors to get them to make use of press books although the more enterprising of them have made use of them, as the pages of the Motion Picture News eloquently show, by reproducing material taken directly from press books and successfully used in newspapers throughout the country. My scrap books reveal a large number of these, and while there may be bad press books and inefficient press representatives, there are also some who have moderate ability and who have been credited with being directly responsible for a big share in the success of many pictures.

It is unpleasant to engage in a controversy with a man who uses such phrases as "wholly unfit," "trash" and "rubbish" on the one hand, and "poorly written," "de-

Press Sheets By the Boys Who Use Them

Introducing a Symposium of Over Three Hundred Exhibitor Opinions—Theatre Men Lavish in Praise and Constructive in Criticism

By C. L. Yearsley

Advertising Manager, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

WHEN is a press sheet?

A detailed answer is, I believe, beyond the ability of any one ad and publicity man to give. Nor is it, in the light of a national exhibitor response to a query for facts, an answer that can be given accurately and definitely by the manager of advertising and publicity for any circuit of theatres, or by an individual theatre owner who is his own promotion and exploitation counsel.

Reviewing the statements in the several hundred exhibitor letters on press sheets and general advertising accessories, which Motion Picture News proposes to publish for the benefit and edification of the entire industry, it seems that the broad answer to the question—When Is A Press Sheet?—is:

When its contents of ad copy, press stories, cuts, exploitation suggestions and general information suits exactly or approximately the peculiar and distinctively local conditions of the exhibitor who receives it.

Failing to provide this happy facility for local adjustment, it becomes a thing of scorn, ridicule and an object for criticism. Theatre clienteles present a solidification of numerous individual likes and dislikes, blended into a unit popularly known as patronage because, in a broad sense, they have many points of agreement in their preferences for amusement. To the exhibitor who offers them the quality and kind of entertainment they desire, they give their patronage. Hence, the advertising appeal must be gauged to the points of greatest susceptibility manifested by the majority patronage for a given theatre. Character analysts, in their segregation of types, have found hundreds of variations in the likes, dislikes, abilities, preferences, temperaments and natures of individuals. These individualities assert themselves in people when amusement is sought just as they do when congenial employment or agreeable friendships are foremost in consideration.

For five years I was manager of advertising and publicity for a chain of more than forty theatres. These houses ranged from two thousand and three thousand seats in transient and exclusive sections of cities with more than a half million population, down to five hundred seats capacity in much smaller towns. During those rather strenuous years of effort, with the box office as the final proof of my success, I learned a great deal. Most valuable of all, to me, was the realization that there are many ways to put over a show, and that there are thousands of money making theatres scattered over the world that were doing phenomenally well without my assistance.

Advertising is not an exact science. It is a business—profession if you like—in which there are no experts. The only fair standard by which it may be gauged is results. There is a decided tendency to criticise the other fellow's advertising purely on its physical appearance. We instantly say: "That's a great ad," or "That one is very bad," without knowing anything about the conditions which it was designed to fit. Looking at the newspaper advertisements by two exhibitors, on the same production, both of equal size but differing in text, arrangement and illustration, we declare an immediate preference for one of the two, or, perhaps, we condemn both of them as amateurish, hopeless! It would be almost as reasonable to pass judgment on two bottles of medicine, prescribed by different physicians for the same patient, without knowing the nature of the patient's ailment or condition.

An advertisement or piece of publicity copy is designed, planned or formulated—supply your own term—to affect the minds of its readers in a certain way. If it accomplishes the ambition of its author it is good advertising, no matter what its physical appearance may be. The thought to be put over is the backbone of any advertisement.

There has been some criticism in the trade journals of the press sheets and other advertising aids furnished by the publicity departments of the producers and distributors. To criticise is never a difficulty. To criticise constructively is another and very different matter.

There are critics who have denounced all press sheets as impossible. Several of them have been courteously requested by New York publicity departments to submit specimens of their own work—material they have prepared for newspaper publication in behalf of the theatre interests which employ them. For some reason they apparently prefer not to do this, thereby ignoring opportunities for making constructive comments or for tendering anything tangible as evidence of their right to criticise.

In contrast are the criticisms and comments of several hundred exhibitors who have generously responded to First National's request for opinions that would help to direct its publicity department along practical and helpful lines. The amazing feature of the remarkably constructive answers these exhibitors have made is that they take cognizance of good qualities as well as bad. Some of them hammer the publicity men without mercy, but they provide sensible alternatives for the practices which they condemn. Certainly, criticism of this kind is very helpful. Many of them honestly admit that they are benefiting from the efforts of New York publicity departments. This is refreshing, not for its flattering flavor, but because it is evidence of fairness and a sense of justice.

Looking over these letters I find that every company receives its share of criticism and commendation. First National's publicity department has faults that are pointed out. Paramount is taken to task by some, and lauded by others. Goldwyn has certain arrangements and contents in its press sheets which are criticised and praised. Fox, Metro, Select, Pathe, Universal, Exhibitors' Mutual, World Film, every one, is included.

Publication of these letters of opinion, criticism and advice by the men best qualified to pass judgment should help to clarify the atmosphere of doubt, pessimism and destructive effort which has been allowed by the adverse sentiments of the few to becloud at least a small number of virtues.

The Exhibitors Speak

Short Stuff "the Big Need"

By Harry Sudekum

Knickerbocker and Princess Theatres, Nashville, Tennessee

MANY of the press sheets that come to my office are very good, while others are rotten, pure and simple. They look fairly good on the outside at first glance, but when you start to wade through them to try and dig out some printable matter for the papers it is not there. Most of the space is taken up in some old rehash of somebody else's and is quite useless for general service.

As for the lobby card suggestions, I find these to be among the most beneficial of the press sheet matter. I do a great deal of my decorating work personally, or either exercise personal supervision over it, and I appreciate the value of a flock of nifty "teasers" on the advance matter. I put out a number of cards on the streets, and use a varied assortment of catch lines which are as a rule printed in several colors.

In Nashville there are "danger zone" and traffic signs of various kinds on the uptown streets. To these signs I have for several years had attached a place for display cards, by special arrangement with the city officials and the police department. In such cases as this I employ a dozen or more different cards, reading "So and So" in "Such and Such a Picture at the Knickerbocker next week," followed by a catch line of a dozen words or so in type sufficiently large to be read from passing vehicles and by people on the sidewalks.

I have had quite a bit of trouble in the past in getting mats and cuts of pictures in advance of their showing. Where pictures are printed in the press sheets in regulation newspaper style the papers do not object to having screen cuts made of the printed matter and used in the paper the same as the mats or prepared cuts.

The average run of posters being put out by the moving picture companies today is quite artistic. I have been judging theatrical posters and other advertising matter for the past fifteen years or more, and to my mind the highly colored stuff is giving away to the dark toned material. Dark greens, grays and browns of a subdued hue and shaded at the edges in my opinion form the most artistic possible grade of photoplay poster, as the wild streaks of red and yellow remind one too much of a circus to compare it with a modern photoplay. There should be more of a touch of general refinement to keep them out of the class of patent medicine and tobacco ads.

Short matter which can be cut out and handed to the newspapers in ready prepared style is quite important to the successful exploitation of a picture. This applies particularly to advance reading matter, such as "here next week" stuff. Papers will print such things as this, whereas they are loathe to clutter up their columns with a wild rambling of facts and details which have no bearing on the general theme of the story but which merely wastes time and energy. The value of short items cannot be too nighly estimated.

Ask More Attention For Houses Unable to Use Newspapers

Prepared ads have in the past been a great help to me. Most of my ads have to be drawn either by myself or by an artist in order to get them to suit my fancy, but the prepared ads offer suggestions which can be conveyed to a more attractive style when drawn in a single cut. The small ads which can be clipped bodily from the press sheets, with the name of the theatre left blank on the top or the bottom, are quite helpful.

Personally, I like sheets printed on one side only.

Give Me Pep and Punch

By Ellis Bostick

Merrill and Strand Theatres, Milwaukee, Wis,

I can unhesitatingly say the Fox Film Co., gets out the best publicity matter of any company in the market! An exhibitor can look through a Fox press book and get some idea of the story of the play, and the points to advertise. Whoever their press man may be he is a humdinger, and his ideas are all right. In drawing up an ad for a Fox picture, I can get more ideas than I can use from the publicity matter. It is my policy to take the publicity book issued for the pictures that I intend to show and go through it carefully checking the ideas that I can use in my ads, the photographs, stills and catch lines. The worst trouble of Fox is that when I go through the books to check up the marked items, I find so many that I have to weed them again.

Let's take Fox's press book on "My Little Sister," the picture I showed at the Strand recently, and another one that I'm going to use at the Merrill, and compare the two. I won't mention the Merrill picture, for the company is a friend of mine, and I woudn't like to have them know I think so little of their publicity matter. Oh, yes, I've told them privately, but I don't like to give my unfavorable opinions publicly.

The first appearance of their books gives you the first difference. The Fox Company has a booklet, with a cover bearing a picture that strikes one instantly. I don't want to be facetious when I say it is gripping, because it is a fist clutching a girl, but I mean it. The other company has a double spread, the front page of which means absolutely nothing. The first thing in the booklet is the story and cast, which is good. The story and cast is given in the double spread, too, but the story is condensed too much. The next thing in the Fox booklet is the line, "Here is a good stunt!" Then it goes ahead to tell of a publicity stunt that can be used. This double spread has nothing like that. Then the Fox booklet has "catchlines," that are catchlines, not just mild quotations from the story, as we find in the other publicity matter. Another paragraph in the booklet gives us "stirring moments of the play." Those are the things the successful advertiser wants to know when he starts to advertise a feature.

Then in the sample ads that are given, notice the difference! In the double spread we have a three column eight inch ad, bearing a big cut of the star, and the words, "Hiram Hasbeen In a Five-Act Comedy Drama," and the name of the theatre. Would that draw a nickel? Not in Milwaukee! The star is familiar enough so that everyone in the city knows what he looks like. If a star is big enough to get into downtown houses, everyone knows what his features are. If he is not so big, the theatre is probably playing up the story and can not use the star's picture, any way. In the case of this particular star, practically every picture in which he has appeared is a five act comedy-drama. Each of the three sample ads given has his photograph posed with his best clothes on, and not a line about the play nor an inkling of the character part he would assume in this production. Take the Fox ads, and see how they bring out the idea of the picture. Here is the picture of a girl standing before a police officer with an agonized expression on her face as she inquires, "Where is my Little Sister?" That is a picture with a punch. It doesn't need to be sensational, it is merely coincident that I'm using a more or less sensational picture as an illustration, but it can be any big scene from the play.

I want a press book with cuts and paragraphs that I can use in my ads—publicity with a punch, not merely patter that fills space. Fox is good, and Universal is forging to the front; this other one which I am comparing with Fox is bad, and others are a darned sight worse. Fox pictures are a comparatively small end of my program, so I have no particular reason to boost their publicity work; but it is a pleasure to draw up an ad from Fox publicity sheets, and a misery to try certain others.

Need Window Card Material

By W. C. Bulow

Manhattan Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio

We use window cards more than any other form of advertising in putting our pictures over. We find a great many stores which object to putting posters in their windows are glad to use window cards for us. Consequently we always scan the press sheets eagerly for material for window cards.

I believe a great many other small exhibitors feel the same way about this that I do. Consequently any material in the press sheet that will enable the exhibitor to get away from the ordinary shop-worn standard type of window card is of great value.

I think the press sheet ought to contain several samples of different styles of window cards.

The sets of stills gotten out for lobby displays are also of great value. We have several frames for them in our lobbies and I notice people always stop to look at them.

Hand colored photos are especially attractive in these frames. I think more of them would be appreciated by exhibitors.

Orpheum Theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

THE average press sheet being put out by the higher class moving picture companies today, is quite helpful to the exhibitor. The prepared ads are hardly ever used, although parts of them, including especially the catch lines of from 25 to 50 words, are practically always embodied in my weekly or daily exploitation. The Orpheum, being a combination vaudeville and moving picture house, cannot well afford to devote as much space in its ad to the moving picture end of the program as the average picture house. Thus our motion picture ads must be more appealing than the average.

One of the principal objections which I find to a number of press sheets in use at the present time, is the fact that they are printed on both sides. For instance, in Nashville there are two principal papers which get the majority of my advertising, and in cases of this kind I often get but one press sheet and have to divide the copy equally between two papers. In many instances I have been handicapped through the fact that the sheets are printed double and by cutting a story out of one side a good story on the other side may be ruined. Not only the stories, but in many instances special cuts which can be reproduced for the newspapers are often mutilated to such an extent that they cannot be used.

A number of companies, of which I believe Paramount is one, uses a single page system. Stories can be torn out and given to the papers without hurting the material on the opposite side, which is blank. In my opinion it would be a big improvement to use a booklet form of press sheet of this kind instead of the big poster printed on both sides in the manner of a newspaper.

Another thing which should be done in order to get more publicity printed by the moving picture editors of the papers, is to put headlines on the press stories. In some press sheets the news matter is crowded together with small dashes, and no headlines at all and the busy editor, in his haste to make up his weekly Sunday section or perchance to get up his daily budget, consigns a large part of it to the waste basket. On the other hand a catchy headlines will hold his attention long enough for the shears to work across it and as a result it gets into print whereas the decapitated squib would go by unnoticed.

Many a synopsis in the press sheets is entirely too long: I have operated houses in Nashville, Atlanta, Columbus and other southern cities and have found without exception that the papers will print a synopsis of the entire play in the Sunday editions if it is not too long. Where they have gone over the limit I have known them to be sawed off near the middle or in some vital part which breaks the meaning of the story and as a result it loses its interest to the general reader who scans the news columns for an interesting play. A short synopsis, written in a concise and vivid manner, will do the work where the others fail.

Likes All the Press Sheets

By W. B. Fisher

Empress Theatre, Grand Island, Neb.

NEW suggestions for the use of film makers, producers, exchanges and others engaged in getting up publicity matter for motion pictures are few and far between, it seems to me. Some of the keenest and most active brains in the country are devoting all their attention to getting up new stunts and improving old methods. Yet it is rarely that I find anything particularly new and at the same time beneficial cropping out among exhibitors. It is something like the dear old jokes. They tell us there were seven of them created along with Adam and no new ones have been born since, to my knowledge.

It seems to me that all of the press sheets I get are worth while. There is something of value in all of them I always go through them. They help even the old advertiser, the man who has been in the game for many years, as suggestions contained in them keep in line with the advance in scenario writing.

I like heralds but think too much of them to use them except once in a while. I prefer them when I have something extra good on hand. They are good publicity but I don't approve of their use on every show I have. As it is, when I make use of heralds my patrons know I have something out of the ordinary to show them.

Lobby photos are essential to the exhibitor, in my estimation. I use other forms of advertisement to bring people to my theatre. Then the lobby photos serve to get them inside the house.

My preference in the poster line is one-sheets and three-sheets for the lobby and in front of the house. I do not use larger sizes for this purpose.

Ideal Story 200 Words

By L. D. Joel

Casino Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

WRITERS for big magazines often make valuable suggestions to exhibitors. But the best ideas we get which aid us in increasing our box office receipts, usually come from some successful exhibitor, who has placed his ideas before other exhibitors through the medium of a good trade paper.

Not that the special writers in the trade papers do not help a great deal, but that they do not come into daily contact with the exhibitor problems. I base my success in operating three large motion picture theatres, on hard-earned experience and the daily reading of the public's pulse.

The ideal press story is one of about two hundred words of graphic narration that abruptly ends at the physchological moment and leaves the outcome in doubt, and the reader in eager suspense. It must give him a general idea of what he will see without giving him a complete, cut-and-dried synopsis.

Exhibitors Making Extensive Use of Press Sheets

The prospective patron wants to know the nature of the picture, and if the ad does not give him this information, the well written press story should. Personal interest stories of the star or characters are worthless as advertising.

The standard of the present day poster is low from an advertising standpoint. There are too many flashy, blood-and-thunder specimens and too many inate, lifeless specie that discourage rather than invite the beholder. The picture of a dramatic scene—one that really appears in the picture—is the best material for the poster. Colored photos, judiciously chosen, are the best in that line. Original lobby displays that attract attention and soon become the talk of the town are invaluable. I find it extremely profitable to keep my lobby displays up to a high standard and to mention them in my advertising. I might add that the day of the old circus display advertising is gone. The public are fed up on untrue posters, and those showing actual scenes get far better results.

As to newspaper advertising illustrations—clear, definite cuts of tense or unusual scenes are the best illustrations for attracting the public through the newspapers. I find that those without borders are the most attractive to the readers. Advertising copy that is not blatant, boastful, nor extravagant makes the best impression. Many exhibitors under-estimate the intelligence of the fan and proceed to crowd their ads with all that they can think of or get up about the picture. The average man likes to guess at the outcome of a mystery and the surest way to attract him is to arouse his curiosity by leaving something to his imagination.

"Be sure you don't miss the letter from C. E. Hansing, of the Nokomis, Minneapolis, on this page:

"It discusses in constructive style the press sheet needs of one important class of exhibitors—the suburban theatre men.

"They are the "in-betweeners." Mr. Hansing's letter tells you how to help them.

Don't Forget Surburban Houses

By C. E. Hansing

Nokomis Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

PEP ideas for the exploitation of moving pictures at an insignificant cost rather than expensive advertising layouts are the greatest needs of the day for the average exhibitor.

While a few press sheets are "coming across with the goods," many others are lacking in pep ideas. By supplying the demands for ingenious and inexpensive publicity stunts they can be made to serve the best interests of the moving picture game.

Publicity departments of film distributing companies in getting out press sheets, advertising matter, posters, heralds and slides are doing their work well as far as the big first run houses and country theatres are concerned. But they seem to be overlooking a very important factor in the industry—the suburban or neighborhood house.

The conditions facing the suburban exhibitor are peculiarly different from those confronting the downtown exhibitor or the small-town moving picture man.

The downtown exhibitor can afford to advertise extensively in the newspapers because he is getting first run business and is drawing patrons from all sections of the city. The small town exhibitor can also advertise because he can charge a higher admission than the suburban exhibitor, and the advertising rates in a small town are not as high as in the larger city. But the newspaper rates in a city like Minneapolis are excessive, and the suburban exhibitor does not feel like buying valuable space when he knows that his patronage is limited to a certain residential area of the community. This is the reason that the neighborhood-house exhibitors of Minneapolis are not using newspaper advertising, and consequently have absolutely no need for the press sheet material prepared for newspaper use.

Another reason for the failure of the suburban exhibitor to advertise in the newspapers is the fact that they get the full benefit of the accumulated advertising that has been done in behalf of pictures by the first run houses when those same pictures were shown in downtown houses. The people of the neighborhood have either all read or heard about the picture in question, and if they have not already seen it they will often take advantage of their opportunity when it comes to the suburban house.

But the press sheets could be made invaluable to the suburban exhibitor. What he needs is stunt ideas and unique and inexpensive publicity suggestions. The average suburban exhibitor, unless he has been a real student of the business, doesn't get the remotest idea of what he should do to put his picture over when he buys a picture from many exchanges.

However, I have notices that some of the press sheets are coming across with this kind of material, and it is certainly welcome for the majority of the neighborhood houses. I think that the best press sheets are gotten out today by Pathe, Universal and First National. They have a lot of good tips in them, and the arrangement of the stories and press matter for both the small town and first run exhibitor is splendid. The basic material is there, and it is an easy matter for the exhibitor or the editor to inject a little local color or news into it if it is available. The posters, heralds, slides and lobby posters are for the most part good. There are times, however, when we get a great flaring poster with exaggerated wording to back up a miserable picture. But that kind of advertising, I believe, is fast dying out, and we are entering upon a new and better era.

The fact that the advertising men of the film industry are welcoming constructive criticism is indication enough of their desire to serve the exhibitor. But again, I repeat, give us more pep ideas. We have had to rely upon our own originality; and some of us unfortunately, are not possessed of originality.

In the absence of some suitable stunt suggestion from the press sheets, I have framed several myself, and each has been accompanied with success. One of the ideas has been adopted by Hodkinson for nationwide use. It was simply this:

I had booked "The Turn of a Card" for a showing at the Nokomis. I bought about six dozen decks of cards. On each card I had printed across the center, "See J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Turn of a Card" at the Nokomis. I had these cards dropped on porches, scattered on sidewalks and left in stores in the neighborhood. The cards, of course, attracted much curiosity and proved a strong lure to the Nokomis. They had been distributed within an area of one hundred square blocks. They certainly did the trick.

At another time I was showing George Larkin in the serial, "The Terror of the Range."

I looked through the press dope in the hope of getting some good idea. But nothing doing! so I had to think up somtching original. I had been reading the newspapers and recalled seeing the day previous a notice offering a reward for the capture of a certain robber. Like a flash, the idea came to me. The identity of the "Terror of the Range" did not become known until late in the serial, so I decided to offer a reward of $5 in gold to the patron who could guess his identity. I had dodgers printed with the notice of this reward circulated in the neighborhood and flashed the same offer on the screen. Interest was immediately aroused, my theatre was well patronized, and I got hundreds of answers on the coupons which were attached to the dodgers for that purpose. During the sixth episode, I announced the winner of the reward. The third answer I received was the correct one, but I withheld my announcement to prolong the interest.

Recently I showed Marie Walcamp in "The Red Glove," and all the patrons in the neighborhood were searching ash cans, backyards, vacant lots and every nook and corner of the district for a plain cotton glove which bore the name of the Nokomis Theatre and which will entitle the finder to a reward of $5.

My only investment in this unique publicity stunt, which had every youngster in the neighborhood on his toes, was the price of a dozen plain cotton gloves, the cost of having them dyed red, and the $5 gold piece that stood as a reward.

I personally hid these gloves in the neighborhood, under sidewalks, in vacant lots and behind shrubbery, and every night for a week at least one youngster would come running breathlessly to the theatre with a red glove, but thus far the one that bears the name of the Nokomis in the inside has not come to light.

To accelerate interest and to aid in the ultimate recovery of the hidden glove, each night of the serial I gave a hint as to a location by flashing a slide on the screen. For instance one night the slide read: "The Red Glove is hidden within 100 yards of the Nokomis Theatre and less than 50 yards from Elliot avenue." And thus the hunt waxed warm and the interest in the serial still warmer. Every child that found a red glove without the name of the theatre is admitted to the show free of charge, and the child was usually accompanied by its parents or relatives who paid the admission.

Nearly a year ago I got out 1,000 birthday cards and distributed them throughout the neighborhood with the announcement that every child under 12 years of age would be admitted free of charge to the Nokomis Theatre on his birthday if he would present one of these cards filled out and signed by a parent. The announcement further stated that the child's name would be flashed on the screen. These slides would read something like this: "We have with us Johnny Jones, who is 11 years old today." Johnny and the whole family would usually be there to see this wonderful announcement.

Although it's nearly a year ago since I started this stunt every once in a while some youngster will come running to the theatre with one of these cards and the exclamation, "It's my birthday today."

I am extremely anxious to satisfy my patrons and next week I plan to circulate a handbill announcing a coming attraction with a coupon attached, urging patrons to fill out the coupon stating what stars and plays they like best at the Nokomis Theatre.

Many suburban exhibitors need ideas. I may run out of my stock some day, and if I do I hope that I will be able to find them in all of the press sheets that come into my hands. Thank heaven, some of the film companies are already beginning to see the light.

The baby contest staged by H. M. Thomas, manager Rialto Theatre, Omaha, as described in the First National's press sheet for "Human Desire," is ideal as a big promotion stunt for "Human Desire." The plan is simple, inexpensive and a veritable knockout for results—play up babies—make the lobby a nursery—use infant departments in local stores—it is a great chance for clever showmanship to get astounding results at the box office.

That is a bully suggestion and is the most perfect form of exploitation service a press sheet can give to exhibitors. I read of Mr. Thomas' stunt and know that Manager Hays of the St. Paul, New Garrick, copies the idea to good advantage. If more press sheets of that kind were gotten out it would save exhibitors a whole lot of bother and increase their profits.

Talking It Over With City Editor

This One Thought He Could Help the Picture So Much It Would Turn Ingrate and Follow the Footsteps of Baseball as a Non-Advertiser

By Charles B. Taylor

Photoplay Editor, Buffalo Evening News; Publicity Director, Strand, Victoria, Regent

AN interesting angle on the proposition to have the motion picture and its varied activities take the place of baseball as regards the amount of space given in the press came up during a discussion between the writer and the city editor of one of the country's largest dailies. It is an argumentive angle without any basis of truth, but it shows what sort of propaganda is going on in some backward cities against the extension of space given to fifth estate.

Said the City Editor:

"The motion picture industry today is one of the largest advertisers in the press. The press in return is devoting more and more space to news about the movies. Will not those who direct the advertising policies of the various companies, seeing that they can get all the copy they want in the papers free, cut down on their advertising and eventually eliminate it. This is the situation in baseball news. The promoters get whole pages of publicity free and give no advertising in return. On an entire page devoted to sport, most of which is baseball, we find only one small ad announcing where the game will be played. Will not time bring about a similar situation as regards the motion picture? I believe it is a situation that newspapers should guard against."

This is the kind of argument that men whose work it is to promote motion picture publicity face when going after more space.

As for the motion picture industry eventually eliminating advertising in the columns of the newspapers, we find that after a decade there is no visible tendency toward such a step. "Au contraire," newspapers are now getting more advertising from producers and exhibitors than at any time in the history of the silent drama and in the future, if present signs indicate anything. there will be an augmentation of publicity a large percentage of which will go into the columns of the daily press.

In baseball there is usually but one place where the game is played and everyone knows where this place is. There is no competition. Consequently why advertise. The motion picture, however, is presented in as many as 150 theatres in some cities. Competition is at white heat at all times. Advertising is a necessity. It is increasing with the coming of each season. Larger theatres are being built in all our principal cities. These "de luxe" motion picture palaces are going to give the newspaper real money in advertising and there is every indication that in the coming years it will be one of the most fertile fields for revenue.

If, as the city editor argues, producers and managers see that they can get all the publicity they want gratis and cut down on their advertising, why has not this held true in the legitimate field. Here we find that after almost a century and in spite of entire sections devoted to news of plays and players, there is no tendency to eliminate advertising. Legitimate producers still place just as large ads as ever and in cities like New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and others, we find page after page devoted to news about the so-called legitimate theatre.

The motion picture today interests more persons than any other single thing. Its fascination reaches out and touches every member of the family. Every item about the activities of the stars is read with avidity. The monthly magazines devoted to the motion picture industry and its human interest side are found in every home. The picture is of more interest to newspaper readers than baseball ever was or ever will be. In fact baseball is on the skids and its popularity is waning.

From a circulation standpoint there is no doubt but that the paper that devotes a half page, page or several columns to news about the movies can increase its subscription list. If this were not true, live dailies in the large cities would not be giving valuable white space to picture news.

Whenever there is a baseball game, we find a reporter on the job to cover it and a desk man in the office to handle the copy. At the ball park this past summer in Buffalo there were not enough persons in the grandstand at any game to make it interesting. On the other hand the picture theatres were attracting capacity audiences at every performance. In the evening the entire city seems to rush to the motion picture theatre. Yet we find no reporters covering this national pastime. In Buffalo there is only one film house that is covered regularly by a reporter and only one newspaper does this.

However there will come a time when the fifth estate will not have to argue for space from the fourth estate. The common or garden variety of American is adopting the motion picture and it is taking its place as the national pastime. Newspapers that fight against space extension on the subject are only setting themselves down as back numbers, has beens and never weres.

Millions of dollars are being spent this season by producers in national advertising campaigns and the newspapers are getting a large slice of these appropriations. Page ads are not unusual. Did the baseball game ever bring a page ad or a half page ad to the advertising window?

The writer personally believes that it would be wise to devote the space given to baseball to motion pictures and that in the end the newspaper owner would find it a much more profitable move.

¶John C. Bronnell of the Universal Scenario Department writes:

¶"I am much interested in your new department, 'The Fiction Mart.'

¶"This strikes me as a splendid idea and characteristic of the progressive spirit of Motion Picture News.

¶"We will follow this department with interest from week to week and have no doubt it will be of benefit to both producers and publishers.

"Sincerely yours,

"(Signed) JOHN C. BRONNELL,

void of ideas," "cheat," "uninforming twaddle" on the other hand.

While Mr. Briggs gives a sop to the publicity departments by putting the blame on the producers, he then proceeds to slam the press representatives eternally using certain extracts, carefully selected from some unimposing publicity material. Just as the article by Mr. Briggs is filled with bad taste, abuse and very little that is instructive, so most any other set of ideas produced under such conditions might easily be criticized if we were to use a magnifying glass or had the ego to tackle the job.

The best answer to Mr. Briggs' loosely constructed article would seem to be press books themselves, and I, therefore, enclose herewith three samples, picked at random and dealing with our newer releases, which I would like to have some of your staff of experts analyze.

If the presentation of our suggestions and the suggestions themselves, together with the advertising material presented, does not meet with your approval or that of your experts, I should like to know wherein we fail. On the other hand if they do meet with your approval, I would like to have them say so in as large a space as Mr. Briggs has consumed and as large a type in order that justice and not nonsense may prevail.

I do not care to have them submitted to Mr. Briggs because I do not judge him a competent critic. Perhaps he would thoroughly enjoy his subject by working a hardship upon those who are not entitled to be harshly spoken to, but you have men on your staff who have done some very good things, and I am willing to rest my case and the case of others who also have put in some very hard hours in publicity endeavor with them.

I have the honor to be

Very truly yours,

Arthur James,
Supervisor Advertising & Publicity
Fox Film Corporation.

Hammons Closes Educational Merger

Hudson Bay Company Behind Holding Company Organized to Operate Enlarged Educational Organization on World Wide Basis

WITH the capital, prestige and power of the Hudsons' Bay Company, of London, England, as a dominant lever, and with more powerful foreign and domestic relations established by the merger of three existing organizations, the Educational Films Corporation of America has steered its course to become the predominate producer and distributor of short-length subjects in. the industry.

The amalgamation of interests centers in the organization of a new holding company, to be called the Alliance Film Securities Corporation. Vice-President E. W. Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation is president of the new organization, which will operate the three companies involved under the name of the Educational Films Corporation. The capital is said to be more than two million dollars.

Outgrowth of Hammons' Trip

The organizations included in the merger consist of the Educational Films Corporation of America, the Far East Film Company, which has been handling the export business of the Educational products, and the Coronet Film Corporation, which also operates in the short-subject field. The Far East Corporation is a power in the foreign market, selling to eighteen countries abroad, and distributing single reel features in every corner of the globe.

While Mr. Hammons would neither affirm nor deny certain points with regard to the new amalgamation, reliable information indicates the scope of the transaction. Since the return of Mr. Hammons from Europe last summer, it has been known that he was in consultation with great financial interests, and his return brought forth the announcement that big things would soon be announced. The merger with the backing of the Hudson's Bay Company, which for 250 years has occupied a position in the commercial world as solid as the rock of Gibraltar, is the result.

H. Holford Bottomly, C. B. E. and A. J. Davidson, of the Hudsons' Bay Company, have been in New York for the past month, completing the transaction which Mr. Hammons arranged in Europe in July. It is understood that they will return to England shortly to put into effect the plans of the enlarged Educational organization in the United Kingdom.

The Hudsons' Bay Company, founded in 1670, is one of the greatest powers in the financial world. The scope of its activities is world wide. The name itself is familiar to everyone, every schoolboy from his earliest delving in textbooks finds the name of Hudsons' Bay synonymous with great commercial strength.

The prestige of its name and the power of its capital assures the carrying out of the most extensive plans by the Educational executives, and will mean a great advance for the entire motion picture industry. President Hammons, in welding together the new holding corporation, has succeeded in combining the oldest financial power in the world with the production and distribution of motion pictures.

Grauman of Los Angeles Visits New York

Sid Grauman, manager of Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, of Los Angeles, is in New York on his first visit in twelve years. He was accompanied East by Niel McCarthy, Los Angeles counsel of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and will remain in the city for several weeks.

Mr. Grauman, who with his father owns the big picture palace which he manages, is one of the foremost exhibitors in the United States.

Yesterday, os the guest of Adolph Zukor, Mr. Grauman visited the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and met several of the stars of the organization.

Providence House Open with Reserved Seats

The Victory, formerly Keith's theatre, opened in Providence, Sept. 1, as a moving picture house, under the management of E. F. Albee. The new Victory, so named in commemoration of the victory of the Allies, will carry only first class photoplays and will introduce musical and novelty features.

The building has been closed the greater part of the summer, during a thorough renovation. A new ventilation system has been installed.

COAST STUDIO STRIKE; CAPITALIST BEHIND D. W. GRIFFITH

LOS ANGELES studios are up against a strike of technical directors, carpenters, property men, electricians and members of the International Alliance of Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators who struck on September 15. Production at the large plants was halted for a brief period pending negotiations by the Motion Picture Producers' Association, which arranged a compromise pending a final agreement.

The producers assert the strike is the result of a conflict between the stage employees' alliance and the local Building Trade Council for supremacy of organizations, and contend they have the whip hand, in as much as the rival unions cannot get concerted action.

D. W. Griffith announces he has financial backing by E. E. Smathers of New York city for the production of a big subject to be made at the estate of the late Henry M. Flagler, purchased by Smathers and title of which is transferred to Griffith. Smathers, it is said, will also erect a Griffith theatre in New York.

Berst Trip Presages Action

President of United Goes to Coast; Acquisition of New Stars Imminent

Out on the Coast events of importance to members of United Picture Theatres Inc. and exhibitors in general are foreshadowed by the departure of J. A. Berst, president of United, for Los Angeles this week. While the recently consummated business deal whereby United's feature pictures made on the Coast are to be supervised by Louis Gasnier at the Astra studios is declared to be one of the principal objects of the United's executive's present journey, together with personal supervision of Dustin Farnum's forthcoming picture which is heralded as by far the most massive and spectacular offering thus far provided for that star, rumor is busy in connection with the prospective signing up of certain prominent stars shortly expected to be seen under United's banner. Mr. Berst will also take opportunity, it is said, on his return trip to visit the principal United exchanges and inspect the activities of the district representatives and managers on the local ground.

"The plans we have formed in consultation with United's advisory board," Mr. Berst said in a statement just prior to leaving for Los Angeles, "for a series of offerings of special magnitude and importance, commencing with Dustin Farnum's vehicle now being put in hand, are to be carried out on a scale of massiveness in accord with the high standard of story material we have recently acquired for United stars. In order that the many details of the Farnum production, difficult to arrange at a distance, and on which in so large measure the success of a production depends, may be thoroughly gone over in consultation with Mr. Faanum and Mr. Gasnier and myself it seemed oppportune to make my Coast visit at this time.

"I am unwilling at this time to say anything as to the plans we are carrying out for the acquisition of additional stars, but our exhibitor members can rest assured that in the near future important announcements may be expected which will add to the prestige and power of United."

Setting Empey Right

In the interview with Guy Empey, published in last week's NEWS, he was, by error, quoted as mentioning Charles A. Dana as author of "Two Years Before the Mast," in place of Richard Henry Dana, the real author. A typographical error also had Mr. Empey refer to "Fort Slogan" instead of Fort Slocum.

Branch Appointments

Announcement of two important appointments in the sales forces in the Southern territory has been made by Al. Lichtman, general manager of distribution Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

W. J. Pratt, who for a long time has been connected with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., as district manager for the Southern Triangle Pictures Company, has been appointed special representative with supervision over the Charlotte, Atlanta and New Orleans offices, with headquarters in Atlanta.

Louis L. Dent, formerly special representative at Atlanta, has been stationed at Dallas and will have supervision of the Dallas and Oklahoma City offices.

Harold Lloyd's Injuries Not Serious

Last minute reports received by Pathe from the coast, indicate that Harold Lloyd's injuries, sustained Aug. 24 in the explosion of a bomb, are not as serious as were at first feared. Pathe also states that they have productions of Lloyd's carrying out the release schedule to the first of next year, and there will be no interruption of this service.

Tax Repeal Measure Soon Considered

Heartier Cooperation on Part of Exhibitors in Forwarding Signed Petitions to Representatives in Washington Is Important

WITH the bill to repeal the varions motion pieture taxes sehednled to come up before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, early in Oetober, Lonis F. Blumenthal, ehairman of the Committee on Legislation and Tax appeals to exhibitors to band more solidly and display more intense cooperation than they previously have. Particularly has there been a lack of coordinated effort in sending in petitions signed in the theatres to the varions Representatives, Mr. Blumenthal points out.

It is said that while several hundred thousand petitions have been signed, less than a hundred thousand have reached Congress. Redoubled effort on the part of exhibitors is necessary in the short period before the bill will be considered.

Educating Congressmen

When this committee first started in its work there was a lack of understanding among members of Congress as to how hard the motion picture exhibitors had been hit by the tax system. But since the efforts of state directors, appointed by this committee, in cooperation with their chambers of commerce, labor organizations, banking institutions and others have been petitioning Congress, there has been a decided change in the attitude of a great number of the members. This is evidenced by the fact that no less than ten different Congressmen have either introduced bills or offered to introduce them in behalf of the repeal of the taxes on motion pictures.

All exhibitors' organizations, irrespective of whether they are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., or not, should unite now to impress Congress with the injustices of the tax law so that when the hearing is held every member will be fully acquainted with the iniquities of the various motion picture taxes and be prepared to cast his vote in favor of the repeal of same, says Mr. Blumenthal's statement.

The following are the directors and their headquarter cities in the states which have been already organized by this committee. In most of these states, the directors have appointed men in each Congressional District to see that the theatres show the various slogans for the repeal of the taxes on their screens and that the petitions are circulated amongst their patrons.

BIMBERG LEASES PREMISES TO ERECT BIG STUDIO

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by A. J. Bimberg of the signing of a lease whereby the extensive premises known as the Amsterdam Opera House, situated at 334 to 342 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City, come into that producer's possession for the purposes of reconstruction into spacious studios for motion picture production. The lease covers a period of ten years.

Constructional work will be started at once and alterations are expected to be completed by November 1st. John Bean of 65 Broadway is the architect for Mr. Bimberg and the plans call for the modeling of three studios.

"Immediately upon the completion of the studios work on the Florence Reed series of features for United Picture Theatres will be transferred to the new premises," stated Mr. Bimberg, "and with the ample accommodations and up-to-date equipment we will be in a position to undertake productions of an elaborate nature."

NEW FOX OFFICES OPEN IN OCTOBER

FOX Film Corporation now is laying plans for removal from the half-dozen floors it now occupies at 130 West 46th Street to the magnificent administration and studio building now nearing completion on Tenth Avenue from 55th to 56th Street.

Notwithstanding slight delay due to labor troubles which affected progress on the brick work of the building, William Fox now expects to be able to install all the departments of the organization in their new and attractive quarters sometime in October.

Mr. Fox intends to have everything in the new building ready to begin operations with the arrival of the first departments, so that no confusion will be experienced by department heads.

Censor Menace Dies in South

Virginia and Georgia Exhibitors Now Are Breathing More Freely for a Time

The special session of the General Assembly of Virginia has adjourned without a whisper having been heard regarding the revival of a drastic censorship measure in connection with moving picture productions, and consequently the Virginia exhibitors are feeling easier, knowing that their business is not likely to be disturbed by ill advised legislative action, at least not until the regular session of the General Assembly in that state next January

The Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors Association was prepared to protest against the passage of a censorship bill had it been presented, precautionary measures having been taken by the association in a meeting during the convention held at Ocean View, near Norfolk, on August 13, at which it was decided to employ an attorney to protect the interests of the exhibitors, if that became necessary, and this precaution will also be taken in connection with the regular session of the General Assembly next year.

Exhibitors in Georgia had a much more narrow escape from a drastic censorship measure proposed during the recent session of the legislature in that state, as the members of the Georgia legislature, emulating the pernicious example of Congress, made the bill a rider to an important measure in the hope of putting it over, knowing that the censorship measure was too weak to stand on its own legs and could be passed only by saddling it on some important piece of legislation. However, both the important bill and the censorship rider measure were defeated by the narrow margin of three or four votes, and Georgia exhibitors, like their Virginia confreres, are also breathing easier.

Woody's Survey of Country

Found Every Evidence of Prosperity Everywhere in His Thorough Tour

JOHN S. WOODY, who has just returned from an extended trip through the western half of the country and whose return was signalized by his promotion from the post of general sales' manager to that of general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, reports a very healthy and optimistic condition everywhere. Prosperity abounds in all industries and as a result the motion picture industry, like every other amusement enterprise which is dependent on the general condition of business, is on the verge of an even greater expansion than it has ever ejoyed. New theatres, with large seating capacities and embodying all the modern improvements in picture showmanship, are springing up all over the country and additional ones are being projected and will soon be actualities.

Among the more important cities which Mr. Woody visited are Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Detroit, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Portland San Francisco and Los Angeles. Everywhere Mr. Woody made it a point to interview the leading exhibitors in an effort to ascertain the status of business and to learn their immediate plans. His trip was in the nature of a scouting expedition and he reports that it was rich in results—all encouraging.

In Chicago, Sam Katz, of the well-known Rivieria Theatre, is planning to erect a new three-million-dollar, 2,500 seat house in the Loop, as the center of the city is called, in which he hopes to institute a new era in the presentation of motion pictures.

Similar encouraging evidence of prosperity was found by Mr. Woody in every city visited.

The Blazed Trail Productions being handled by Arrow Film Corporation will be released October 1, 1919. These pictures feature John Lowell, George Crosman and Dakota Lawrence.

New Hampshire Exhibitors' Meeting

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New Hampshire was held at the Hotel Arlington, Boston, Mass., on September 9. The meeting was called by President Charles H. Bean for the exhibitors to take action on the repeal of sections 800, 906 and 1001 (Sub. 5) of the revenue act of 1918. A resolution indorsing the repeal was adopted and a copy of the same was sent to each of the two Congressmen and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

There was a very good attendance of the members and much interest was shown in the meeting. The exhibitors of New Hampshire are organized solidly and are going to send in petitions from their patrons asking for the repeal of these taxes.

Heads Big Four Branch

Charles W. Harden, who during the past ten years has been one of the best known exchange men in the southern and southwestern fields particularly, left New York last week to become Scattle sales manager for United Artists' Corporation.

Whenever an exhibitor receives a reply from his Congressman he is requested to direct same either to his state director or to National Headquarters, 1587 Broadway, New York City.

The assistance rendered by the state directors has been remarkable, in many instances the Congressmen taking a complete turn over from direct opposition to the repeal to active cooperation in behalf of the bill. It only requires a little time and a clear statement of the reasons why the taxes should be repealed to convince the Congressmen of the unfairness of same. All data such as questionnaires, material for slides, petitions, etc., can be had free of charge at National Headquarters. Wherever a state director or district leader has not been able to get in touch with the exhibitor, it is up to the exhibitor to write in for this material and to convey the word to his nearby exhibitor to do likewise.

Plunkett with Select

Joseph L. Plunkett has been engaged by Select Pictures Corporation as General European Representative, and will sail early in October to assume his new position. His headquarters will be in London, but his field of operations will include the entire continent. He will act in coordination with Maxwell Milder, who sailed for England this week to open Select's office in London, from which the European distribution will be handled.

Mr. Plunkett will devote his attention principally to the exploitation and presentation of the Select and Selznick output.

"It is not the intention by any means," he says, "to assume an attitude that the European exhibitor does not know how to run his theatre, but to bring to him the experience of the American exhibitor and adapt to his needs as much of it as is practical.

M. P. ENGINEERS HOLD CONVENTION

THE fourth annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is set for October 13, and will be held at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. The headquarters of the body will be at the William Penn Hotel. H. M. Wible of Wilkinsburg, Pa. is chairman of the Arrangements Committee.

Laemmle In Optimistic Vein

Returning from Coast Trip Fertile in Results; Sees Great Year Ahead

WHEN Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, returned from Universal City, California, to New York, after a three months' absence, he brought with him a most optimistic spirit. In fact Universal, along with the entire motion picture art, is looking forward to its greatest year, according to Mr. Laemmle.

"On the Coast," Mr. Laemmle said, "we are making better pictures than ever before. I have said that before, but it is now truer than ever before. We have entered into the year of activity where motion picture genius will be proclaimed throughout the world. This is the year of years in this art—every producing company is at its zenith in the production of better pictures."

"Universal," Mr. Laemmle continued "is spending today $20,000 more each week on its productions than it spent in the same weeks last year. And our productions are fifty per cent. better than last year. We have obtained the services of some of the leading directors of the country and they are giving us the benefit of their years of experience and seemingly unlimited ingenuity. We are using bigger and more expensive sets in all our productions.

"While at the West Coast studio I studied very thoroughly the exhibitors' end of the business. Reports from over the entire country were submitted to me and I believe the exhibitor will make this year the greatest yet. I know that at least 25 per cent. of the exhibitors have either completely remodeled their theatres or built new ones in addition to their first ones. Is that not in itself a sign of unusual prosperity? I think the recent war may account for a good bit of this—the minds of the people are in such a condition as to crave good clean uplifting and enjoyable entertainment. This situation and the fact that all pictures are better, and that they are attaining a realism never before thought possible, is boosting the motion picture art to a place in the public eye that it has never before attained."

"We have plans now," Mr. Laemmle said, "to proceed with the making of the better pictures and improving them as each new one is completed. With the finish of each one we learn something new, and when I say that we are to produce the leading pictures of the country, I mean that we will carry out our word."

Foreign Vita Offices Opened

Those Closed in War Re-established; and New Ones Opened by R. A. Reader

RONALD A. READER, who has been in France for several weeks looking over the motion picture field for Vitagraph, especially as to post-war conditions, returned last week. He brought a report to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, telling how that company had within a few weeks reestablished its offices which had been closed during the war, and established several new ones in the principal cities of France for the rental of Vitagraph films.

Among the new offices opened in France by Mr. Reader for the rental of Vitagraph's productions are those located in Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Toulouse and Lille, all in France, one in Belgium and one in Algiers. These are in addition to the score or more which were in operation before the war. Vitagraph's main office in Paris is now located in the heart of the city. That Vitagraph has every intention of increasing its activities abroad, as it has at home, is evidenced by the fact that it has taken a twenty-one years' lease of the Paris building. The company's former factory on the outskirts of the city, which was turned over to the French government during the war, has again been put in full operation. There the prints are made for the foreign trade.

"The economic conditions in Europe just now are very bad and quite naturally," said Mr. Reader. "Labor unrest is acute and there is a general disquiet over the formation of permanent peace. However, these conditions are gradually improving, and there are abundant signs that the war-torn nations are getting into the proper stride for reconstruction and the resumption of normal business.

"I found a wonderful spirit among the people of every city and section I visited, Belgium, as well as France, showing itself to be a nation with a wonderful heart, even as it did during the war.

"The people of England, France and Belgium, despite the terrors through which they have passed, are quickly reviving in hopes for the future. From the film standpoint, they offer a particularly fertile field. The people there are anxious to see good films, and of course they must look to America almost entirely for a gratification of this hunger for entertainment.

Russian Artist Is Art Director of Capitol

John Wenger, a young Russian painter of the impressionistic school, whose work is familiar to New York theatregoers (at present art director of the Rivoli) has been engaged by Managing Director E. J. Bowes as art director of the new Capitol theatre, now under construction at Broadway and 51st street. Mr. Wenger will devise the scenic settings for the motion pictures, the music and the entertainment arranged by Ned Wayburn, who will divide his activities between that institution and the Florenz Zeigfeld, Jr., enterprises, with which he is identified.

Allen Goes to Study Foreign Market

Jay J. Allen, of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, controlling some sixty motion picture theatres either in actual operation or under construction in the principal cities of Canada, sailed from New York last week on the liner Acquitania to study the film markets of England, France and Italy. Mr. Allen will be away some six weeks, and proposes within that time to familiarize himself with the production being made in those countries and their suitability for showing in the theatres of his immense circuit.

The Allens have the distinction of having been the first systematic purchasers of English films, a number of important cinema successes having been shown in the Allen theatres of Canada before they were brought to the United States. For some time they have maintained a representative in London to review new productions, and recently they have purchased a number of big pictures which are yet to have their first Canadian showings.

During his trip abroad Mr. Allen will attempt to explain to the producers there the kind of pictures most in demand in Canada, where motion picture patrons feel exceptionally kindly to British productions, but still demand the element of action that is missing in many of the foreign-made offerings. Before leaving New York he stated that it was not his intention to enter into the business of film importation for general distribution, but simply to see that the theatres under the Allen banner receive the proper quality of productions.

Three Fox Managers Are Appointed

Announcement comes from the offices of Fox Film Corporation of the appointment of three new managers for branches of the Fox organization in the Dominion of Canada.

In charge of the far Calgary section, with offices in the Princess Theatre building in Alberta; Fox has placed Mitchell Rose.

At Vancouver, British Columbia, R. A. Scott has taken charge, and is making things move at a lively pace.

The Fox exchange in Winnipeg is now under the efficient guidance of W. S. Jones.

"Charity Tax" Hurts in Provinces

Reports in Quebec newspapers indicate that despite the fact that the Provincial Government has abandoned the collection of "charity tax" in the municipalities, the collection of the tax is still being made in motion picture theatres, and is subject of hardship to the poorer class, which makes up a large proportion of the audiences.

Building Modern House

Henry C. Stearns is building a new theatre in the heart of the business district of Kingsville, Texas. It will seat upwards of a thousand and be equipped with the best projection equipment available, steam heating apparatus and Typhoon ventilating system.

EVERY LINE A BIT OF NEWS

Buffalo

A NEW film exchange will be built on Franklin street, just north of Chippewa and directly opposite the new Famous Players-Lasky exchange. The building will house the Buffalo offices of Metro, World and Vitagraph.

Samuel Carver, manager of the Family theatre, has purchased the Victory theatre, Genessee street near Goodyear. Fire in the building postponed the opening date from Sept. 14 to 21. Mr. Carver has also leased the Columbia Turn Verein, where he will show pictures.

Richard C. Patton, manager of the Gayety theatre, died at his home 194 West Chippewa street, Tuesday, Sept. 9.

The Garden theatre, one of Buffalo's three burlesque houses, is presenting pictures on Sunday. Smoking is permitted throughout the house.

The Plaza theatre on William street celebrated its ninth aniversary the week of September 14.

A. K. Howell, formerly with Fox, and G. R. Terrill formerly with First National, have joined the local Famous Players-Lasky sales' staff.

The Shea Amusement company and the F P.-L. exchange opened the Star theatre season, Sunday, Sept. 14 with "The Miracle Man."

Cincinnati

AT a recent meeting of the Motion Picture Exchange Manager's organization in Cincinnati the discussion turned to what appears to be a country-wide movement to increase admission prices in theatres. Reports were received of the increases made by the Marcus Lowe 28 theatres in New York and 86 houses in other parts of the country as far south as New Orleans and as far west as Chicago, and similar increases reported from all over the country.

When asked if his theatres contemplated raising prices, Manager I. Libson, leading Cincinnati exhibitor, said the matter was under consideration.

H. A. Holt, manager of the Pendrova theatre, Lockland, Ohio, is going to put the question of increased admission squarely up to his patrons, asking many personally whether they favor having the best class of plays run at an increase or are content with mediocre productions at present prices.

The exhibitors booking through the Cincinnati Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation now have at their service just about as complete a publicity, exploitation and accessory department as it is possible to devise. Manager Harris P. Wolfberg, whose energetic direction of the Cincinnati exchange has brought his exchange to the front in the last six months, has secured the services of Oscar A. Dobb, former dramatic editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, as Director of Publicity and Service.

Cleveland

CLEVELAND was treated to an innovation this week, when, for the first time in the history of local film business, three of the leading first-run motion picture theatres in the city, all showed the same picture for the entire week. The picture was "Checkers." The theatres were the Strand, Orpheum, and Metropolitan. All houses cleaned up.

The Cleveland musicians playing in photoplay houses went out on strike last Sunday night. They returned to work again on Wednesday, after a satisfactory compromise had been effected between the musicians' association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Cleveland.

The musicians did not get their full demand. They accepted an increase of approximately five dollars a week, which was slightly in excess of half of what they demanded.

Bill Hoffman has concluded his affiliations with the Cleveland Pathe exchange, as roadman, and is now selling Hodkinson films in Ohio, under W. T. Seymour, local Hodkinson representative.

E. J. Smith, manager of Universal's Cleveland exchange is vacationing with his family. They are burning up gasoline along the Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York roads.

"Mickey" is now being released throughout Ohio through the Ohio Film Classics, 318 Sloan building. Other releases of Ohio Film Classics are "Woman," and "The Birth of a Race." Fred Schramm is at the helm.

The Marvel theatre, Cleveland, recently purchased by G. T. Sharp and others interested in various film enterprises, will run vaudeville in addition to pictures, it was recently announced.

The Columbia theatre, Marion, Ohio, has been sold by W. D. Clark to Bob Morrison.

Canada

FOUR moving picture theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, recently enjoyed a six-hour strike of their projection machine operators because of the refusal of the exhibitors to recognize J. Thebault, a representative of the Theatrical Stage Employes, as business agent of the Operators' Local. They returned to work after a consultation between the union officials and the theatre managers in which the latter gained their point.

The Francais theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, which is the French film theatre of the Canadian Capital, now has an orchestra, uniformed doormen and ushers and an increased admission price. The theatre has also been renovated and enlarged.

The St. Denis theatre, Montreal, one of the largest theatres in Canada, has reopened after a summer of darkness with a combination film-vaudeville policy. This theatre is controlled by interests associated with Regal Films, Limited.

Ottawa, Ontario, moving picture theatres have raised their prices to the extent that they are now charging night prices for Saturday and holiday matinees, although one local house has made a complete advance in admission prices for all performances.

The Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Limited, has been organized with headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, for the handling of Paramount-Artcraft releases throughout the Dominion. Announcement is made that six offices will be maintained in the country, these being located at Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. They will be operated in conjunction with the branch offices of Regal Films, Limited.

Sam Glazer, formerly with the Regal, Famous Players' Film Service and Globe Films Limited has been appointed Toronto manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Limited, which now has its offices located in the Hermant Building, Dundas Street East, Toronto.

The Princess theatre at Perth, Ontario, has been acquired by purchase by the Ottawa Valley Amusement Company, which has recently taken over quite a number of picture theatres in Eastern Ontario. The Princess theatre was formerly owned by Colonel J. M. Balderson.

With five large theatres in actual operation and four theatres nearing completion, all in the City of Toronto, Jule and J. J. Allen have been making a specialty of combination advertisements in local newspapers in which the names of all nine houses are mentioned.

DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION BANQUET

A BANQUET of the Motion Picture Directors' Association was held Tuesday, September 16th, 1919, at Cafe des Beaux Arts. President George Irving acted as toastmaster, and Charles Miller, chairman of the Reception Committee. Addresses were made by Charles Giblin, president of the West Coast Lodge No. 1; Edmund Weildman, editor of the Forum; Augustus Thomas, and others.

Mr. Weildman spoke on the influence of pictures on the coming generation, that is, how far that it can go on the immature mind of children. Mr. Chappell, publisher, related some of his experiences while abroad. He happened to be there when the armistice was signed and was present at the first meeting of the Allies.

There was a brilliant entertainment which was furnished by Ed. Small, which included such people as Doraldina, Loretta MacDermott, and several others. A vote of thanks was extended to Charles Miller for his services as chairman of the Reception Committee.

Tampa

THE W. C. T. U. Society of Tampa, Florida met in the First Baptist Church and passed resolutions to petition the Mayor for relief from the vaudeville which is being sandwiched in between pictures here.

The meeting was well attended and the sentiment seemed to be against vaudeville in every way, but particularly against its being shown in the Motion Picture Theatres, and camouflaged as motion pictures.

Mr. Wm. H. Wassman, representing the feature, "The Birth of a Race," which was made in Tampa, Florida, has been in that city for several days and arranged with the La Belle Amusement Company, who control a number of Tampa theatres, to present it in Tampa and surrounding territory.

The Tampa, Fla., "Tribune" of Sept. 9, carried the advertisement, of a new amusement concern, who make application for a charter.

The company is to operate under the title, "Tampa Enterprises" and may conduct all manner of amusement enterprises, including theatres, amusement parks, dance halls, bathing beaches, etc.

The incorporators are, George H. Hickman, President; J. S. McCreight, Vice-President; E. A. Smith, Secretary and Treasurer. All of them are Jacksonville, Fla. men.

"Stars on Auction Block-Exhibitor Pays"

If we're all going to be fighting for a limited number of stars, we (the exhibitors) are all going to be held up. We're going to be their servants. We'll just simply be working for them. And that to my notion sums up what the effect of the single picture policy on the open market for big star productions will be. That is exactly what it is leading to.

It is not fair to the conservative and yet enterprising exhibitor who has built up a following for certain stars. Star series contracts, with the one picture cancellation clause, give the exhibitor protection and more of a square deal.

And the single picture policy, I am afraid, will act as a boomerang for exhibitors who expect to lure away the following of their competitors.

I think the stars are making a big mistake in offering their services to the highest bidder, putting themselves on the auction block as it were, and the distributors offering their productions on the single picture basis are I believe making an equally big mistake. The stars would do better by staying in the same concern and being loyal. They may not perhaps be able to make quite as much money for the time being if they stay with the same old concern, but their income would be steady and sure and their future would be of a more substantial character. It would be better for the exhibitor, for the exchanges, for the stars themselves and for the business as a whole. It would have a tendency to stabilize the film industry and the stars would be more certain of holding their prestige.

Under the star series plan or any other plan that affords mutual protection between distributor and exhibitor, the exchanges naturally will stick by the exhibitors with whom they have been doing business right along and more apt to give them a square deal than the other exchanges that have nothing in particular to bind them to any exhibitors because they are offering their productions in the open market on a free-for-all basis with no guarantee of protection on subsequent star releases.

While it is possible through the single picture policy for one exhibitor to take away the stars around which a fellow competitor may have built his following it does not necessarily mean that that exhibitor is going to lure away that following to his own house. Usually the patrons who have become closely identified with a certain theater have confidence enough in the exhibitor who has been providing them with satisfactory entertainment to believe that he will continue giving them good shows regardless of the fact that some of his stars may have been switched to another house.

The following that an exhibitor has created for certain stars in one house will not follow them all around town. That following is going to be loyal to a large extent to the exhibitor who built it up and will have faith in his judgment. The stars that leave for another house have to remake to a certain extent a new following, while the exhibitor who originally made them popular in the town will retain his business by exploiting new stars. I will venture to say that as far as the general run of stars showing in the theaters today are concerned with few exceptions, we, the exhibitors, can recreate new stars to take their places within six months. If this is true, and I am convinced from my experience that it is, it will easily be seen that any policy which permits a certain class of exhibitors to attempt to profit by the exploitation of their competitors is not going to bear fruit for anyone concerned. The single picture policy, I believe, is a great mistake. It gives the exhibitors too much opportunity to fight among themselves and certainly has not a stabilizing influence on the business.

A clothing merchant gets a certain line of goods and creates a demand for it, and while doing so he is creating a following for this line of business and for himself personally. A competitor may stock up with the same sort of goods, but the merchant who originally introduced it in the market will nevertheless hold a great portion of his business. His following, just as in the case of the wise exhibitor, is going to remain loyal to him.

At times perhaps the exhibitor may use the single picture policy to advantage, but as a steady diet I do not think that the majority who are planning for the future will care very much about it.

New Minneapolis House Is Building

Work on the construction of Minneapolis' new $1,500,000 moving picture theatre and office building on the site of the old T. B. Walker homestead, Eighth street and Hennepin avenue was begun this week. The new theatre, it is said, will surpass anything for beauty, comfort and capacity in the Northwest. Increased need of a spacious moving picture house for the exhibition of high class, first release pictures has prompted the owners to build the huge auditorium.

The structure is being built by the Industrial Investment Company, Harry E. Pence and Archie Walker being the owners. Ascher Brothers of Chicago, owners of a long chain of theatres, are lessees.

Eubank Loses Mother

Victor Eubank, author and moving picture director, left this week to attend the funeral of his mother, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Eubank, who died in Chicago, after a brief illness.

Censor Bill in Georgia to Come Up Again

At the last meeting of the Georgia Legislature a censorship bill was introduced that met with instant opposition from the various exchange men doing business in the state of Georgia. The Atlanta Exchange Managers' Association, of which A. C. Bromberg is president, in cooperation with W. C. Patterson, head of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, after several conferences decided to fight the measure to a finish. Forces were organized and after diligent effort on the part of both the exchange men and Mr. Patterson the bill was kept in the committee room until the legislature adjourned for the year.

Governor Dorsey, of Georgia, promises to bring the bill up again at the next Legislature. In the meantime the Atlanta Exchange Managers' Association and Mr. Patterson of the Managers' Association are organizing forces to defeat any such drastic measures as have been proposed. Much credit for the defeat of this bill at the last Legislature is due to the above organizations and to Mr. Patterson for their untiring efforts.

Such a bill as was proposed by the Georgia Legislature would have affected all of the southern states supplied by the Atlanta exchanges, so that the efforts extended to defeat the censorship bill in Georgia will prove beneficial to the other southern states, especially Alabama, Mississippi and Florida.

Motion Picture Business Men Meet

The first annual meeting of the Motion Picture Business Men's Club, Inc., was held Sept. 16 at the club rooms, Hotel Knickerbocker, and many matters pertaining to the future operation of the club were discussed.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Percy L. Waters, president; B. S. Moss, first vice-president; Jules E. Brulatour, second vice-president; C. F. Zittel, treasurer; Richard A. Rowland, secretary. William Randolph Hearst and Adolph Zukor were elected members of the board of governors for three year periods and J. Stuart Blackton and Paul Brunet for two year periods. The officers of the club together with Mr. Hearst, Mr. Zukor, Mr. Blackton and Mr. Brunet compose the entire board of governors. Maurice Silverstone was appointed recording secretary.

South Florida Showmen to Band Permanently

At the personal invitation of C. E. Kessnich, manager of the Metro Exchange at Atlanta, Ga., motion picture exhibitors from all parts of South Florida gathered recently in Lakeland, Fla., to review current releases of the larger bookings and for an interchange of ideas on exploitation. The gathering was the first of the kind ever held by these Florida picture men, who were so enthusiastic over the possibilities of mutual profit embodied in Mr. Kessnich's innovation that they decided to meet again and also took steps towards the formation of a permanent state organization.

Strike In Portland Theatres

Musicians and Operators Walk Out; Houses Operate with Non-Union Help

PORTLAND motion picture houses are in the throes of a strike. On Sunday, September 7, musicians and operators in the fifteen Portland cinema houses located in the business section walked out as the result of the refusal of motion picture managers to comply with the wage scale and working conditions of the Theatrical Federation placed in their hands 30 days before.

The minimum number principle as applied to orchestras which the union men ask be immediately established in each of these theatres is the clauses upon which theatre managers are holding out. Union musicians, stating that but 95 of their local with a membership of 650 have employment in their chosen profession, have asked that 60 musicians be immediately employed.

Other requests of the union men have been agreed to by the managers without exception. These requests include a raise of from eighty cents to one dollar an hour with time and a half for Sundays, holidays and over time for the operators, a raise of salary for musicians and a raise of wages and the employment of extra men for union bill posters. Stipulations of hours, comfortable surroundings and other minor conditions have been named in the union demands and agreed to without question by the managers.

With the exception of every house but one, the fifteen theatres named by the union are operating without any interruption with non-union musicians and operators. No trouble has been experienced in filling the positions left open by the walk-out. Each manager had as many as 10 applications from experienced non-union operators while even more musicians applied. The one theatre which is still employing union help is the Globe theatre which has been declared fair by the Theatrical Federation after a conference in which it was proven to the union men's satisfaction that the theater was not succeeding and could not afford the extra expense of musicians other than the organist now employed.

"It is the spirit of the demands to which the theatre managers particularly object," C. S. Jensen of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg has declared speaking for the other managers. "We have found it very easy to get along without union help and we intend to do so until we can run our own theatres along policies we think best."

English Exhibitors Are Here

Three British Theatre Men Making Trade Tour of American Cities

FOR the purpose of studying the American film industry and theatrical conditions in general, three leading exhibitors of England are making a trade tour, including the following cities: New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles, San Francisco and other principal motion picture centres.

The visitors are Isaac Collins of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Victor Sheridan of London and Thomas Burns of Stockton-on-Tees, each of whom owns numerous large motion picture houses in Great Britain. They were accompanied to America by Mr. C. A. Clegg of London, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures in Great Britain.

They expect to sail for England on October 25. Mr. Collins informed a representative of Motion Picture News that he is operating eight theatres in the seven cities, and that his territory is being served by exchanges in Newcastle.

In this particular territory there are about four hundred motion picture theatres. These exhibitors declared that there was absolutely nothing to the recent newspaper stories anent a boycott against American films.

Thomas Burns has a 3,000-seat house at Stockton-on-Tees. Mr. Collins is the only one of three visiting exhibitors interested in distributing. His company is Picture Playhouses, Ltd.

The newspapers of London give absolutely no co-operation to the motion picture theatres, but the province newspapers are more receptive. Admission prices generally run from eighteen cents to fifty cents. Orchestras generally are five pieces, but sometimes seven. It was stated that exhibitors generally in England were installing the pipe organs in preference to the orchestras.

Victor Sheridan is managing director of Associated Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd. They had the highest praise to offer for the manner in which pictures were presented in the New York theatres.

"The motion picture industry in England stands today on the eve of a period of tremendous expansion," said Mr. Collins in discussing conditions in Great Britain. "For five years the industry was hampered by the war, with the result that no new theatres were built and the producing activities of the various English companies were greatly reduced.

"Now, however, with peace at hand, the English motion picture exhibitor can look forward to nothing but a wonderful era of expansion. Plans are being made for a great increase in the number of motion picture theatres, and many splendid houses will be built during the next few years. The English producers are resuming activities, and are giving more attention to producing photoplays along American standards. A number of companies are said to be planning the importation of American technical staffs to aid them in competing with the American producers.

"The American photoplay is tremendously popular in Great Britain and will always be so in my opinion."

Arrow Directors Meet New Appointments

The Annual Directors' Meeting of the Arrow Film Corporation was held at the offices of the company in New York last week. A number of important changes were made in the personnel of the officers: Mr. W. Ray Johnston was elected vice-president of the corporation and Mr. P. B. Dana was elected secretary of the company.

Mr. Dana is a newly elected officer of the company, while Mr. Johnston has held the position of treasurer for several years.

Mr. W. E. Shallenberger was re-elected president and the same board of directors re-appointed.

The meeting was one of the most enthusiastic ever held by Arrow, and the various reports of the progress of business particularly gratifying.

The foreign department of the Arrow under the management of Mr. Bennett J. Brandon, has already shown great strides.

The new office in London has shown great activity in disposing of a number of features, as well as short subjects.

Arrow is contemplating establishing a branch office in Paris and to that end, has already started negotiations.

All-Night Theatre Is Big Success

A couple of weeks ago, the all-night movie show was started in Cleveland, as an experiment, pure and simple. It is no longer an experiment. The all-night movie is now an assured fact, and has come to stay.

So says Manager Wolcott of the Princess Theatre, Euclid avenue, Cleveland, who has long cherished the plan to keep his lights burning after others have turned theirs out.

The Princess Theatre is running twenty-two hours every day. It is closed for two hours early in the evening, just to give the attendants time to clean it up, and make it presentable for the next twenty-two hours' business.

Mr. Wolcott says the house is doing splendid business at night.

Stanley Company Adds to Theatre String

Announcement is made by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America of another important link in the extensive chain of theatres which are to form the holdings of this corporation in conjunction with the Nixon-Nirdliner interests. The new playhouse is to be erected in Chester, Pa.

The playhouse will be called the Nixon theatre, and will be financed by the estate of the late Samuel F. Nixon and Thomas M. Love, business manager of the Klaw and Erlanger interests in Philadelphia, who have owned the ground for some time, in association with the Stanley Company of America and Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the company.

Character Actor Dead

Jay Dwiggins, veteran character actor and associated with F P-Lasky, died suddenly September 8, while attending a Hollywood motion picture theatre. Heart failure is said to have been the cause of his death.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

Standard Prices vs. Sliding Scale

FOR several months past we have been sensing a growing feeling amongst exhibitors that admission prices are again inadequate to insure them a net yearly profit commensurate with the amount of money invested in their theatres and the time and brains they are putting into their business.

From all parts of the country come reports of raises in prices, of complaints concerning the increased exhibiting expenses and other things which lead us to believe that there is a feeling of unrest and doubt in the minds of many good showmen as to what should be their policy in the future.

Should they raise their prices and, if so, should the advance be to another standard price for all productions, regardless of their cost or pleasing qualities, or should the shows be priced individually?

Will the public keep on going to the theatre as often as they have in the past if prices go much higher?

What is the thing to do to again adjust matters so they can make their theatres pay a reasonable profit?

The answers to these questions are being given a lot of thought by progressive exhibitors and many a good showman who in the past has felt that he could make a decision on a business proposition quickly and with belief in his judgment is now in doubt. They don't know what they should do nor when they should do it.

In the hope that the opinions, beliefs and arguments, pro and con, on this subject, which for the sake of placing under a concrete explanatory head we will term "Admission Prices—Standard vs. Sliding Scale," written by exhibitors will be of interest and aid those who have not as yet decided on their policy, we are arranging to publish a series of articles written by good showmen from all parts of the country, with representation in cities from the smallest to the largest.

The first article we print under this head, although we have already used one on this subject from the pen of Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is written by Ernest Stellings, publicity manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., a city of the size which we believe is in deeper water today as the result of changed exhibiting conditions than any other class of town.

Mr. Stellings' story will be followed by others in succeeding issues. Exhibitors are invited to contribute to this series and do not need to wait for a special invitation. Send in your article and be assured that we will find it space. We believe that this subject is of major importance to every exhibitor. From a consensus of opinions we hope to aid you in your particular problem.

By Ernest Stellings

OUR admissions at the Grand theatre at this time, are six, eleven and seventeen cents for which we are giving a feature of five, six or seven—and sometimes more—and in addition a news weekly always, a cartoon two days of the week, and on other days we show a one or two reel comedy and one act of vaudeville. You may readily see what this means at the admissions we are charging, but what are we going to do when the exchanges raise the rentals 50 per cent. or more? Shall we cut down the length of our program or raise the admission? There are many who are asking the same question.

There was probably never a more inopportune time to raise the admission prices. When the raise came during the war the people took it as a war measure, but now when an attempt is being made to lower the H. C. L. they probably will not look at the raise in the same light. In my opinion we will both cut down the length of our program and raise our admission as has already been done in the cities, but up to this time we are not decided on the topic for a certainty. We have made an effort to give the people what they want the way they want it but when the increased rentals come as they are sure to we have but two courses to take—cut the program, as suggested, or raise the admission. All showmen will have to decide, I believe, within the next three months because in that length of time I believe that the rentals will have raised from twenty-five to fifty per cent.

It has always been our policy to vary the admission with the cost of the picture and we do not see any necessity to change it on account of "selective booking." We do this because we feel that our patrons should be admitted at a price that will give us only a reasonable profit. Take for instance the merchant—wouldn't it seem rather queer to buy sugar, corn, flour, molasses, potatoes, beans, etc., at the same price per pound? Why shouldn't picture theatre admissions be set in accordance with the cost of the article being sold—for the picture is sold. Would you feel justified in paying fifty cents to see Pickford, Chaplin, Fairbanks, and the other big stars' pictures and then come and see some other picture that was never as good in any way? I most certainly would not. The patrons would not be willing to pay for their entertainment in accordance to this plan. I would feel that I had not received "a square deal."

Do not understand that I mean to raise the admission just because the star has a good following—that would "kill" his drawing power if anything would.

Merchandise the pictures that you have, they are what you have to sell. Judge the admissions by the price of the productions so as to be fair to yourself, the star, the producer, and the PUBLIC. On your regular program pictures set a price that can be cahged with fairness to all and do not change until you have to on account of the rental of the picture which should not be only yhen you have a "special" that is a "special," and when this is done tell the patrons that it is necessary.

Your Idea and Ours

IRENE CASTLE'S good samples of advertising on "The Firing Line" which drifted in to this department immediately after the release of the picture seem to have petered out for of the several coming to our attention lately none have not been noteworthy. This one of the Palace's, Wichita, Kansas, is better than some of the recent samples but it, too, is far from a model. The cut fails to print well enough to make the stars features distinguishable which therefor destroys practically the whole value of the half tone used. The billing of the stars name in this above the title of a very well known book, must mean that Miss Castle is a favorite in Wachita which if a fact, is correct. The selling talk is good even if not especially explanatory especially the top sentence which excites interest as to what this message is that is being talked of so mysteriously. The ad is also to be commended for its white space. With the cut printing better, this would have rated rather well. We of course are not able to judge whether this is the fault of the cut or the printer but are inclined to think that the screen is too fine for newspaper work. This display was eight inches double column.

Many managers are looking through a key hole when it would be easier to open the door and see what lies beyond.

THIS display of the Strand's Louisville, Ky., doesn't say but very little, and might be advertising washing machines so far as the reading matter goes, but at the same time it surely did stick out on the page and movie fans no doubt know that it referred to a picture which sounds rather interesting. However, after the cut the rest of the ad isn't at all out of the ordinary. The selling talk isn't even quite clear, "what'da yu mean?" "a story of a young man whose motto—and of a girl of the circus." That doesn't say a thing. Still it is pretty hard to dish them up day after day so they will pass with the 100 per cent mark and maybe this is enough out of the ordinary so far as style is concerned to move it up to at least the average class. Ordinarily we might ask why something wasn't said about the music and admissions but in a "kidding" ad of this kind the subject isn't especially important.

The display was three columns wide and ten inches deep.

The "sticker" may gum things up but people rarely say the things about him they do concerning the "rolling stone."

FOR the most part we call this one of the best newspaper displays we have ever looked over, especially in the printing and the way the ad has been tied up with the hot weather theater name cut. The only question we would raise at all to this three column twelve inch display, is whether or not a little bit more explanatory selling talk might not have been used to advantage, unless the Palace ad man thought it best not to say too much about the story. Anyway he has made great use of two cuts, made the title of the film suggest a "snow" picture as well as giving the impression of coolness at the Palace and put his printed matter together in excellent taste. We would say that using the cut of Elliott Dexter and billing his name above Lila Lee was absolutely correct. If you can reproduce this in your city cut it out of our page and file it away for the first "snow" picture you run next year, as you probably won't have to apologize for extreme humidity much longer this season. The Palace is located at Wachita, Kansas.

Your patrons may like comedy but be sure you don't make your theatre a joke.

"SUSPENSE" has been the key note of moving pictures for years. Sol Broenig, manager of the Modern Theatre in Providence, R. I., realizes it and allows the idea to enter into his advertising. The accompanying illustration represents a three column advertisement, 125 lines deep and in its makeup less than 100 words are used, but every one of them is well chosen. He uses a photograph of the star to good advantage and that alone appeals. That catch line "but don't let's spoil the story—come and see it," may have been overworked, but here it is used to good advantage. The drawing itself is an artistic piece of work, and its appearance on a crowded theatrical page could not pass by unnoticed. We don't like that word "that," though because it is entirely out of place, but then perhaps the artist did not have room enough on the line to write out the word and thereby abbreviated it.

The "line of demarcation" of a theatre is the one which waits at the box office.

AS we have remarked before, Seattle certainly does come through with some pretty advertising and here we are again with a display of the Strand's on Bryant Washburn in "A Very Good Young Man" that monopolized a half page of the Seattle Times. You can take that "monopolized" two ways too for when you looked at this page of the paper you didn't see anything else but the ad. All the rest of the four columns went by the boards.

Beginning with the selling talk which I guess isn't original but nevertheless mighty good, you jump to a big cut that identifies Washburn, gives you the full idea that this is a comedy and then your eye hits the star's name for confirmation of your recognition of him in the cut, with the title of the picture coming in for last place but big enough so you get the mental impression that this is a good story. There you are. Your picture is sold. It may have cost you something to do it but nothing risked, nothing gained, and Seattle exhibitors evidently makes this buying of big space pay as they keep it up week after week.

If you expect to be believed tell your patrons the truth in your advertising.

WE rather like tris display on "The City of Comrades," although it rather orthodox and sells only the feature when plenty of space was provided for mention of other numbers in the program and a little more extensive selling talk.

What Live Wires Are Doing

However, considering the fact that Howard Ramsey, who manages the Royal which is located at El Dorado, Kansas, is probably publicity expert along with his other duties and that El Dorado isn't as large as New York we would say that this is especially commendable. The display looks tasty, the cuts have been used to advantage and the famous Salvation Army catch line has been well utilized.

If all towns of the size of El Dorado were doing as well in their advertising this department would languish and die as there would be little need of trying to educate exhibitors to the idea that advertising pays and of showing them examples of good displays.

If you had a great show and no-one came to see it, you will find the reason hidden in the fact that you kept the information to yourself concerning your picture.

FOR once an Albany exhibitor has gotten out of the rut and come through with something different in a display in spite of the fact that it is the custom of the Capital city to set 'em up in a string with about every other word displayed in bold caps.

This ad for Frank Keenan in "The World Aflame" is the best thing we have ever seen from Albany and comes in for a full measure of praise. The Albany has used a good producer's cut as a basis and built around it very well and then added a nice decorative border.

It's good to see such a commendable display from a city where they have been very much at fault in this line.

Lots of words begin with "S" but success is not the least of them nor yet the easiest to spell in deeds.

IF you are going to have an Anniversary Week, better make note of this display of the Midway's of Rockford, Ill., five columns wide by a full page in depth, as it is classic. You may have to change the number of candles but there is white space enough for additions and as for quality you will go a long way to find anything which will equal it.

The display is the work of Roscoe W. Segar and we are making mention of this fact because when a man can evolve a gem like this he is entitled to a little publicity on his own account in addition to having his work commended.

So far as the bill at the Midway goes, this is just an announcement of the full program, but as the "birthday" party is the big event, saying more on this display would have harmed rather than helped its effectiveness. We get out the 100 per cent label for this as something special for a special event. We hope that the Midway retains Mr. Saeger's services for its own good as well as for ours, for from this source we shall expect to get other specimens of first class displays.

WE are partial to these hand drawn ads, and were it possible for the average exhibitor to avail himself of their use, would always recommend them in preference to using a stock cut and attempting to build around it.

This four column seven inch display of the Rialto's (San Francisco) looks mighty good to us and the way the cut of Elliot Dexter has been linked with decorative matter suggestive of the title of the picture, we call good work. We also think that giving Mr. Dexter the headline is good judgment as he is probably much more of a drawing card than the star the producers are giving the lead.

There is a good mention of the smaller numbers on the bill, something which we believe is essential nowadays. The Rialto might have added a little selling talk, as the story of this picture would bear a little boosting but the artist probably didn't find any very good place to shove it in after he had his design mapped out and passed it up for that reason.

Be sure that the "bills" you receive from the exchange represent a "bill" of which your patrons will approve.

THE Strand at Seattle is a Jensen and Von Herberg house, so naturally good advertising is to be expected from it although this is hardly up to the standard maintained. It does, however, attract attention by the amount of white space reserved and once that is done interest is aroused by a couple of good paragraphs of selling talk, so we should say that the display passes for a sample of straight advertising where no time was wasted on frills. The cut used isn't much, as it doesn't print up any too well and is rather too small for the space purchased, three columns wide by fifteen inches deep. Also "producer" sticks out all over it. The Strand is paying considerable attention to its smaller features, of which we most surely approve.

ASIDE from white space, this display of the Parkway's, Baltimore, doesn't seem to us as being what we would naturally expect from a theatre classing with this house. A cut which if it had printed would no doubt have meant something to those who are admirers of Eugene O'Brien is practically wasted in this ad. The selling talk is good literature but has not been artistically framed and gives the display a cheap appearance.

Now if we are going to advertise a picture in which O'Brien appeared we would try to make our display suggest the "Beau Brummel" stuff. It is the matinee girl who is strongest for this star, and "gush" and romance are the angles to bring into prominence. For a cut we would have used a good likeness of the star at the side of the space purchased and set the reading matter directly referring to O'Brien at one side. With this basis, we would have tried to work in some "flourishes" in the way of decorative rule, etc.

This display was three columns by 12 inches. The Parkway usually comes through with some good displays, so this cannot be viewed as an example of their usual work.

IF this display was from some big city where all the helps that a good printing house affords were available and where the man who writes the ads gets paid a regular salary for doing this sort of work alone, we would pan this display considerable.

Scoring Hits and Errors

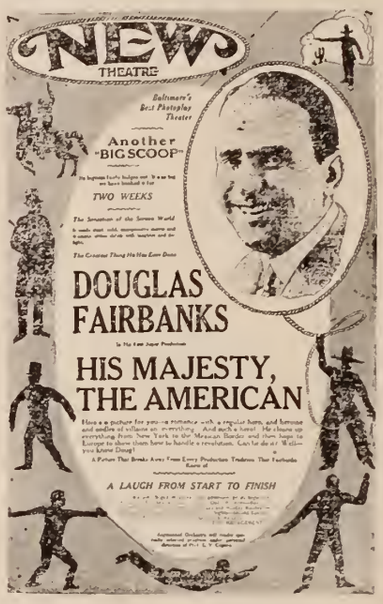
However, the lady who wrote this copy for "Little Women" doesn't pretend to know all there is to know about advertising and her home town, Austin, Minn., isn't the largest in the world, and besides in addition to helping her husband manage the Lyric, we'll bet that she provides a good home for him in the bargain, so when all these things are considered we will have to be a bit charitable.

However, from the samples of advertising sent in we judge that Mrs. Latta likes the looks of this wide rule for she uses it on all her displays. Well, we haven't much use for black rule, especially in a display on a "Little Women." To our mind this whole display is too black, but one thing we must compliment the ad woman about is following out the same line of lettering as that which the producers used on the cut, although we also think this is too heavy. We should much prefer a thin light shaded letter. This was a quarter page and attracted attention at once, therefore we must judge that it is a good display.

Some plead guilty, some plead not guilty and others cite their war records.

AT first glance we said that we would never advertise Mary Pickford the way the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, has and then we changed our mind, especially since an explanation as to the identity of the face pictured is made by the use of the first line. There is, however, quite a point illustrated here. Pickford has endeared herself to the fans by her ingenue role and when she is advertised in this way are her admirers going to resent having their favorite made an object of caricature or are they going to be impressed by that feeling of curiosity one feels in viewing himself in one of those mirrors which distort? Incidentally, are these same people going to view the anties of their movie queen in the picture the same way? We give it up.

As to the ad itself, leaving out the question of policy, we would say that the Des Moines has accomplished what it set out to do, arouse curiosity along with its announcement of the playing of the "Hoodlum." Here is another case where advertising the star and title with letting the story go hang is correct. Any selling talk on this which went any farther than to promise fun and frolic would be useless.



There is one bad thing about traveling by subway. You miss the sunshine of the surface. Keep your theatre out of the subway.

FROM the South, Jacksonville, Florida, comes the first display on Doug Fairbanks' latest picture, "His Majesty, The American," and from it can be gained an idea of the producers' aids that have been promised as something better than average. This page of the Arcade's was only one of four printed in colors which Manager Edwin A. Smith used in the Times-Union of Sunday, September 7th, so we should say that Jacksonville had plenty of opportunity to know all about "His Majesty." This layout probably cost the Arcade a pretty penny, but from what we hear of the business the film did we imagine that there are no regrets for the expenditure.

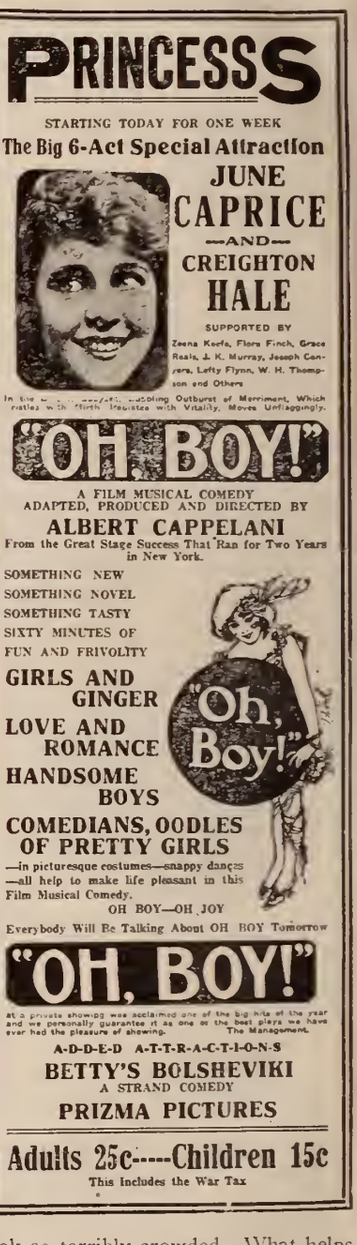
However, we started out to use this display for comments on cuts and in that connection we surely are pleased with this one. When you have a star like Fairbanks we believe this is the kind of producers' materials to use as the star overshadows the story and you get instant attention from the reader when a cut like this one looks out from the page.

There is another angle of this four-page display, one of which is produced, and that is that when you are spending a lot of money to buy a picture it is just the time to increase the advertising appropriation. Don't let them slide by just because you know that they will do enough business to make you a profit. Go out after the extra dollars and not only increase the net profits but make new patrons for your theater.

As for the technical part of this ad, it is big space framed in good taste and presents Fairbanks and his picture. The printing was in two colors, a frequent practice of the Arcade.

THERE is no question but that the Colonial (Jackson), Miss.) started out on the right track in advertising "The Third Degree," but a cut which doesn't express fully the statement in the catch line and in which the attention is divided between the picture of the star and the dramatic action which is one of the big scenes of the picture, can not be labeled as good producers' aid. Using the same reading matter set the same way a display that would sell this picture much better could have been framed if two small cuts were made from this large one, with the catch line draped alongside the action scene and the picture of the star used to dress the display.

The announcement the Colonial makes would have looked better if it had been boxed and used toward the bottom of the ad.



This was two columns by nine inches.

Those who devote all their time and energy to the pursuit of happiness are generally about two or three jumps ahead of it.

THE Princess of Springfield, Ill., sponsor for this fifteen inch two display started to write a history of the film business but in spite of the fact that it has a great deal more reading matter than we recommend for a space of this size, the ad doesn't look so terribly crowded. What helps the appearance of the display is the judicious use of good cuts, one of the things the producers did to help the exhibitor put this picture over was to construct some noteworthy ones, and for a picture of this kind the "bubble and blurb" of the way it is exploited will pass as the right kind of dope inasmuch as this is an adaptation of a musical comedy and as such should be advertised in the same vein as if it were the stage version which was being exploited.

We believe as a rule better results may be obtained by using a space

more equal in depth and width than this but this ad is also an exception in this instance. All in all this a very good display where too much time for typesetting could not be secured and no doubt was productive of excellent results for "Oh Boy."

It is sad to think how many wild oats crops have been blasted by the "dry" wave. Mr. Hoover ought to be called back into office or the attention of the Government experimental station called to the fact.

HERE is another excellent display from Kansas City, a two column ten inch sample of the Doric's work.

Beginning with the theatre cut, which is excellent and in keeping with the name of the theatre, the Doric ad man rightly gives the head lines to the star with the title next in importance and then makes his display artistic by the use of a very good scene cut which suggests the romantic lover which is the stuff that has won O'Brien his following.

It would seem that it might have been advisable to have said a little more concerning the picture itself, say mention the author and the origin of the continuity with a little hint of who the star is vamping rather than base all your appeal on the star alone. However, if this had been done, much of the beauty of the ad as it now stands would have been lost and we are not quite sure but that this artistic appearance is worth retaining at the expense mentioned. The white space in this gives it the "clean" look that is always so desirable on advertising which does not treat of a tense feature.

THE Metropolitan must have wanted something which would attract the class of people who make fairs an event in selecting "Whom the Gods Would Destroy" for fair week at Minneapolis, that is if the rest of the advertising on this feature is as sensational as this display.

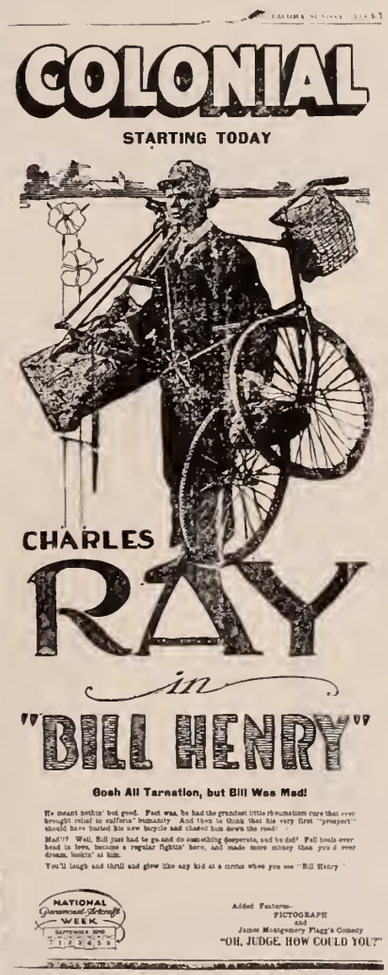
Anyway this is a lurid sample but at that we think it is advertising this picture exactly as it should be advertised especially when there are a lot of transients in town who are attracted by a flash and to whom a story of this kind will appeal.

The cut used in this three column ten inch display is excellent where you want the effect which we have mentioned and the selling talk has been made to fit the action of the cut and to carry the kind of appeal most likely to attract business for this sort of film. Certainly this can't be called artistic but it sells "Whom the Gods Destroy" as well as anything we have seen along this line and therefore is entitled to a good percentage rating.

The spear is to give way to the bayonet. War veterans are to get jobs as chorus men.



UNLESS the producer could come through with an alibi for this display on "The Unpardonable Sin" used by the Key theatre, of Houston, Texas, and which we don't think they can, for the reason that other ads on the page printed up well enough, this is a sample of cuts which are not worth anything more than scrap metal. There is a good idea here but it is killed in the way the cut prints and therefore much of the effectiveness of the ad is lost.

Even the printed matter can hardly be read in the original which was two columns wide by six inches deep. If you have been thinking of using this cut in a display on the feature better side-step it for something which will come up better.

Business suits will cost as much as $150. This will no doubt amuse the "tired business man."

IF an exhibitor wants to secure some good advertising which he can borrow to his advantage, we think it will pay him to subscribe for the Seattle Times Ledger, for there is more good picture displays in this paper week after week than in any publication which comes into this office.

The example selected for this week, the Colonial's display on "Bill Henry," is as good as anything we have happened to run across so far. The cut used is an actual scene from the film and certainly does attract attention, and gives the reader a pretty good idea of what Ray will do in this picture. Billing Ray above the title we believe is now justifiable for this star has grown in public favor until he overshadows his vehicles, which are largely characteristic anyway.

FROM the Kansas City Times we clipped three ads from several pages which for the most part were all mighty good. This is one of our selection, a two column, six inch display of "Oh Boy" at the Liberty.

The ad man used one of the exceptional cuts the producers furnished on this picture and then framed his reading matter to the best advantage of anything we have seen on this feature. His selling talk is in keeping with the subject and the whole display certainly looks nice. If you go in for hand drawn advertising look this over. It is worth your while.

THE Royal of Providence, R. I., has a manager who is also a clever artist and in this display, three columns by five inches, he has done some exceptionally good work in a layout for the three bills he advertises.

It seems a shame that after doing so much good work in framing the basis of his display he allows the printer to set his reading matter in so conventional, unartistic way. Incidentally, we don't see why Mr. Lovett doesn't use his pen for the reading matter, too. If he had, this display would have come in for full approbation in spite of the fact that he advertises three bills all at once, which we remark for the 'steenth time we consider bad policy.

However, that is the Royal's business. This ad certainly attracted attention by its cuts and therefore no doubt carried the eye fully to the reading matter, badly as it has been set up.

Model of Airplane Used by Raleigh, to Exploit "Great Gamble"

A NOVEL publicity stunt that is attracting much attention and drawing large crowds has been devised by the Aronson & Browne Amusement Enterprises of Raleigh, N. C., and is being used by them to exploit "The Great Gamble" at the Alamo theatre in Raleigh.

The following letter from O. R. Browne of the firm explains the stunt:

"Over the main entrance of the Alamo we have suspended a model of an aeroplane about three feet wide and four feet long. It was made of beaver board and white pine at a total cost of about $2. We have placed inside this plane an ordinary motor like the ones used on picture machines or electric pianos. This runs the propeller and at the same time turns a wooden cogwheel on shaft which revolves against a piece of fibre.

"This little novelty has started 'The Great Gamble' off at record-breaking speed which episode No. 2 even surpassed. I believe exhibitors using this stunt will find it highly profitable. Another feature of the idea is that we are going to give the plane to the boy holding the lucky number on the last episode of the serial. Every boy who buys a ticket on Saturday received a double coupon ticket, half of which he drops into the ticket box and half of which he retains for the drawing on the last episode. The boys of Raleigh have become so enthused over this proposition that we notice that something over a hundred of them have made small planes and have attached them to their bicycles or are carrying them around in their hands."

Using the Twenty-four Sheet as a Basis for Lobby Display

THOSE who like to do something extra for advertising a picture and still keep their advertising appropriation down to the minimum will be interested in the story of a display which was used to good advantage at Omaha, Neb.

With the aid of a twenty-four sheet stand erected over the marquis of the Muse theatre at Omaha, Neb., and the planning of a large advertising and exploitation campaign the management of the theatre broke all records with the picture "Paid in Advance" recently.

The twenty-four sheet stand was erected at a small cost; a large billboard near the theatre was posted with a different 24-sheet of the same picture, five one sheets were used on one-sheet boards, and a photograph of the theatre was reproduced in the Omaha Sunday papers.

In the Sunday and Monday editions of the "Omaha Daily News" coupons were printed which admitted women free of charge. Sponsored by the newspaper this plan brought more than eight hundred women to the theatre during the matinees. Besides this four twenty-four sheets, 300 window-cards, 100 three sheets and 200 one-sheets were used on billboards and in store windows. The result was that the entire town was practically "covered" with the "Paid in Advance" announcements.

A window display on the feature was also arranged in the show window of the Omaha Exchange handling "Paid in Advance." This also was an effective means of attracting attention and contributed to the success of the picture.

Announcing a New Series of Exhibitor Articles

A new series of articles written by leading exhibitors is to appear in succeeding issues of the News on a subject that we believe is of great importance to every showman—"Admissions—Standard Prices vs. Sliding Scale."

Letters are going out to the exhibitors we have on our list with whom we have established an Exhibitors' Service Bureau acquaintance and who we know will be willing to write us an article on this subject.

However, we are very desirous of increasing this circle of contributing friends and a general invitation is given to all exhibitors, whether they be located in the large town or the small one, to send us in their views on this all important subject. Especially do we urge the showmen of the smaller towns to respond to our appeal, as we are sure that it is the smaller town which is being hit hardest by the exhibiting conditions that have arisen in the past year or so.

We can in a measure forecast what the big exhibitors with large seating capacities and unlimited populace to draw from are going to say.

They are going to sit tight on a policy already in force, a good fair price for all productions. They are going to look at the whole exhibiting world from their standpoint and in so doing they may mislead some of their smaller brethren into wrong paths.

Therefore, when you read the letters which we expect will begin to appear with next week's issue, we want you to give the opinions of the small boys due consideration and see wherein your exhibiting problem is like theirs before you decide definitely on your policy.

And do not fail to contribute your views. Send us a good strong argument on your theories and experience. It is going to be a great bit of exhibitorial wisdom which will be featured in these pages and you want to be in on it.

"De Luxe" The Foundation of the Industry

Harold B. Franklin, One of America's Foremost Exhibitors, Takes Issue with a Writer in a Popular Fan Magazine

IN a recent edition of a popular motion picture monthly magazine, someone professing to be an authority on motion pictures in general wrote an article called "The Menace of the De Luxe Theatre." In the course of his discussion he developed the thought that the future of the film play was hampered by so-called de luxe theatres. The entire tone of the article conveyed the impression that the future development of the silent drama would come about through the legitimate theatre.

I want to take issue with this article and point out that the so-called de luxe theatre has made possible what progress we can point to in motion pictures. The much despised de luxe theatre has done more to create a desire for better pictures than any other agency. If it were not for the rentals that the de luxe theatres are able to pay, super-productions would not be made. These theatres have set a new standard in theatre management and the way they are operated, the comfort that they give and the elegance that surround them, has done more to popularize the photoplay with a class of people who before the advent of the modern picture theatre WOULD NOT THINK OF ATTENDING THE MOVIES.

Millions of dollars have been spent throughout the country on magnificent theatres to present the motion picture art, and it is these structures that have made the industry fifth in the country and have made possible the maintenance of elaborate studios and distribution offices.

The management of the de luxe theatre has been reduced to a science. In these de luxe appointments service and surroundings the motion picture has sprung into a new popularity. Here at popular prices the public is able to get an evening's entertainment that in the past has cost it $2, and not even at this figure has the public, before the advent of the modern theatre, been able to get the same service, environment and music that the de luxe motion picture house offers. The motion picture is successful because it caters to the plain American and not to the high brows who spend $2 seeking entertainment in the legitimate theatre. Popular and de luxe when applied to motion pictures are synonymous. That the de luxe theatre is the popular theatre is proven daily in all parts of the country, where persons representing every strata of society are seen flocking to the city's de luxe motion picture theatre. I believe that the future of the motion picture tends to even more magnificent "de luxe" theatres, where not only the motion picture will be a tremendous factor in entertaining Mr. and Mrs. American Public but where music will more than come into its own.

It is the many de luxe theatres of the country with their many excellent symphony orchestras that is helping to make a musical nation of America. These orchestras have cultivated a taste for music in persons who heretofore have never given the subject a serious thought. The motion picture has attracted non-music loving patrons to the theatre, and while they are enjoying the picture the orchestras and soloists are educating them to a better understanding and eventual enjoyment of real music. All the allied arts are represented in the de luxe theatre. We have stage settings reproducing the famous paintings by the masters, we have singing, the finest soloists in the world now appear in the de luxe motion picture theatre; we have sculpturing, and the dance—in fact, anyone who attends the modern de luxe theatre cannot help but be benefitted intellectually as well as entertained.

As for booking attractions in legitimate theatres for extended runs, we find that unless the production is something unusually excellent the proposition has in most cases been a losing one. Here in Buffalo legitimate theatres presenting week runs of "big" features have played to very slim audiences, while our de luxe theatres have been breaking box office records. We have no "menace of the deluxe theatre" in Buffalo, and I doubt whether the "menace" exists anywhere.

Here is a case where the town made famous by an expression, will "show you" how to arrange a lobby display for Mabel Normand's latest picture, which will attract a whole lot of attention and add dollars to your box office receipts.

Ben Levy, who manages the Hippodrome in Missouri's capitol, Joplin, Mo., a house seating 2,000, does not claim anything startling for his display in connection with his showing of "Upstairs," but submits it as something simple, effective and inexpensive. It was sufficient to attract attention at the Hippodrome and draw good business. The outstanding feature of the display was a large head of Miss Normand placed against a dark curtain and immediately above three steps supporting a framed card, reading "Mabel Normand in 'Upstairs'." Palms were placed at either side of the curtain, adding to the dignity of the layout, and attached to the curtain were four scene stills from the production. The arrangement was given a harmonious appearance.

"His Majesty, The American" in Detroit, Eclipsing Even "Mickey"

GEORGE E. GUISE, manager of the Majestic theatre in Detroit and publicity and advertising director for all of Charles H. Miles' theatres in that city, was one of the first exhibitors in the country to prepare and handle an exploitation campaign for "His Majesty, the American." A story of his efforts and samples of his work probably will prove of value to other picture men who are to play this film later.

Arrangements to play the picture at the Majestic in Detroit were made personally several weeks ago by T. H. Ealand, general manager for Mr. Miles in Detroit and by Mr. Miles himself. Because of this fact, Mr. Guise was able to secure considerable advance publicity from Detroit newspapers.

Mr. Guise's exploitation and advertising campaign was devoted to newspapers, daily and weekly and neighborhood publications, and to street cars, inside and out. No billboards were used and not a single penny was spent for paper except for his lobby.

Two weeks before the date of the opening of the picture the first ads appeared. Then appeared the bigger displays which brought the star to the front in every line. Big cuts of the star were used in the major campaign. Other orthodox advertising was done, and when the engagement opened to say that business was good is putting it mildly. The fact is that Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American" broke all records for the Majestic the opening day. "Mickey" had held the house record up to August 31. And the next day being Labor Day, Fairbanks came right back and beat his own opening day record by a good margin. The week was one of the biggest the Majestic has ever had, and so big that it was decided to hold the picture over for a second week. It was the first time in Detroit's history that a Fairbanks picture played a second week. And it is hardly necessary to say that bigger ads were used for the second week than for the first.

Working without the aid of the usual cue sheet, Prof. J. Ward Hutton, musical director, prepared a score which probably will aid leaders who play this feature later. It could hardly be improved upon, for what better number could be chosen as a theme for "His Majesty, the American" than "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy," from "Little Johnny Jones," George M. Cohan's musical comedy success.

This number was used at screening, and was played forte by the whole orchestra down to the scene showing Doug in bed, when it was played by piano and strings alone. Allegro No. 1, by Minot, was used for the fire scene, and Dramatic Agitato No. 38, by Minot, for the police raid. Then at the scene where the policeman blows the whistle there was a rapid seque into Hurry No. 2, by Langey. For the scene showing the policemen and firemen after the big clean-up "Please Go 'Way and Let Me Sleep" was played, the chorus only being used. "Yankee Doodle Dandy" was used frequently, being played wherever Doug's real American pep was displayed.

The first scene showing the Kingdom of Alaine was introduced by Andante Misterioso No. 6, by Breil, and the prelude from L'Arlesienne Suite, by Bizet, introduced King Phillippe. After a brief pause for a shot, there was a quick seque into "Fourteen Fathoms Deep," which was played until the title "In America, etc.," where the organ picked it up.

The organ, playing twenty minutes from the title "In America, etc.," to the scene where Doug arrives in Alaine and sees the two men kiss each other at the station, played the following numbers in rotation: Western Scene by Berge, Waltzer in D flat by Moskowski, Ecstacy by Obrero, Get Out and Get Under (popular number), Manzanillo Dance of the Demons, Spagnola by Berge, Carmen, first suite, No. 4, Hungarian Dance No. 1 by Brahms, Waltzer (repeated), Mammy o' Mine, Spanish Joe from Mexico, Yankee doodle Dandy, Hungarian Dance No. 1, Laughing Love, Hunkatin and You're in Style When You're Wearing a Smile.

The orchestra, picking up the last-named number, continued it down to the title "He Has the Paper," when Yankee Doodle Dandy was again played. The same number was played by full orchestra at the title "I'll Give You That Paper."

Making "Thank You" the Foundation of Success

"THANK YOU" may seem like a small thing for the foundation of a successful motion picture play business, but these two small words are the ones that marked the beginning of the career in Flint of Lester Matt, owner of the new Strand, not only conceded by all his competitors to be the most handsome theatre in Flint, but declared by motion picture men from many of the larger cities to be one of the most attractive and fully equipped screen show houses in the Middle West.

It was about ten years ago when Mr. Matt owned a small theatre, called the Della, in honor of his wife, that he formed the habit of standing in the lobby after each show and bidding the patrons "good-bye," inviting them to come again and saying "Thank You" to every single one that went through the one exit of the little playhouse.

As is the case in many kinds of business, the matter of being polite and courteous to patrons and showing them that he appreciated their presence in his place, won many friends for Mr. Matt, or Lester, it might be best to say, for it is a question whether he is known to most of his patrons as "Mr. Matt" or just "Lester."

After he built the Strand about two years ago Mr. Matt didn't forget that "Thank You." He still said it many hundreds of times a week.

Business boomed in the Strand, too, and soon its business outgrew the capacity of 750 seats. He closed the playhouse for several weeks and began enlarging and beautifying it. Recently the New Strand was opened with seats for about 1,300, a new balcony, mezzanine boxes and loges having been added. And then the words "Thank You" were made part of the building. At convenient places near the exits and stairways leading to them were placed in raised letters the words "Thank You."

The accompanying picture shows how much Mr. Matt thinks of the slogan. It shows a view of the main exits in the foyer with the big "Thank You" that is in view of all patrons leaving the theatre, silently carrying out the work which the management of the enlarged Strand forbids Mr. Matt spending all his time at the front door as he did in the early days when he was ticket taker, manager 'n everything about the Della photoplay theatre.

Links Up with Local Carnival in Exploitation of "The Miracle Man"

JUST prior to the day that "The Miracle Man" was booked to appear at the Burns theatre, Colorado Springs, a local carnival was in full sway. Appreciating the fact that the carnival was first in the public mind the manager of the Burns linked up his advertising of the picture by mention of the carnival in a novel manner.

In the first place an open letter was addressed to the Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce who handled the carnival arrangements, congratulating them on their enterprise and mention was made prominently of the fact that "The Miracle Man" would create even as much of a sensation in the city as had the carnival when it came to the theatre the next week.

This advertisement occupied approximately a quarter of the newspaper page while scattered throughout the same edition of the Gazette were several small advertisements set up in "K. C. B." style all referring to "The Miracle Man," some in a humorous, some in a serious fashion.

The advertising created a good deal of comment and proved highly successful from a financial viewpoint.

Increased Admission Prices Increased Business

Harry Thornton, Manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Springfield, Ill., Relates What Happened When He Decided That Twenty Cents Top Was Little Enough

LIKE most of the motion picture managers I have always hesitated about raising my admission prices, realizing that the photoplay is the poor man's amusement and that when he comes to the theatre he brings his whole family and that even a five cent increase in prices meant a good deal more to some families than so many dollars would to patrons of the legitimate houses which play the two dollar attractions. I also take a pride in seeing how much good entertainment I can give my patrons for their money. I am not satisfied to just "get by" and have people go out without kicking or looking as if they would like to kick. I want them to have such a pleasant evening that they will be boosters for me and the Gaiety, for I believe that this is the way a theatre builds its patronage.

Of course in the years I have been in this business I have seen the prices of admissions go up and I, too, have had to trail along, but it has always been with a certain regret that I took down the old sign to put up a new one with a five cents increase marked thereon.

It is recently that I have again raised my admissions and as in the past it was not done because I thought I was in a position to "profiteer" rather the opposite, a feeling that with the increased expenses all around, I could not afford to keep on at the old figures.

I also decided that the program being offered at the Gaiety was worth twenty cents of any man's money, so an increase of five cents was planned. How to go about this without seeming to make any increase, and to hold all patronage was quite a job. And this is the way it was solved.

For more than a year the Gaiety theatre admission price was fifteen cents for adults, and ten cents for children, plus war tax. At times this was raised to twenty, twenty-five and thirty cents, according to the amount we have had to pay for a big special feature, or an exceptionally heavy bill. By a special feature is meant "Mickey," "The Heart of Humanity," etc. And by a heavy, expensive show is meant Fairbanks and Chaplin on the same program, or Mary Pickford and Arbuckle, etc.

The Gaiety has always had a good orchestra. People have told us that the music alone was worth the price of admission. So we hit on the idea of boosting the music in our advertising, calling special attention to the programs being played by the theatre orchestra. Two more artists were put into the pit, making as fine an aggregation of talent as can be found anywhere in this neck of the woods.

We had a good pipe organ that was never used since it was taken out of our Chicago theatre, so it was put in shape by experts from the factory, tuned, and made ready. Then we announced pipe organ music, the only theatre in the city where such music is used. The quality of our music was impressed in daily advertisements, with the result that patrons got even more satisfaction by coming to the Gaiety than ever before. We have had people stay for to see the show over again just to hear a certain musical selection that was used during the presentation.

We have had no complaints on the increased admission. In fact, we have had many people tell us our shows are better than ever, and they never say a word about the price. The musical feature is what put the raise over.

It seems that most managers are afraid to raise for fear of losing business. If the quality of the show is advertised, the quality of the music, and the quality of the theatre, there seems to be no reason why any theatre cannot get an increase in admission without losing business. Since the Gaiety raised, business has been better than ever.

I have proved that people do not object to paying a good price for a good article, and that most of the "kickers" are those who seem to have a fear that you are trying to "gyp" them when you announce a raise. If a manager will use tact and diplomacy and tell his patrons in his advertising and by other methods if possible why it is necessary to charge more for shows, most people are perfectly satisfied, but they don't, however, want to think that you are attempting to "gouge" them for even a five cent piece, and will resent it if they do.

Taking it all in all, I "got by" with my last raise much better than any I have ever made, due, I think, to the experience I had gained in the way to go about the matter and perhaps because people realize that with everything going up, including their wages, that the prices of theatre admissions are about the cheapest things in comparison to old time prices of any thing we can name. Anyway I am getting twenty cents top and doing more business than ever.

For the scene where the king brings his daughter goods news Flirtation was used, and this was followed by "Bring Back Those Wonderful Days" for the scene showing Fairbanks and hack driver drinking in front of cafe. The piano alone played the scene where Doug plays on the dresser in the small hotel, the pianist faking "blue" notes at the proper time to fit the scene. Then came a quick seque into No. 1 of La Feria Suite by Lacome. This was played once and followed by Carmena by Wilson.

The organ picks up the music at the scene where Fairbanks first meets the princess over the hedge, and this scene is introduced by Dreaming of You. Other succeeding numbers used by the organ for this twenty-minute session included Hungarian Dance No. 1, Sweethearts Long, Badinage, a few bars of Where Did You Get That Hat? Dramatic Agitato No. 38 Dance Circassian by Delibes, waltz from Ballet Dornroscheu by Tschaikowsky, Czardas, Sakuntala Overture by Goldmark, Orgies of Spirits, and a comedy mysterioso improvised for the scene where Doug leaps onto horse and escapes from his pursuers.

The orchestra returned at the title "The People of the Town, etc.," and played the Torch Dance by German. A bugle call was used for the scene where the cavalry leaves barracks, and this was followed by the Cavalry Parade No. 4 by Andino played to trio. Then came a seque into Scenes Napolitaines by Massenet. Strings and piano picked up Mammy o' Mine at title "I Can't Believe It All." At the title "The Loyal Subjects Greet Their King" the first eighteen bars of the Coronation March by Kretschmer was played, and this was followed by Yankee Doodle Dandy, which was played to end of picture.

"Thirteenth Chair" crowds at Keith's theatre, Jersey City, N. J.

Applying the Acid Test to a Special Service Idea and Proving it Sound

THE Exhibitor's Service Bureau is in a way a never ceasing grind with an indefinite goal, the hope that you are aiding exhibitors. There are few instances where the result of what is suggested ever becomes known to those who direct the section.

So it is that we may be forgiven in calling attention to the fact that the basis of the exploitation stunt used by Keith's theater, Jersey City, for the engagement of "The Thirteenth Chair" originated in the Special Service section of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Keith's made some changes in the idea and rather improved its effectiveness, but fundamentally the stunt is the same which suggested itself to us when viewing the picture for the pages mentioned. That it has proven one of the best advertising schemes in the history of Jersey City, one which a whole city is talking about, only carries out the idea we had that it would prove an interest awakener of first order. So much for "patting ourselves on the back." When Manager Milne booked "The Thirteenth Chair" he remembered that he had a good friend in the advertising department of J. W. Green's department store, the biggest of its kind in Hudson County. Furniture is a specialty of Greene's, and "The Thirteenth Chair," savoring of furniture, Milne decided to hook up his show with Green's advertising. On Monday, September 8th, Greene came out with four full columns in the Jersey Journal and the Hudson Observer, calling attention in prominent display type to the fact that "The deep, dense, dire mystery of "The Thirteenth Chair" can be solved right here, and solved correctly," and then went on to explain the merits of Green's furniture.

As a test of whether the advertising was read, Greene's, in the first edition of the Jersey Journal, surrounded the type matter on "The Thirteenth Chair" with cuts of fourteen chairs. The edition was hardly on the street half an hour, when Greene's, Keith's and the Jersey Journal were swamped with telephone calls from persons calling attention to the mistake that had occurred in the advertisement. And still there are those who insist advertising does not pay.

Manager Milne went a step further in his campaign on "The Thirteenth Chair," by stealing an entire window display from Greene's, which is located in the principal street in Jersey City.

This display was arranged by Greene's own window decorators, and was one of the most intelligent layouts ever arranged on a motion picture. Incidentaly, it was the first time that any motion picture was deemed of sufficient interest by Greene's to warrant the devotion of a window display of it.

A room was laid out something similar to that in which the clairvoyant of the picture staged her seance, and in which the murder of Edward Wales occurred. A cut out of the beautiful twenty-four sheet showing the clairvoyant majestically conducting her seance, surrounded by the company of thirteen, formed the background for the display. A streamer of "The Thirteenth Chair" was stretched across the top of the window giving ideal display to the title of the picture. A wax figure of a man which ordinarily is used to advertise men's wear, was stretched on the floor, representing Edward Wales, the second victim of the mysterious murderer in "The Thirteenth Chair." A number of window cards together with some most attractive stills from the picture were carefully arranged to give a perfect display. Then, to make the arrangement most effective from Keith's viewpoint, a large sign relating that the picture was playing at that theatre, held the centre of attraction.

This plan is very simple. Yet, one full hour before the doors of Keith's were thrown open Monday noon, there was a line which stretched more than a block in front of the auditorium. As the time for opening aproached the line was the biggest ever seen before the theatre except on a holiday, and this despite the terrific sweltering heat, which even blistered straw hats.

With the cool spell on Tuesday, Manager Milne had to call the assistance of the Police Department to keep the crowd in check. Wednesday business attained record breaking proportions again.

The display in Greene's window was a wonderful asset to the picture.

There is one main point to this story. Manager Milne knows what he talks about when he says he never under rates the intelligence of his public. It is the public, perhaps better than himself that knows a good or bad thing when it sees it, and it is always wise to strive to give the best. And when you get something good, brag all you want about it, for you can produce the goods.

Princess of Dubuque Wins with Pictures

THIS said everyone in Dubuque is talking about the Princess theatre these days. Talking isn't the only thing they are doing—they are attending the shows in a royal manner. Why? Because the managers of the theatre have realized that the way to gain patronage is to continually keep the good points of their theatre before the public.

This is the history of the Princess. Built about eight years ago, it was first a vaudeville house, then a combination of vaudeville and pictures, and lastly an exclusive motion picture theatre. Under indifferent management it paid fairly well, but the receipts were never sensational. Then it was taken over by Messrs. Billos and Yiannios, who continued to run the theatre in the same old way. But not for very long. The first thing they did was to increase their advertising. They did not use cuts, but arranged their type in an attractive manner. They experimented with various programs, decided upon a good one, and kept to it. Then they began to enlarge their orchestra. Next the theatre was redecorated. The climax was reached when, on Sunday, July 20, the progressive managers completed their improvements and announced them to the public through the medium on an eight-column ten-inch ad in the local papers.

They told of the changed appearance of their theatre, and dwelt on the increase in the orchestra. They gave the name of each musician and the instrument he played. Below that was given the program of the week. Not a complicated ad, but one that attracted a great deal of notice and brought so many people to the theatre during the day that the managers were unable to handle the crowds.

The "California's" Artistic Lobby Display

A Vigorous Exploitation Campaign Overcame Serious Obstacles for "The Brat" Engagement in Los Angeles

THE exploitation campaign carried out by Fred A. Miller and Harry Leonhardt, president and producing director of the magnificent new California theatre in Los Angeles, for "The Brat," the current Nazimova production, was conducted in a vigorous manner that not only reflected the expert showmanship of these two theatre men, but was largely responsible for the record business done during the week's pre-release showing of the Nazimova special.

It will be recalled that the new California ran "The Brat" during the traction strike in Los Angeles and notwithstanding the complete paralyzation of transportation, Nazimova drew the biggest Monday's business in the history of the house. The new record set on Monday was followed by capacity business for the week, although patrons were forced to use all sorts of emergency conveyances and even travel long distances on foot in order to attend the theatre.

The California's lobby display, which backed up the vigorous and liberal newspaper advertising and publicity campaign, struck a note of the highest artistry. It was attractive and yet reserved, in keeping with the prestige of the distinguished Russian star.

Mural paintings were the principal mediums of display. The lobby of the California, which has all the simplicity of early Greek architecture, lent itself admirably to the scheme. A portrait painter was requisitioned and instructed to paint several life-size portrait studies of Nazimova. These paintings depicted the famous Russian actress in her various moods throughout the course of the photodrama, and presented a spectacle that would instatnly arrest the eye of the passer-by.

The paintings were then set into the panels devised for display purposes in the lobby, bearing above or beneath the name of the star and that of the attraction. Then at the left of the display a smaller panel contained a novel design of a figure in a rabbit costume supposed to portray the famous rabbit dance of Nazimova, which is one of the sensational features of "The Brat." At the bottom of the panel, in contrast to this, was shown a still from the production that presented a tense moment in the story of the play.

But Mr. Miller and Mr. Leonhardt did not stop here. In their combined decoration and publicity scheme of the California's lobby, they included another display that would convey to patrons the unusual and novel character of Nazimova's role in "The Brat.". This was another panel, flanking the box office and holding a reproduction in oil of the pose in which the defiant little "Brat" lifts her skirts in disgust at the shocked and haughty members of her benefactor's family.

In the story of Maude Fulton's play the "Brat" is a little chorus waif, who is rescued from the night court by a famous author, and then taken to his home. A small caricature accompanied this panel bearing the caption, roughly lettered, of "The Brat," and below Nazimova's signature, beneath which was inscribed the device, "A new triumph of her unrivalled artistry."

Another Newspaper Which Has Come to Recognize the Universal Interest in Motion Pictures

HARDLY a day passes but that a letter comes in from a newspaper, acknowledging their conclusion that motion pictures are entitled to free space in the news pages and asking us for the best method or getting the kind of stories they want for their movie section, live, interesting short articles about new pictures and the players, not the press agent junk so many producers turn out by the ream for the use of dramatic editors. Usually the letters contain a subscription to the News, with the information that after studying the subject the editor has decided that he can obtain the material he desires more easily and quickly from our pages than through any other medium, and especially do the writers on the dramatic and amusement sections value the "Plan Book."

One of the latest communications is from the Houston Press, a portion of which is herewith copied:

Fully 99 per cent. of the growing population of this city, and that population is figured at over the 200,000 mark, is movie-mad. One must stand in line from fifteen to thirty minutes any evening to get inside any of the four or five larger houses to see just an ordinary picture.

Very little is done to play up good pictures. That is to say, little is done on the producer's part or the local manager's part, in this city, to educate the people so they can distinguish the good picture from the mediocre and the sloppy.

I am glad to say, though, that the Press, the only paper in town whose editorial staff is entirely a thing apart from the business management, is free in its criticisms of all plays, regardless of advertisement.

It is my policy, however, to acquaint the readers of the Press amusement page with good shows in the city, regardless of whether the manager of the house that has that show is an advertiser or not, on the basis that what interests 99 per cent. of the people they should know as a matter of news value.

No day goes by without at least three columns of movie stuff in the paper, while on Saturday an entire page, and occasionally two, is devoted exclusively to the movies.

Enclosed you will find check for $2.00, covering a year's subscription to the Motion Picture News to be sent as indicated. With a desire to co-op rate, I am. Yours truly,

JULIEN ELFENBEIN

Two views of the Grauman prologue and stage setting used during the engagement of "The Career of Katherine Bush"

Grauman Makes Prologue and Stage Setting the Talk of Los Angeles

ATTRACTIVE, business-building posters for lobby display has been made a most important part of the duties of members of the advertising and publicity staff of the California theatre, at Los Angeles, and so pleasing have been the displays arranged under the direction of Roy Miller, head of this department, that many people are to be found in the lobbies at all times admiring the original drawings. The style of display is changed each week, this having been found decidedly advantageous, as such a play gives new life to the lobby each week.

In the past pen-and-ink sketches, oil paintings, pastels and poster paintings have been introduced. In no instance have these been made bright, flashy or too colorful, an effort having been made by the artists to harmonize the colorings of the large posters and paintings with the silver gray of the lobby ceiling, walls and frames. Furthermore, the eight subjects made for each week have had no other lobby decoration of any kind to detract from any attention that might be given the lobby. This has been done by keeping the entire space—a width of fifty feet and a depth of thirty—entirely clear, with the exception of the announcement card which hangs from the brass rail in front of the center-box office.

Artistry marks the lobby advertising at Grauman's

There are four large massive frames on either side of the lobby. The front three on either side are used for studies advertising the production being shown, and the frames adjoining the doors on each side always contain announcements respecting the coming attraction. Some of the artists' work on the posters shown in the accompanying cut does not show because the dark reds did not have sufficient contrast from the dark background when photographed, but were most attractive under the lights or during the day. Once the patron is inside the theatre he feels an atmosphere which has been created for the picture being shown.

For the engagement of "The Career of Katherine Bush" a special effort was made to engender this feeling.

Not being satisfied with the rendition of Mendelsohn's "Spring Song" by the forty-piece orchestra at the California theatre at Los Angeles, Managing Director Harry Leonhardt added life to the overture by introduction of a Spring dance, in which a chorus of six and one solo dancer took part. This feature of a recent program at this theatre immediately followed the playing of the overture and was given in response to the applause given the orchestra's number.

Special scenic effects, together with a most harmonizing lighting made the five-minute number particularly attractive. The back drop of a woodland scene was made more effective by the installation of two large trees in the foreground. Around these the fairies of the Spring winds danced. The overture and dance number immediately preceded the presentation of the feature.

Another Small Town Guy Who "Plays 'Em off the Bat"

HERE'S another one of those small town guys that plays good pictures right off the bat aud proves that it pays. He is Luther M. Warner, manager of the Rex theatre at Three Rivers, Michigan.

Warner runs three shows each day despite the fact Three Rivers is a city of only 5,500 inhabitants, but he packs 'em in for the simple reason that his theatre draws from all over St. Joseph county. Besides using half and sometimes full page advertising in the Three Rivers newspaper, he has dodgers printed whenever he has a feature picture and he bills every town in the county. As the result the Rex theatre is enjoying probably the largest motion picture business of any town of the size of Three Rivers in the country.

Warner advertises so much that he finally persuaded the publisher of the newspaper to use a front page reader every day concerning his theatre program. He also recently appeared before the city commission at Three Rivers and argued until permission was granted him to operate his theatre on Sunday. The first Sunday Warner opened his theatre to do business he had the Mack Sennett bathing girls there in person. To help him boost the Sunday show the "beauties" were asked to attend church and Sunday school. They did, and as the result the theatre was packed capacity for all three shows.

Warner is but twenty-two years old and is probably one of the youngest theatre managers in the state. He saw service in France and during his absence from Three Rivers, his wife, who is two years younger, managed the house. At this time she became known in the motion picture circles of the country because she made a record in the seat sale for "Hearts of the World." She did more business with the picture in Three Rivers than the theatre in Kalamazoo, a city of over forty thousand population.

"Advertise to the limit and let the people know they're getting the best, and business is bound to come in leaps," Warner declares.

Uses Motion Picture News Inserts for Special Publicity Stunt

FRED LEONARD, of the Glenwood Amusement Company of Indianapolis, Ind., discovered a new use for the advertisements printed in the Motion Picture News when he played the "Spitfire of Seville," featuring Hedda Nova, at the Rialto theatre, Indianapolis, recently.

Leonard cut out the high-colored ads which had been printed in the M. P. News, had his artist do the lettering, then mounted the "cut outs" and placed them in his lobby. The cut outs made the most attractive kind of a display.

In addition to this, Leonard, despite the fact that the Rialto plays vaudeville in addition to some feature picture, featured "The Spitfire" in his advertising above his vaudeville, taking an extra amount of space in all of the Indianapolis newspapers.

However, his efforts were well worth while, as bigger business during the four days that he played the picture resulted.

Race Horses Run Away on Broadway

One Skittish Old Ringer Started Things and for a Few Minutes Times Square Was a Race Track

It is better to be born lucky than rich, says an old adage. Anyway, "Checkers," which is playing at the Central theare on Broadway, has received more free advertising by a piece of luck resulting from a race track horse shying at a piece of paper than could have been purchased for the price of the nag.

The Central has been using three race horses, with jockeys officially attired, to advertise "Checkers," which is a racing story.

While these "Checkers" horses were proceeding up Broadway one day last week, at Thirty-seventh street one of them, Ostrich by name and formerly famous on the turf, shied at a piece of paper and bolted up the thoroughfare.

The other horses evidently concluded a race was on and started after Ostrich at full speed, their jockeys being unable to control them. Never had Broadwayites witnessed a more exciting scene than this horse race on the Gay White Way.

Taxicabs turned into the curbs to give the animals a clear field, while the crowds on the sidewalks halted and started cheering the leading horses. It looked as if the jockeys had framed up the affair, but the fact was that the former turf-speeders were living again the days of glorious contest on the track.

Standing at Forty-second street and Broadway were "Honest John" Kelly, Lou Ludlum, Jack Shaughnessy, Arnold Rothstein and Nat Evans. Kelly drew a fat bankroll from his pockets and, turning to Ludlum, shouted:

"Fifty to ten the chestnut beats 'em all to Forty-fifth street." "You're on," replied Ludlum. The chestnut was Ostrich, who led by two lengths.

"I'll take the black mare now running second," said Shaughnessy. "Even money she leads at Forty-third street."

"You're on for fifty," said Rothstein. All jumped into a taxicab and raced after the horses dashing up Broadway bunched in a spurt for the lead.

At Forty-third street Policeman Jack McDonald of the Broadway squad planted himself in front of Ostrich and grabbed a rein. He was thrown, but regained his feet in time to seize Ostrich again. This was the finish of the race, the other horses slowing up with the halt of their leader.

"What d'ye mean by speeding on Broadway with a race horse?" McDonald demanded of James Forbes, who was riding Ostrich.

"Couldn't help it!" gasped Forbes. "I'm not a regular jockey, and he ran away with me."

"Well, get an emergency brake," advised the policeman.

The party following in the taxicab arrived, and after some discussion it was decided that all bets were off because McDonald had "fouled" the race.

Here are the nags which made Broadway look like a Derby day and sent all forms of traffic scurrying for the sidewalks

A Novelty Advertising Stunt

HERE is an interesting stunt which promises to be productive of much publicity and so far as we know is new.

In its original the illustration accompanying was a card about the size you see it here and advertises Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs."

Distributed to the children of Madison, it has proved a delightful bit of entertainment and is giving "Daddy Long Legs" a lot of publicity which could not be obtained in any other way.

The idea originated with F. J. McWilliams, manager of the Grand theatre, which will show "Daddy Long Legs" sometime in October.

Place the card on a level with the eye both horizontally and perpendicularly and the reading is very distinct.

Sudekum Emulates White Apron Candy Man on "Auction of Souls"

BLAZING a trail for something decidedly unusual in the way of advertising, Harry Sudekum, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn., has shown a new trick to showmen the world over in the exploitation of a special feature attraction.

This system of Sudekum's might be called the "teaser" system. It is very much on the order of the white-aproned chewing candy man who stands on the outside of department store entrances and passes out a few pieces of candy as a sample to the children as they enter the store with their parents. Each child, as he goes in the store, gets a bag of candy. By the time the child is ready to come out of the store he is also ready for more candy. And this time it has to be bought.

This, to a great extent, was the identical system Sudekum used. When "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian was shown in Nashville, Sudekum tried out his plan.

On Monday night, the opening night for the attraction, Sudekum procured a small projecting machine which could be attached to an ordinary wall socket and carried in a box by hand from one place to another. He took an advance "leader" of about one hundred feet of film from "Auction of Souls" and rigged up a small canvas about 4x6 feet on the corner nearest his showhouse. Placing the machine on the curb and flashing the leader film on the wall a big crowd soon gathered, and, having had an interesting "taste" of the picture, wended their way inside via the lobby lines.

The following night Mr. Sudekum and his little projector worked a different section of the business district, showing the leader to other large crowds. The same plan was used each succeeding night with good effect. Regardless of how small a space there was for the projection of the picture, Sudekum had the machine adjusted so that it could work well.

Before taking the machine out Sudekum made sure that the miniature projector would be practicable. As an example of what might be expected of the machine on wall space, Sudekum had a post card tacked on the doorknob in his office and the machine placed on his desk. The ride of the Turks through the desert, women nailed to crosses—in fact, all details of "Auction of Souls" were to be seen plainly.

But this method of exploitation only followed a thorough billboard campaign. Admission prices were raised from 30 cents to 50 cents. And due to the exploitation, the raise in admission price, instead of having a tendency to make theatregoers lukewarm about seeing the picture, apparently stimulated their enthusiasm.

The appearance of Aurora Mardiganian, the Armenian girl who is starred in the picture, in person at the Knickerbocker added to the interest and made a special appeal to the public. Miss Mardiganian's appearance was freely advertised in the papers and local dailies had interviews on her experiences in the Near East within several hours after she arrived in the city.

The special performances for women, held at the theatre from 10 to 12 a. m. every morning brought out large attendances. During these matinees Miss Mardiganian made talks, in which she explained the cruelties suffered by Christian girls at the hands of the Turks.

How New York Stages the Show

AN insignificant little addition to the main title of a feature film playing on Broadway this week, strikes us as a milestone in the history of the industry.

Following the announcement of Constance Talmadge in "A Temperamental Wife" at the Strand, is a sentence which acknowledges that the producers are indebted to Jane Cowl's play, "Information, Please," for certain of the scenes of the film.

To those who have any great knowledge of both the stage and screen, there has always been a considerable wonder at the nerve producers of motion pictures have displayed in the way whole scenes and sometimes the basic plot itself has been lifted from standard stage plays and offered in picture form as original stuff without apologies, and we are quite sure payment of royalty to the author.

It has been a sort of a trade joke, that some day some one would produce "Ben Hur" with a few changes and claim he was producing a play from an original manuscript. Also it has been currently rumored that in the past many a good story written by free lances and offered to some producer to be declined with stereotyped thanks has later found its way to picture release bearing the authorship of a staff scenario man, while instances have been reported where a copyrighted magazine story has been produced without even a "thank you" to the writer.

It would, therefore, seem that this little incident indicates that we are progressing in our filmistic honesty, and if such be the case it is fitting that some one make due note of the fact.

We are terribly afraid that in the past we have given both the inside and outside world reason to view us with suspicion.

If we are to purge outselves of certain little rascally tricks of the trade which in most lines of business might have landed an occasional offender in jail, and it is quite time that we did some purging, we certainly should lend encouragement to those who are displaying an inclination to be honest even to the extent of dispensing with a certain amount of personal glory, to say nothing of editorial prestige, by giving credit to the real author of an idea which has been selected for use in picture making.

"Honesty is the best policy," and our hats are off to Anita Loos Emerson and her author-director-actor husband, who have established a precedent so far as our rather wide experience in pictures is concerned, in adding such a postscript to a film as they have to the main title of "The Temperamental Wife."

Rialto Theatre

DR. RIESENFELD'S selection of a program at the Rialto this week opens with an overture from Antonio Gomez's "Il Guarany," a composition which the writer constructed, using the native music of the Amazon Indians as a basis and in its strains is much that even the uninitiated would infer to be characteristic of this South American country.

Gomez, while educated in Milan where he wrote a number of operas which includes "Il Guarany" as the most successful and an ode entitled "Il Saluto del Brasile," was a native of Brazil and therefore his use of Amazonian melodies in his musical works was natural. Introduction of the strains of the native music in this composition make the work both piquant and effective. It is a resoundant number in which the brass contributes largely. The overture is given without special stage settings with the pit flooded in scarlet and the house dark. The summer garb for the orchestra, palm beach suits, has been discarded for the season and the conventional black again reigns.

The Rialto Magazine opens with International's views of women war workers being accorded honors at San Francisco and of the West Coast's latest water sport, planing behind aeroplanes at San Diego, also from International, following.

The third strip is a scenic subject by International entitled "Waikiri," being views of water sports including canoeing in Hawaiian waters.

Mutt and Jeff follow this bit in "Everybody's Doing It," being another "shimmy" subject in which the cartoon comedians are again conducting a dancing parlor.

International again contributes to the reel on the return to current events with more scenes of Cardinal Mercier, this time with King Albert of Belgium included. The strip was shot at Dinant, Belgium.

Gaumont offers a late view of the Pacific Fleet at San Francisco with Pathe's first bit showing General Pershing being entertained by New York Elks coming next, and Wilson at St. Paul, Minn., following. This is also by Pathe.

Photographs of Berlin since peace was declared, taken from the air and presenting a bird's-eye view of the city, an International subject of unusual length, comes next.

"Relaxation," an unidentified scenic release, follows. This was projected to the music of violin and harp alone, making a most pleasing accompaniment, and closed the reel.

The duet from "The Pearlfishers," sung by Martin Brefel, tenor, and Edoardo Albano, baritone, both artists of excellent voice and well known to Broadway audiences, is number three on the program. The number is given with the house dark and the singers attired in evening dress, focused in an amber spot.

The feature picture is "The Witness for the Defense," adapted from A. E. W. Mason's standard play of the same name by Oudida Bergere, and directed by George Fitzmaurice. The picture is a domestic drama of English social life with all its locale in England and India. Elsie Ferguson has the role of Stella Derrick, the heroine, and the supporting cast contains some well known names including Wyndam Standing and Warner Oland.

During the projection of the feature picture when the locale of the story changes from England to India, the machines are stopped and two stage settings, one in each of the smaller arches at the sides of the theatre, are exhibited. Both are reproductions of typical East India scenes with the palm trees and clear sky with which we have come to associate this eastern possession of the British Empire. The setting on the right shows a full moon in a cloudless sky. When the picture is again thrown on the screen the curtains are allowed to remain parted, providing an atmosphere for the East Indian sequences of the story.

The fifth number is an instrumental offering, Harry Edison and Frank Wolf in a marimbaphone duet, "Tents of the Arabs." The instrument proves popular at the Rialto and this is not the first time it has been given place on Rialto programs.

Charlie Chaplin's early comedies seem to have the nine lives of the proverbial black cat, for "The Interior of the Orpheum theatre, Harrisburg, Ill., looking toward the front of the house from the stage

Floor Walker," with a new sponsor, is offered for the broad comedy number and a typical Broadway audience laughed and chuckled at the premier comedian's efforts, shown we don't know how many times, as heartily as if the subject had never been viewed in the past.

The organ solo at the Rialto is "Torchlight March," played by Arthur Depew.

Strand Theatre

THE Strand program is very cheerful and very romantic this week with a nice selection throughout for a proper balance to provide good entertainment.

The overture selected is the overture from "Poet and Peasant," that tuneful opera of Suppe's that is as familiar and popular as the strains of a song hit.

For its rendition a stage setting has been prepared which adds greatly to the enjoyment of the number.

The scenic canvass disclosed by the parting of the draperies as the first strains of the overture begin, is of a poetical nature. Looking in perspective a slow moving sheet of water is seen which might be either canal, river or lagoon with low banks on either side on which grows luxuriant vegetation including high colored ornamental trees. The sky line ends in wooded hills, while on one bank is the only sign of human habitation, a huge marble pagoda whose round dome and massive pillars give evidence of architectural wonders within.

The lightings at first are the warm yellows verging on pink, suggestive of late afternoon in a tropical country, to be changed to the deep green and purple hues of the quick early twilights of the warm countries as the playing of the overture progresses. When the setting has been dimmed to full extent, white fleecy clouds drift across the sky and add realism to the scene. Toward the end of the overture the canvas is gradually returned to its original lightings. The house and orchestra pit are flooded in amber at the beginning, later dimmed and lighted in blue and green with a return to the first lightings at the close.

The Strand Topical Review opens with a Pathe strip showing the smallest practical aeroplane in the world in operation at San Francisco, with International's views of the recent parade in honor of women war workers in the same city, following.

Kinograms makes its initial showing in the number with a bit concerning the Prince of Wales at Sault Ste. Marie and follows it with General Edwards decorating the war heroes' mothers at Cleveland.

A Pathe scenic in colors, "In Scenic Wonderland —Switzerland" follows with a return to current events at its finish, in views of the recent New York policemen's field day used as an analysis of motion subject.

Pathe continues with more New York events in the visit of General Pershing to the B. P. O. E., with International following this strip showing the horse given to the General during Pershing week.

This strip closed the reel, the usual Topics of the Day having been taken from the number for this week.

The first vocal is "Springs a Lovable Ladye," sung by Dorothy South, the Strand soprano.

The feature picture is "A Temperamental Wife," with Constance Talmadge starred, and provides this ingenue with a typical vehicle constructed along comedy lines and with good speaking titles, the work of Anita Loos Emerson, worthy of commendation. The production is the combined work of John Emerson and his talented wife and is offered as an original script except certain scenes which are taken from the Jane Cowl play, "Information Please."

The fifth number on the bill is a vocal duet, "La Forza Del Destino," sung by the Strand tenor, Walter Pontious, and Carlo Ferretti, baritone, whose services at this theatre began last week in solo work.

The scenic is an Outing Chester—"When It's Time to Retire," quite up to the standard of these out-door numbers.

Harold Lloyd again gets a Broadway showing with his latest comedy "Count Your Votes," a subject which pleases those who enjoy broad comedy. The organ solo is the introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," played by Ralph H. Brigham and Herbert Sisson, alternating.

Academy of Music

THE Academy of Music's three-hour program opens this week with the first overture devoted to selections from the popular musical comedy, "Oh Boy," played by the Symphony Orchestra which forms a tuneful and effervescent number insuring the proper atmosphere for the first part of the bill which is of the lighter variety.

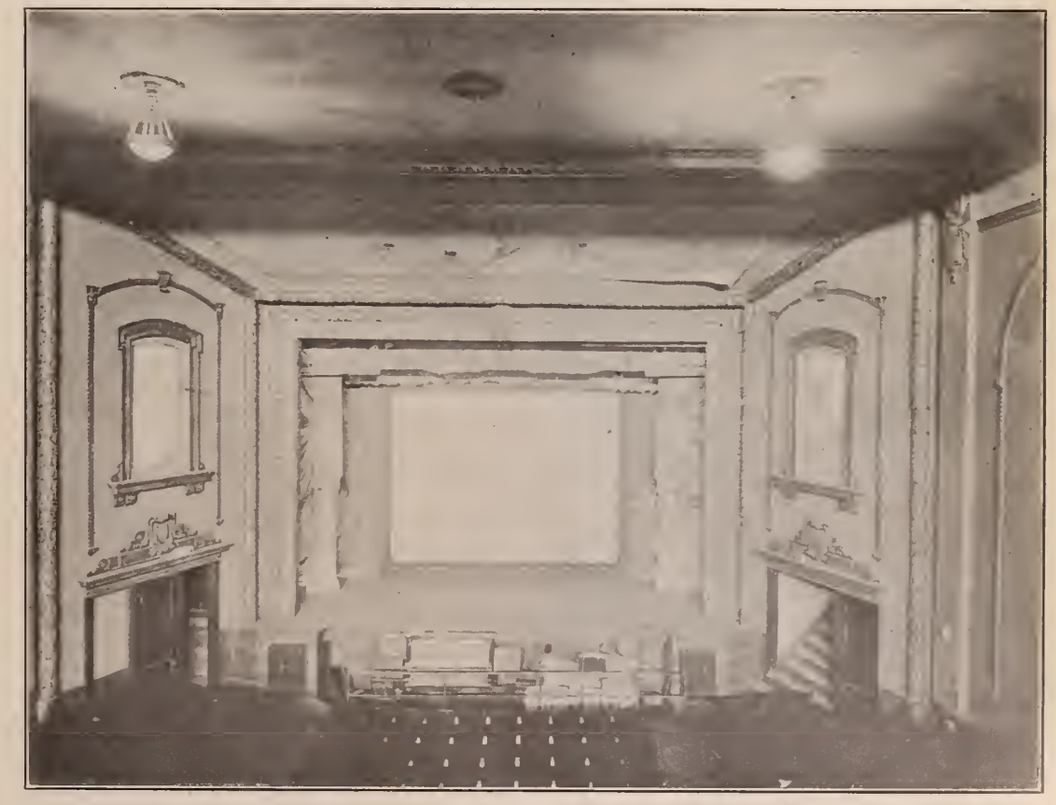
Internationals news weekly follows the overture and is composed of the following strips. Views of the smallest practical aeroplane now at San Francisco, with daring stunts performed by the aviator; Aquaplaning at San Diego behind aeroplanes; Mt. Kileaua, the Hawaiian volcano, in action, showing the boiling lava and other attendant phenomena of eruptions; a captured German submarine being exhibited at Los Angeles; "Ould Sod" babies being on view at a Chicago baby show; the German troops in athletic contests at Berlin, Germany; women war workers being honored by ceremonials at San Francisco.

The current events is followed by a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon entitled "All That Glitters Is Not Gold Fish," in which the cartoon favorites are shown as proprietors of a bird, animal and fish store.

The first feature is "Kathleen Mavourneen," the famous Irish classic story, which has been produced for the screen with much attention to details and is historically correct, with Theda Bara in the title role. The feature is extra length and in support of Miss Bara is a large cast of correct types.

The first comedy to be shown is "Dabbling in Society," a Sunshine production containing some good trick business and with the titles rather well worded. This number is projected to the music of the Dixie Jazz band which has been added at the house as an extra feature and which is pleasing Academy audiences, judging from the rounds of applause the renditions receive.

View of a new stage setting usually changed weekly is withheld to the rendition of the second overture, which this week is the overture from the Offenbach opera, "Orpheus," a standing work that never fails to please all lovers of good music.



The stage setting is formed principally by the use of a painted canvas, depicting a lake which is screened on its sides by trees and a Roman garden which extends down to the water's edge and which ends in perspective in wooded hills.

In the distance a glimpse of dwellings suggestive of villas are seen. For the portions of the scene which represent the garden mentioned considerable detail has been worked in. Steps lead down through its entire distance. The ground is paved with stone and at the gate a stone lion mounted on a pedestal guards the open end. Trees which would suggest the locale of Rome or some other Adriatic country, break the wide expanse of beautifully colored sky. The setting is lighted to suggest a bright morning and the spectator can imagine that the air out on the little lake is cool and bracing. The scene is not varied throughout the rendition of the overture and is covered with the picture screen at its close. A vocal solo follows the orchestral selection. Grace Hoffman, the very well known coloratura soprano, is the singer and her selection is a tuneful one from the light opera repertoire. For an encore she uses "The Last Rose of Summer," with special piano accompaniment. Both songs are deserving of the enthusiastic applause in which they are received. The vocalist is prettily attired and sings from the stage and from a spotlight of amber.

The second feature is King Vidor's "The Other Half," which has an all star cast although Zazu Pitts is really the featured player.

The bill closes with Harold Lloyd's comedy, "Rajah," used last week at the Rialto, and which is acknowledged to be one of this comedian's best productions.

The intermissions are filled with Victor Despommier at the organ playing "La Favorite."

"Checkers" Has Premiere at St. Louis

Picture Version of Famous Racing Play Shown First in Middle West Metropolis as Compliment to Author

BECAUSE Henry Blossom, Jr., a St. Louisan, wrote the stage version of "Checkers," the Liberty theatre of that city was accorded the honor of the premier presentation of the film version of the play, and accordingly the Liberty manager, Edward L. Hyman, also a member of our Advisory Board, began planning an advertising campaign which was to eclipse even the usual energetic exploitation policy of the house.

Hyman received confirmation of his playing dates well in advance of the showing and immediately began an advertising campaign which was second to none ever made for the exploitation of a photo-play in St. Louis. As he was in the midst of his work he was notified that he was to report in Denver, Colo., at once. "At once" means just what it says and Hyman left St. Louis a few hours after receiving the telegram.

This left the burden of the responsibility for the success of "Checkers" on the shoulders of Harry Greenman, assistant manager and treasurer of the Liberty Theatre. Greenman, as are all Fox employes, is a student and he knew that he must 'make good.' The mere fact that the manager of the theatre had left the city permanently did not relieve him of the responsibility of putting the production over.

Greenman is a youngster, having just recently reached his majority but his experience in the movie game was sufficient to enable him to take up where Hyman left off. Greenman managed the Victoria Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., for eight months before joining the Fox Company.

Here are a few of the things he did to insure the success of the picture which is said to be one of the most elaborate ever filmed.

Greenman made arrangements with ten of the Woolworth and Kresge stores in St. Louis and vicinity to give space in their show windows for displaying advertisements of "Checkers." A horse nicknamed "Remorse" after the winner of the great Derby in the picture and mounted by a youngster in a jockey's togs paraded the streets in all sections of the city for three weeks before the picture was shown.

More than 500 'strips' bearing the word "Checkers" and giving the name of the theatre and the date of its playing were pasted around telephone poles in the vicinity of the stores.

The New Liberty's display in a Kresge "five and ten" window

The race "hosses" used to exploit "Checkers" at the New Liberty, St. Louis

An insert was placed in 3,000 copies of the song "Checkers" which were sold in the Woolworth and Kresge stores. Then 5,000 copies of the following notice were pasted on the windshields of every machine that stopped on the downtown streets and in front of the theatre:

NOTICE.

Your car has been standing here over one hour. This is violating traffic rules of this city. You are requested to appear at Woolworth's Songland, Broadway and St. Charles street, to hear the song and visit Wm. Fox Liberty Theatre, Aug. 31, and see "Checkers."

A motion picture tense with life and action and abounding with thrills.

A thrilling spectacular story of racing life with plenty of comedy.

Bigger, better and more punch than any racing story ever produced.

"Checkers" cost $350,000 to produce.

Wm. Fox latest and most spectacular production.

WM. FOX LIBERTY THEATRE,

Delmar at Grand.

Then a "trailer" showing several scenes in "Checkers" was thrown on the screen at every performance for two weeks before the production was to be shown. Greenman had but a few days to complete all arrangements before the picture was to be shown for the first time. In the meantime his advertising campaign was bearing fruit.

The phones in the office of the Liberty Theatre rang continuously and Greenman was constantly answering inquiries about the picture.

Cleverly written stories, on ideas furnished by Greenman, were furnished the newspapers carrying the Liberty's advertisement, as advance notices Then Sunday afternoon, Aug. 31, arrived and Greenman waited anxiously to see what would happen.

What happened exceeded his fondest hope and the result was that persons who bought tickets for the matinee performance were unable to use them until several days later. It would be revealing a trade secret to tell how many persons succeeded in getting into the theatre to see this master film production, but many hundreds went away when they saw the crowds.

Shadow Mountain

By Dane Coolidge

Character of Story: Western, mining.
Theme: Vindication.
Characters: Wiley Holman, mining engineer, lead; Virginia Huff, the belle of Keno, beautiful, capricious; Widow Huff, termagent; Death Valley Charley, half-wit prospector; Samuel Blount, banker, scoundrel; Colonel Huff, old school Southern gentleman; Stiff Neck George, Blount's gunman.
The Plot: Keno has been deserted with the closing down of The Paymaster, a great gold mine. Colonel Huff, having been squeezed out of his control of the mine, has disappeared and is thought to have been lost in Death Valley. As a fact, he is hiding from his wife, who, since the loss of his fortune, has nagged him unendurably. Wiley Holman comes to Keno to secure possession of The Paymaster with the idea of vindicating his father, Honest John Holman, who is generally believed to have robbed the Huffs, and also to restore the fortunes of the Huffs. He knows that the mine contains rich stores of tungsten. Blount, the real cheater, who has the mine, does not know this and loses money in an attempt to mine gold. Blount allows Wiley to obtain possession, expecting to oust him later. Then ensues a fight for the mine in which Wiley in winning until Virginia goes over to the enemy, having been persuaded that Wiley is robbing her. Wiley kills Stiff Neck George in self-defense. He flees to Death Valley and meets Colonel Huff. Virginia follows. They return to find that Virginia has saved the mine and the lovers are united. Good Western atmosphere, plenty of action, simple plot. Good character work in Virginia, triumph of her father's nature over that of her mother.
Locale: Death Valley, principally out of doors.
Picture High Lights: Blowing up of mill. Wiley's fight with Stiff Neck George; dramatic situations in financial fight; love scene on desert.

Partners of the Out-Trail

By Harold Bindloss

Character of Story: Romance and adventure.
Theme: Contrast between new blood and old.
Characters: Jim Dearham, a son of Canada; Carrie Winter, a pal of the trail; Jake Winter, Dearham's mining partner; Bernard Dearham, Jim's grandfather, English, rich by his own efforts; Mrs. Halliday, stepdaughter of Jim's uncle Joseph; Dick Halliday, her son; Evelyn Halliday, her daughter; Lance Mordaunt, Evelyn's cousin; Baumstein, a villain.
The Plot: Jim Dearham, temporarily on his uppers, is waiting in a restaurant in Montreal when he serves Dick Halliday, Evelyn and Lance Mordaunt. He is much struck with the beauty of Evelyn and believes that he has fallen in love with her. Later he goes West and in company with Jake Winter and his sister Carrie, carries on a plucky fight against nature and treachery and succeeds in putting a telegraph line through a stretch of wilderness. Lance Mordaunt and Dick Halliday take refuge in his hut from a storm and there Mordaunt discovers that Jim is the lost heir to the estate of Joseph Dearham; including Langrigg, a country seat. He conceals this knowledge, but Jim finds the truth in a newspaper advertisement. Jim goes to England, taking Jake and Carrie with him. As master of the estate he directs affairs with Canadian energy, to the approval of his grandfather, but to the disgust of Mordaunt and Evelyn, who are over-bred aristocrats. Jim has much trouble with poachers stirred up by Mordaunt and on one occasion nearly loses his life, but is saved by Carrie. Jim proposes to Evelyn and Mordaunt persuades Evelyn to run away with him, but this plan is frustrated by her brother Dick, who knows Mordaunt's character. Mordaunt is exposed and agrees to leave England and Evelyn promptly marries an elderly suitor. Jim discovers his love for Carrie and marries her with the approval of his grandfather.
Locale: North woods, Vancouver, English country. Chiefly outdoor.
Picture High Lights: This novel contains two distinct stories and the English part has the greater plot; many thrilling escapes in woods, rapids, etc., in first part; two or three in second part.

Heritage

By V. Sackville West

Character of Story: Psychological.
Theme: Heredity.
Characters: Ruth Penniston, afterward Westmacott, a strange mixture of British country girl and gypsy; Christopher Malory, gentleman of fortune; Rawden Westmacott, Ruth's husband and cousin; Amos Penniston, Ruth's father; Leslie Dymock, Ruth's intended husband.
The Plot: Ruth Penniston and her cousin, Rawden Westmacott, are part Gypsy by inheritance from their great grandmother, who is still living when the story opens, but who takes no active part in it; a little old woman who was once a Spanish dancer. Of the children in the family only these two inherit the fiery temperament and uncertain character of the Spanish dancer and are naturally drawn to one another though it is not possible for them to be happy together. Christopher Malory, visiting at the farm, realizes that this is true and persuades Ruth's father to forbid Rawden to visit her and persuades her to accept Leslie Dymock. Ruth, who has fallen in love with Malory, then realizes that he does not love her and runs away with Westmacott. They are married. Malory is absent for a long time, during which time, Ruth has children and continues to live with Rawden, though he treats her brutally and she is once forced to attempt his life. Later Malory comes and asks her to go away with him but she refuses. Rawden finally becomes afraid that Ruth will murder him and this so preys on his mind that he deserts her altogether and she then sends for Malory, who has at last discovered that she loves him and that he loves her.
Locale: Kent, England; English farm scenery.
Picture High Lights: There are good emotional scenes, but no great amount of action beyond Ruth's attempt to kill Rawden; an opportunity is afforded for character acting.

Diana of the Moorland

By Louis Tracy

Character of Story: Detective story, love interest.
Theme: Mystery.
Characters: Diana Fenton, officer's orphan, good blood, poor, beautiful out-of-door girl; Walter Hardy, metalurgist, inventor; Arthur Flecke, fashionable rake; Lord Henry Dallinger, Diana's uncle; Lady Dallinger, her aunt; Furneaux, detective; Rabbit Jack, poacher and petty criminal.
The Plot: Diana Fenton, lost on Howlsike Moor, stumbles on the body of Sir Dudley Seacroft, who has apparently been trampled to death by his horse. She carries the body on her own horse until she comes to Black Inges Farm, where Walter Hardy is conducting experiments. While Hardy goes for help, Rabbit Jack enters Hardy's forge and robs the body. He is caught, but the theft is not discovered immediately. He implies that he knows something of Seacroft's death. Seacroft and Diana were to have been married as a matter of convenience. Arthur Flecke, heir to Seacroft's estate, now takes his place as suitor for Diana's hand. Diana and Hardy fall in love. From this point the story is concerned with the unraveling of the mystery surrounding Seacroft's death and the discovery by Furneaux of evidence that the crime was committed by Flecke, who knocked Seacroft from his horse and then forced the hunter to trample him. This is corroborated by Rabbit Jack, who witnessed the murder. Flecke commits suicide, Hardy makes a great discovery which will win him fortune and Diana promises to be his wife. Simple plot.
Locale: Rural England, principally out of doors, but with manor houses and some interiors.
Picture High Lights: Hunting scene; capture of Rabbit Jack; fight between Flecke and Seacroft on horseback.

Booty

By Douglas Grant

Character of Story: Metropolitan; mystery.
Theme: Attempted robbery.
Characters: Eustace Wadsworth, fat and valiant; Moira Kildare, thoroughbred but shrouded in mystery; Rutherford Quade, hunchback, master criminal; Mrs. Ezra Throckmorton, young wife of millionaire; Ezra Throckmorton, magnate; Phyllis Calhoun, an artist, his granddaughter; Captain Gore-Pevensy, co-worker with Moira Kildare; Felix, waiter, tool of Quade.

The Plot: This story has a double love interest running through it and is full of thrills. By casually stating in regard to a certain military division, "There were thirty, but now there are twenty-six," Eustace Wadsworth plunges himself into a maelstrom of intrigue, is followed in England, assaulted and robbed, shadowed to America and finally roused to a determination to solve the mystery. He meets Moira and Gore-Pevensy under the impression that they are working with the mysterious gang following him and for some time they think him a member of the same gang. Through a series of thrilling adventures it develops that the Earl of Cranchester, being on the point of death and without issue, has dispatched three messengers to bear to Mrs. Ezra Throckmorton, a distant relative, a string of pearls known as "The Queen's Tears"—being the necklace worn by Mary of Scotland when she was executed. This necklace by law would revert to the crown and the Earl does not desire that it shall pass from his family. Quade and his gang are attempting to gain possession of the pearls, which are concealed in a bottle of olives. Gore-Pevensy and Moira Kildaire are endeavoring to deliver and, later, to recover these pearls.

Locale: England, New York and Westchester. Exteriors and interiors about equal.

Picture High Lights: Capture and escape of Moira from New York hotel; kidnapping of Wadsworth by Moira; big scene between Quade and Gore-Pevensy..

Burned Bridges

By Bertrand W. Sinclair

Character of Story: Romance; Northwest.

Theme: The Evolution of a Man.

Characters: Wesley Thompson, missionary; Sophie Carr, a daughter of the forest, but widely read; Sam Carr, Sophie's father; Tom Asche, remittance man, in love with Sophie; Donald Macdonald, the Factor.

The Plot: Wesley Thompson, sent into the north woods as a missionary, finds the people there a quiet, slow-spoken lot who regard missionary work as scarcely a man's job. Sophie Carr, who has made an immediate conquest of Thompson, looks at the matter in the same light and, after some months of inward struggle, Thompson realizes that he is getting nowhere in his work and accepts an offer of a job trading skins for the company represented by Donald Macdonald, the factor. On his return to his station at Lone Moose he finds that the Carrs have inherited money and moved away. Tommy Asche, also interested in Sophie, suggests that they strike out together for the Pacific Coast and they do so. Thompson goes to San Francisco, where he encounters Sophie and where, after trying many occupations, he becomes a successful automobile salesman. The Carrs having moved to Vancouver, where Tommy is also located, Thompson applies for this territory and secures it. He makes a success of business as Asche has also done. Thompson, after a long wait to be convinced that it is his duty, decides to go to the front. He goes to tell Sophie goodbye, but before she learns of his enlistment in the Flying Corps, she reproaches him with slacking. He leaves. Tommy goes into the shipbuilding business. Thompson is invalided home to find that Asche has told Sophie he is dead and they are on the point of being married. Learning of Tommy's deception, Sophie sends Tommy away and marries Thompson, who, having burned his bridges behind him, one after another, has become a man among men. Simple plot showing how a man progresses from the academic to the human viewpoint.

Locale: Canadian woods, San Francisco, Vancouver.

Picture High Lights: Good scene where Thompson decides to renounce his ministry because he is getting nowhere; several good emotional scenes, but the drama lies in the psychological rather than physical action.

Buck

By Charles D. Stewart

Character of Story: Character comedy.

Theme: Personality.

Characters: "Buck" Summers, everybody's friend; Clint McClintock, his friend; Prof. Arthur Holt, professor of Hebrew and other Ancient Languages; Cynthia, his wife; Elaine Hosmer, Buck's ambition; Senator Whaley; Zachary Summers, small town magnate, Buck's dad; Reggie Thorndyke, society man; Cyrus Thorndyke, big town magnate, his "governor."

The Plot: "Buck" Summers, or J. Buckingham Summers, as he later becomes, is one of those people who can't help making friends; a sort of unofficial politician who gets things done because he knows everybody and because everybody finds it a pleasure to do things for him. Finding his friend, Prof. Holt, worried lest the University drop the course in ancient languages, Buck gets Senator Whaley to secure an independent appropriation for it. His next exploit is to conduct the burial of Rameses, University mummy, who could not stand the climate of the Middle West. Holt is inspired by this to write a poetic drama in which the mummy comes to life. Buck having made the acquaintance of an innocent young actress, receives a visit from his father and, after thinking things over, leaves college and engages in the van business, where he meets Elaine Hosmer. Conducting a society circus for Reggie Thorndyke, he meets Cyrus Thorndyke, who backs him in the manufacture of a patent cookie cutter. Buck meanwhile has arranged with a theatrical producer to make a musical comedy of Holt's poetic drama, with the result that the Holts are lifted from near-poverty to comparative wealth. Buck, himself, meanwhile, has acquired a tidy sum in selling cookie cutters and marries Elaine. Very simple and not very consistent plot, but good character work, plenty of humor and sufficient incident to form basis for straight story.

Locale: Chicago.

Picture High Lights: Burial of Rameses; society circus; several minor comedy situations.

The Mystery of the Abandoned Room

By Wadsworth Camp

Character of Story: Detective story.

Theme: Personal resemblance.

Characters: Bobby Blackburn, extravagant grandson; Silas Blackburn, rich grandfather; Katherine Perrine, Bob's cousin and fiancee; Senor Carlos Parades, a friend of Bobby's; Maria, Spanish dancer; Doctor Groom; Howells, a detective; Hartley Graham, another friend of Bobby's; Robinson, another detective.

The Plot: Bobby Blackburn, spendthrift, is called to the house of his grandfather, but remains in town to attend a dinner with Senor Parades and Maria, a Spanish dancer. He drinks more than is good for him and awakes to find himself in an abandoned farmhouse near his grandfather's estate, The Cedars. He decides to return to the city to freshen up and is accosted by a detective who tells him that Silas Blackburn has been murdered and that Bobby is wanted at the house. Blackburn has slept in an abandoned room in The Cedars where three times the death of a Blackburn has occurred from a wound in the head. He is found dead with a wound in the head, all the windows and doors being locked from the inside. As he had just cut Bobby out of his will suspicion falls upon him, but he is not arrested. Howells, the detective, sleeps in the abandoned room and meets death in the same way. Robinson takes charge of the case. A mysterious woman in white haunts the place. Parades comes and stays at the house and is also suspected. Silas Blackburn, who had apparently been buried, reappears at home with a newly healed wound at the back of his head, but promptly disappears again. It develops finally that the body first found was that of Silas' brother who had returned to America to claim from Silas money that Silas had robbed him of years before in South America. Maria is the daughter of this brother. Silas kills his brother and the detective. Silas drowns himself and Bobby is cleared of suspicion and is free to marry Katherine.

Locale: Westchester. Chiefly interiors.

Picture High Lights: The chase of the woman in white; secret panel in abandoned room, re-appearance of supposed dead man.

The Taker

By Daniel Carson Goodman

Character of Story: Analytical.

Theme: Inability of a selfish, egotistic man to find happiness through various types of women.

Characters: The man, Leonard Vernon; his mother, Mrs. Vernon; his first wife, Jennie Clemons; his second wife, Mabel Gillette; his sweetheart, Marcy Moore; Jennie's father, Marcy's husband and father, several other women.

Plot: Leonard leaves his devoted but incapable mother in order to experience a broader life and follow an artistic career. He soon marries Jennie, whose father owns a large factory and gives him a lucrative position in the factory, also leaving it to him at his early death. He grows tired of Jennie, divorces her and marries Mabel, his stenographer. Then he finds Mabel monotonous and becomes interested in Marcy, who works in his factory. Mabel commits suicide. Marcy's husband tries to kill him, but succeeds only in wounding him slightly, set fire in the factory and leaves town for good. While recuperating, Leonard sends for Marcy, and finally installs her in a New York apartment, where he visits her and takes her to theatres and restaurants. This also palls and he leaves her, but is so much depressed when she chloroforms herself that he even attempts to take his own life unsuccessfully. He drifts around with various others until a very young girl mistakes his interest in her for her mother and informs him that she supposes he is about fifty years old. Then he returns to Jennie, who receives him with open arms.

Locale: Hastings, N. Y., and N. Y. City., mostly interiors.

Corbett in "The Prince of Avenue A"

James J. Corbett's big super-feature to be made under the Universal banner when he returns from New York where he has been vacationing after completing the serial "The Midnight Man," will be "The Prince of Avenue A." It is a story from the pen of the prolific writer of stage melodramas, Charles T. Dazey.

It will be directed by Rex Ingram, who is now producing "The Beach Comber," starring Elmo Lincoln.

The story concerns political circles in a big city and Corbett will be seen as the boss of his ward.

Burton Holmes Returns from Europe

Burton Holmes, traveller and author of the Travelogues, has just returned from Europe on the "Adriatic" with Mrs. Holmes after about four months of motoring through France, Belgium and the Occupied Rhineland, where he and his accompanying staff of assistants have made an exhaustive study of the conditions of the countries and peoples from the point of view of the tourist.

He brings back to America with him an infinite variety of motion pictures and photographs for his colored views, showing not only scenes of devastation, but also the natural beauties of the unscathed cities, towns and villages, and what the people in these three countries are doing along the lines of peace and their endeavors to re-adjust themselves and their communities in agriculture and manufactures, after four years of war. Mr. Holmes' season begins in November.

President Recognizes Fox News

Writes Approving the Platform of Service Adopted

WITH the time not far distant for release of the first regular reel of the widely heralded Fox News, reports from Fox Exchanges of the progress this novel screen feature is making throughout the United States and European markets indicate the greatest interest ever shown by exhibitors in a product of this nature. The release of the first reel is scheduled for October 11.

From all parts of the world Fox Film Corporation is receiving requests for information as to release schedules and deliveries on the Fox News. Never before in the history of the Fox organization has such keen and widespread interest been shown so far in advance of release.

In reply to these thousands of queries the Fox News office, under the directorship of Herbert E. Hancock, is informing the exhibitors—direct and through the Fox exchanges—of the magnitude of the plan and the entertainment values of this unique film enterprise.

The organization of the Fox News is complete and thoroughly efficient. Intense personal interest is being taken in the big project by William Fox, president of the corporation, and Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager—whose original ideas in the conception of this film are built along lines which it is predicted will carry with them enormous entertainment values, punch and power.

Not only has the enthusiasm of exhibitors and others in the motion picture field been aroused, but lively interest in the project has spread to the White House. In spite of his activities as the head of the nation, President Wilson, upon having the announcement of the Fox News brought to his attention and learning of the high educational value of the plan as outlined, voluntarily wrote the following letter to Fox Film Corporation under date of Sept. 1:

I am very much interested and deeply gratified to learn that the Fox Film Corporation is intending to devote its News Weekly to the promotion of universal and lasting peace. It can render the greatest service in this direction. The Moving Picture News Weekly, as an educator and a power for good, can be made of the greatest service to the nation and to observant people everywhere throughout the world, and I congratulate the company upon its public-spirited plan. Cordially and sincerely,

WOODROW WILSON.

It is hardly to be expected that William Fox would allow a communication of this kind, coming from such a source, to remain hidden in the files of his office. President Wilson's letter will be shown in the first Fox News issue.

Up to date, it is announced, several thousand expert cameramen have been engaged in gathering news and novelty features among the 1,642,000,000 people who, according to latest statistics, inhabit the earth.

In every city of any consequence in the world Fox News has a representative—thus bringing the Fox organization into daily touch with every race in the world. It is impossible for any real live news to escape the eagle eye of the Fox News camera, so carefully and methodically has the staff been organized and appointed.

Among the principal more distant points covered with headquarters in each are Yokohama, Tokio, Shanghai, Pekin, Hongkong, Canton, Manila, Honolulu, Wellington, N. Z., Sydney, Melbourne, New Guinea, Borneo, Sumatra, Tibet, Russian Siberia, Irkutsk, Manchuria and Alaska, Canada, South America and Central America are covered. Even down in Tierra del Fuego Fox News has a cameraman ever on the lookout for the new and unusual.

In Europe every city is under the watchful eye of the Fox News camera—among them being Stockholm, Petrograd, Glasgow, Dublin, Liverpool, London, Copenhagen, Havre, Paris, Bordeaux, Brussels, Lisbon, Madrid, Rome.

B.B's New Series to Begin In Nov.

Will Consist of Eight Pictures at Stated Intervals

PREPARATIONS have been completed for release in November of the first of the new Bessie Barriscale Superior Pictures and from the number of inquiries received by Exhibitors Mutual and Robertson-Cole a brilliant season is anticipated. The new series will consist of eight pictures released at stated intervals and all of them will meet the Robertson-Cole Superior Picture standard.

Miss Barriscale's pictures will continue to be made by her own company, the B. B. Features, and the direction of the new series will be under Howard Hickman who achieved such phenomenal results in the previous offerings. Stories and scenarios have been bought without regard to price to insure the star photo-plays suited to her talents and the extensive capacity of her studios.

According to work received from exhibitors and patrons everywhere the distinctive success of Miss Barriscale in the past year has been due in no small measure to her remarkable versatility. She has not been confined in her acting to presentations of the same type but has covered a wide variety of roles and has distinguished herself in all of them. In the coming series the same underlying principle of making each production different in character from the others will prevail.

In the first picture Miss Barriscale appeared as a quick witted American business girl full of "pep" and vigor. In her next "A Trick of Fate" she afforded the contrast of a modest dancing teacher and a Parisian dancer of the lighter life. In "Hearts Asleep" we found her a scrub woman and when an actress appears on the screen in a role of that character real acting is required if she is to keep her hold on popular favor.

"Josselyn's Wife," and "Tangled Threads" gave Miss Barriscale an opportunity to show her worth in the role of the wife who finds happiness after a struggle. As a professional swimmer and later a lady of society the actress was superb in "The Woman Michael Married." Her last release "Her Purchase Price" permitted us to see Miss Barriscale as the Pearl of the Harem. In this she had a colorful and expressive role and it was remarkably handled.

This review of her work shows the care taken to make each Barriscale picture one that will stand by itself.

Metro Buys "The Cave Lady," by Cullen

"The Cave Lady," an original comedy drama from the pen of James Cullen, has been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation as the most recent addition to its list of stage plays and famous novels, from which Screen Classics, Inc., will make thirty-six big special productions during 1919-20. "The Cave Lady" will probably be used as a starring vehicle by May Allison.

Purchase of "The Cave Lady" is an innovation even for Metro, which recently announced its other decided innovation of "fewer and better" pictures to replace its program policy. For the Cullen comedy is to make its appearance on the screen before or at the latest simultaneously with the presentation of the vehicle on Broadway for a stage run.

Al Jennings' Newest

"Fugitives Who Came Back," the striking narrative of the meeting of Al Jennings, the celebrated ex-bandit with O. Henry, noted writer of short stories, in a drowsy village of Honduras, at a time when the two were able to take part in a revolution brewing just then, has been completed at the Hollywood studio of the Capital Film Company, under the direction of H. W. Bergman.

The picture is the first of a series of short features which are being made, having as a basis, the life-long friendship which existed between Jennings and Sidney Porter, whose pen-name of O. Henry, made him beloved by thousands who read his fiction.

Alice Joyce Progresses on "Pride"

Alice Joyce, with the assistance of her new director, George Terwilliger, is making rapid progress on her next Vitagraph feature, which has the tentative title of "Pride." Written especially for the star by William B. Courtney, the play abounds in dramatic situations, and is fully up to the high standard set by Miss Joyce in her previous pictures. Once more she portrays the "daughter of luxury" type of girl, a role with which she has been closely associated and in which she has met with great favor.

Drury Lane Drama is Claimed

Vitagraph Announces It Has "The Great Ruby," First Credited to Another Firm

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, Inc., announces this week that his company has secured the film rights to "The Great Ruby," the Drury Lane melodrama written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton.

This announcement is given in repudiation of the claim of another concern to have secured the rights to this production.

That there has been active rivalry among several of the big film companies to attach this melodrama, and place it in the crown of their achievements, there seems no doubt.

Vitagraph's victory exists not only in capturing the Drury Lane spectacle from a field of competitors, but in the fact that here is a melodramatic creation practically made to order for photoplay purposes. Although this brain-child of Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton antedated the now all-enveloping silver sheet, these prominent British playwrights might well have had the screens in mind when they built this punch-crammed action-play. It was known on the stage as a production of constant, rapid-fire action from overture to exit march, depending but little upon its spoken lines for its colossal success.

It is not known exactly when Vitagraph intends to produce "The Great Ruby," but it is understood that the undertaking is not far distant.

Corinne Griffith will be the star. Tom Terriss, who has been her director for some time, and who has just finished guiding her through "The Climbers," will direct the melodrama.

Plans on Kay Laurel's Films

Shear Announces Six Will Be Made in the Year, All to Rank with the Best

J. M. SHEAR, executive head of J. M. Shear Company, producers of the new series of Kay Laurel Productions, starring the former Ziegfeld Follies beauty, in a statement issued this week, announced that plans have been formulated for the production of six Kay Laurel features during the year under the direction of Jack O'Brien. Mr. Shear has not definitely decided on the method of release of the Laurel features, but states that he is negotiating with one of the big distributors to take over the marketing and distribution.

Director O'Brien is on the third week of production with the first Laurel feature, the title to which has not been announced. It is taken from a well-known author's work. The story's action is laid in the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma. Mr. O'Brien states that the first picture will be ready for a review showing the first part of October and a Broadway opening is promised by Mr. Shear.

In connection with the exploitation of the Kay Laurel features, Mr. Shear is planning a countrywide publicity and advertising campaign to include space in the trade and daily papers. A few months ago, Miss Laurel made her debut in the silent drama as star of the screen version of Rex Beach's "The Brand," and in connection with the release of this picture, the star was given wide publicity. She has a large following throughout the country, due to her success in this picture, and as one of the most popular and talented members of the Ziegfeld Revue.

United Theatres Reach Out

Purchase of Big Play Forerunner of Number of Important Acquisitions

WHAT is announced as the forerunner of a number of important acquisitions of plays and other story material that has achieved notable success on the speaking stage and in the field of literature is forthcoming this week in the purchase by United Picture Productions Corporation of "The House of Lies," the remarkable society melodrama by John P. Ritter, which has to its credit on the dramatic stage one of the longest engagements on record in New York, and which long continued to prove highly successful in a career which covered practically the whole of the United States and Canada. Cecil Spooner made a remarkable success in the leading role of Rose, the millionaire wife.

Commenting on the inaugural purchase by the Productions Company, Lee A. Ochs, vice-president, said in part: "United Picture Productions was incorporated only recently as an auxiliary organization which should assist in furthering the plans of United Picture Theatres, Inc., for the securing of the best available material, whether star or story, for the use of the three thousand theatres throughout the country which exhibit United product. A prompt and lively response followed the announcement of the formation of the company, the early success of which is not only gratifying to the officials and stockholders of the company, but which is thus quickly demonstrated by the successful negotiations which have this week resulted in our acquiring "The House of Lies," a highly successful play, which, it is intended, is only the forerunner of similar purchases in the near future.

"The meritorious success which has accrued to the feature offerings of Dustin Farnum, Florence Reed and other United stars has been followed by a demand for United product which in its rapidity and extent far exceeded our immediate expectations. The result has been a quickening of our search for even better material."

Educational Party in Danger for Hours

An exciting adventure recently experienced by Robert C. Bruce, Educational's scenic director, is retold in a letter just received by Vice President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Film Corporation of America. A "seven-hour session with the thin old man with the scythe," is Mr. Bruce's description of his worst experience in six years of scenic shooting. The Educational camera crew is on board the yacht "La Viajera" and have been working all through the summer months along the little known coast of Alaska and British Columbia.

Mr. Bruce with two others were in a small boat which got into an ice crush in Le Conte Bay, and for hours it appeared as if their small vessel would be crushed, but they finally made their way to safer waters.

Anita Stewart's First Under Mayer Banner

More than ordinary interest attaches to the initial showing of Anita Stewart's latest production, "Her Kingdom of Dreams," at the Strand theatre next week, beginning Sunday, September 21. It not only marks the greatest effort of Miss Stewart, since she came under the Louis B. Mayer banner a year ago, but it should prove a real test as to how much an all-star cast really adds to the quality of a production.

The cast includes such well-known players as Anna Q. Nilsson, Kathlyn Williams, Tully Marshall, Thomas Santachi, Thomas Jefferson, Mahlon Hamilton, Frank Currier, Wesley Barry, Robert McKim, James Neill and Edwin Stevens.

First View of Sunset-Burrud Scenics

Heralded as the greatest series of scenics filmed, the Sunset-Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness" will have a preview in San Francisco, October first of the first "legend" before a selected audience of naturalists, artists, photographers, editors and writers of history. The Sunset Magazine, which is collaborating with Leland J. Burrud, the producer, will stage the preview in one of the largest motion picture theatres in the Bay City.

Two Notable Acquisitions by Pathe

TWO announcements of interest emanated from the Pathe offices during the week, one of the signing by Mrs. Sydney Drew of a contract to produce two reel comedy specials for the firm, and the other that Hobart Henley signed to produce four features a year for the house of Pathe.

"The agreement stipulates that Mrs. Drew will produce eight if not ten two reel comedy specials a year," said Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., was asked for details of the contract.

"Mrs. Drew's name and fame are such that I feel as though I could add nothing to the bare announcement that she has signed a contract with us. Naturally we feel complimented that Mrs. Drew should have decided that Pathe offered the best medium for putting her plays on the market; that she should have appreciated the merits of the Pathe policy, which admits of an exhibitor booking his pictures either by the "open" method or by contract; and that she should have approved of the Pathe plan for exploitation and publicity. In return, we realize the value of Mrs. Drew's talents as an actress and her abilities as a director of motion picture plays. The alliance, I am sure, will be one of mutual benefit.

Mrs. Sydney Drew and Hobart Henley Enter Contracts

In speaking of the Henley contract Mr. Brunet said:

"The arrangement gives us one of the foremost directors in the profession and adds considerable prestige to the Pathe program. In addition, it carries out the Pathe policy of 'Better Service' in supplying the exhibitor with the best that is obtainable in features which have an undoubted box-office value.

"I am of the sincere conviction that under the Henley contract, the Pathe clientele may look forward confidently to a series of brilliant successes. The lines we have laid out mean that we shall give to the screen the best in literature; Mr. Henley has been given free rein. Each feature will bear the trade-mark 'produced by Hobart Henley,' and I am certain that no better guarantee could be given. He will select his own subjects, and as he has made a name for himself because of his good judgment in the discernment of screen material, there is no reason to fear that any picture from his hands will lack the slightest essential making for artistic perfection and financial returns of the most satisfying figures.

Mr. Henley, likewise, issued a short statement with the news of his contract. "I'm absolutely happy for the first time since I began directing pictures," he said with an extra edition of the well-known Henley smile. "This contract with Pathe means freedom to me—freedom to make pictures as I think they ought to be made, not as some one tells me to do so. I think I can safely promise motion picture theater goers something different. I shall make each picture myself; there will be no 'supervising' on my part. While I do not care to divulge my plans in their entirety, I may say that I shall present plays taken from only the best and most popular authors. The first one under the Pathe contract will be completed about the midle of November.

Rowland Sees Great Metro Year

THAT Metro is on the eve of its greatest year, the most prosperous in its history not only for the company but for exhibitors of Metro productions, is the prophecy made by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., three weeks after his return from his ten weeks' first-hand survey of the European motion picture field.

"The year 1919-20," says a statement by Mr. Rowland, "gives certain promise of being the banner year in the history of our organization. I am not prone to prophecies, so I say this only after the most careful scrutiny of present-day conditions in the industry, as they apply at home and abroad. And I say it with the utmost confidence after what I have observed personally since my return from abroad.

"I was delighted with the smooth running of the organization upon my return; notwithstanding that the home office and the exchanges had been deluged with business following our announcement of the new policy of 'fewer, bigger and better' pictures."

Indications Are That It Will Be Best Experienced

In fact, the few weeks that Mr. Rowland has been home have been the busiest he has ever known. His desk has been piled high with telegrams and letters from exhibitors all over the country eager to book the Nazimova and Screen Classics, Inc., productions. Since he has been back Metro has signed the new Capitol Theatre on Broadway, at Fifty-first street, to show "The Brat" and the new Screen Classics, Inc., specials as they appear. The Loew Circuit has signed; so has the Ascher circuit in Chicago; the seven Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., the Merrill in Milwaukee, and a host of other picture theatres.

Mr. Rowland, in addition to being the executive head of the Metro distributing and the Screen Classics, Inc., producing organization, is a large exhibitor. As a member of the firm of Rowland and Clark, owners of a great chain of theatres, he has combined the viewpoint of the exhibitor as well as the maker of photo-dramatic productions.

"I adhered to this dual viewpoint throughout my recent tour of the European picture field," said Mr. Rowland. "I have, in fact, never lost sight of the exhibitor's angle. Being an exhibitor myself—having started in the industry as an exhibitor—I have faced all the problems that daily confront a showman, and my knowledge of them has aided me greatly in my work as a producer.

As to the prediction that Metro is entering the most successful of its four years of activity, Mr. Rowland also points out that its expansion will take in Europe as well as this country. This expansion is very likely to be extended even further, although announcements are not yet ready to be made.

Metro has placed its entire output for the next two years with Jury Imperial, Ltd., headed by Sir William Jury, for distribution throughout the British Empire. This deal involved a turnover of $2,500,000. Jury Imperial, Ltd., will be sole distributors of Metro productions for England, and has started already with the Nazimova pictures, which have created a furore among the British picture-goers. Jury Imperial, Ltd., controls a chain of more than 200 theatres in the British Isles alone.

F.G. Hall Has New Series to Release

FRANK G. HALL, president of Hallmark Picture Corporation, has closed a contract with Nancibelle W. Grant, president of British-American Picture Finance Corporation, to release through the Hallmark Corporation, a series of twelve special productions beginning Oct. 1st., and one each month thereafter. The pictures to be acquired by the British American company will be selected from the best independent productions offered on the market for the coming year and will be purchased outright for cash, the world rights to be controlled by British-American. These pictures will be released to the exhibitor on a rental based on the merit of each production.

The British-American Picture Finance Corporation had a contract with the Independent Sales Corporation whereby the latter released all its pictures. The Independent Sales was absorbed recently by the Hallmark Pictures Corporation. During the run of its contract with British-American Independent released the following pictures of British-American: "A House Divided," a J. Stuart Blackton production; "When a Woman Strikes," starring Ben Wilson; "When My Ship Comes In," starring Jane Gray and "The Other Man's Wife," co-starring Miss Ellen Cassidy and Stuart Holmes.

Under its new contract with British-American, Hallmark Pictures Corporation will release three big productions acquired under the new contract. These three are "Wit Wins," a Burton L. King production, starring Florence Billings; "Love, Honor and (?)," co-starring Ellen Cassidy and Sturat Holmes, a Charles Miller production, and "Parted Curtains," starring Henry B. Walthall. These three productions will be ready for release throughout the United States, Oct. 1st.

With the acquisition of the last-named productions, British-American has seven pictures releasing through the Hallmark Corporation and others are to be acquired from the open market.

The British-American Corporation, according to a statement issued by President Grant, will consider, in purchasing for open market, three qualifications—box-office value, story and personnel of cast. Under the qualification of box-office value President Grant considers production, director and all those elements which enter into a picture to attract patrons without the high-priced star as the one and only incentive. The story must be colorful and true to life with the suggestive and far-fetched situations eliminated. The cast shall contain the names of recognized actors and those whose names have become known through their work in the silent drama.

Deal Is Arranged with British-American for Twelve

Long Lloyd Comedies Start in November

A new era in comedy making will be inaugurated with the release of the first of the $100,000 two-reel Harold Lloyd specials, according to Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe, in announcing the titles of the initial four Lloyd productions to be distributed under the new and broadened policy adopted by the Rolin Film Company and Pathe.

"Bumping Into Broadway" will introduce Lloyd as the star in multiple reel comedies, Mr. Brunet announces, and will be released on November 2nd.

"Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth" and "His Royal Slyness" are others of the series, which have been completed.

Insuring Correctness

Jesse D. Hampton announces that Professor Ernest C. Sealer, scholar and linquist, will be retained by the Blanche Sweet productions.

Revival Announced by Exclusive Features

Exclusive Features, Inc., announces the revival of "The Heart of Texas Ryan," a five-reel Western drama, produced by William N. Selig and pronounced by critics, at the time of its initial showing, one of the most stirring dramas of Western life ever produced for screen presentation. Exclusive Features, Inc., has obtained the exclusive rights to this feature from William N. Selig and are offering it on the state rights' market as a special.

Tom Mix, the star of "The Heart of Texas Ryan," is known wherever motion pictures are shown as one of the silent drama's most daring and expert horsemen. In William N. Selig's production of "The Heart of Texas Ryan," the star is shown in what is considered by critics and the public to be one of his best pictures. Exclusive Features, Inc., has revised and re-edited this popular Mix feature. New prints have been obtained.

H. B. Warner Liked in Latest Production

"For a Woman's Honor," the latest Robertson-Cole release through Exhibitors' Mutual, shows that H. B. Warner is getting into his real stride before the camera. "The Man Who Turned White" and "The Pagan God," the two first Superior Pictures in which Mr. Warner was starred, are going big throughout the country according to exhibitors' reports, but the newest play is expected to top them both.

Fisher's Cartoons in Demand

Fox Offices Report Exceedingly Wide Demand for "Mutt and Jeff" Comedies

THE possibility of a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, by "Bud" Fisher, dominating theatre programs is interesting Fox Film Corporation as producer of the weekly comic feature by the artist.

Many exhibitors have reported to the producer that Mutt & Jeff are steadily constituting themselves the most important portion of their programs, and have reached a popularity which equals that of any of the screen stars.

Since the advent of a novel advertisement emanating from the Fox organization thousands of queries have been received at the Fox home offices, as well as at the various branches throughout the country, regarding the truth of the story that Mutt and Jeff are real people, men of flesh and blood.

Some enthusiastic fans have requested their favorite theatres to arrange for the personal appearance of one or both of these comedfians, and the exhibitors in turn have appealed to the Fox organization to dig up the originals and send them on tour of the country for personal appearances at the houses in which they have amassed such a following.

With the novelty of the ideas contained in the forthcoming releases for 1919-1920, William Fox is confident of the ability of the Mutt and Jeff cartoons to surpass the record for box office value which they already boast, and which has spread recently into houses using black-and-white comics for the first time.

Many new stunts are promised in this globe-trotting tour, and, with the new method of reproduction which has been installed in the studios of Fox Film Corporation, it is believed theatre managers will find no difficulty in sending 'em away with a Smile.

"Bandbox" Ready in October

Hodkinson Announces Release Date of the Dietrich-Beck Production

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE'S popular melodramatic novel, "The Bandbox," is announced this week by the Hodkinson organization, its distributors, as available for American pre-release engagements for first week in October. This fast melodrama of a vanishing pearl necklace, with scenes laid in London, on shipboard and in metropolitan New York, is the first Doris Kenyon starring vehicle to be completed by Deitrich-Beck, Inc.

The Deitrich-Beck productions are to be not less than six in number and will include besides "The Bandbox" "Cynthia - of - the - Minute," "Joan Thursday" and other famous Vance novels.

Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, the producers who lend their names and experience to the new organization, chose R. William Neill to direct "The Bandbox," and Mr. Neill, being in thorough accord with his star, has given this organization one of the swiftest, liveliest stories of his career which has been marked by such previous exhibitor successes as "The Career of Katherine Bush" by Elinor Glyn, "Flare-up Sal," "Love Me," "The Price Mark," "Tyrant Fear," "Green Eyes" and "Mating of Mercella." Mr. Neill's first work as an Ince director was in assisting in the supervision of "Civilization."

The Hodkinson exploitation department has just completed a special campaign press sheet on "The Bandbox," replete with helpful exploitation hints for exhibitors and usable newspaper "readers" on the star and production. The press sheet will supplement a nation-wide campaign among booksellers on the Hodkinson organization's first Doris Kenyon release.

Beck's Serial Company in Southern Waters

"The Isle of Jewels" serial company, headed by Stuart Holmes, and Miss Frankie Mann, is en route for a small island off the southern coast where the tropical scenes of the new fifteen chapter drama are to be enacted.

Arthur F. Beck, head of Beck Serial Productions, Inc., producing this serial for Pathe, dispatched Robert Stevens, technical director and a corps of forty men over two weeks ago, and the work of preparation for the company's arrival is now practically complete, despite two or three bad storms.

Rolfe Completes "The Amazing Lovers"

With the staging of the final episode of exteriors, B. A. Rolfe last week finished the production of "The Amazing Lovers," and the negative is now in the cutting room being assembled and edited. The picture, based on the Robert W. Chambers story, "The Shining Band," with adaptations for the screen by Charles A. Logue, is the first of a series founded on stories by Mr. Chambers, and the first Rolfe production to go through the new firm of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

In the cast are Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, G. V. Seyffertitz, E. J. Ratcliffe, John Goldsworthy, John L. Shine and Robert Paton Gibbs.

Versions of Dickens' Works Please

Supporters of the move for more picturizations of high-class works are said to be pleased over the box-office success of Charles Dickens "Dombey and Son," Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan" and H. B. Irving in "The Lyons Mail" recently released by Triangle.

Enthusiastic reports are now being received by Triangle Representatives from exhibitors in every territory telling them of the sudden bursts of applause caused by the great author's works during the showing of the pictures and the favorable comments heard in the theatre lobby after each performance.

Monopol Films Ready for the Market

Max Cohen, president of Monopol Pictures Company, announced this week that "Crimson Shoals" and "Alma, Where Do You Live?" are now both ready for the consideration of the state right buyer. Several weeks have been spent in the preparation of an extensive line of advertising accessories and publicity helps for both productions. Cohen is particularly enthusiastic over the possibilities in connection with "Crimson Shoals."

He said this week: "'Crimson Shoals' has great advertising possibilities for the exhibitor. It stars Francis Ford, whose many appearances in successful serials has made his name a byword with the motion picture public. Despite this we have insured the production as to attraction-compelling powers by providing Ford with the most unique role ever assigned a star. This film contains the amazing paradox of one man appearing in three distinct characters, in the same scenes, at the same moment."

Tyrad Picture Branch in Pittsburgh

Matthias Radin, president and general manager of the Tyrad Pictures, Inc., announces that he has just returned from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he has established a branch of the Tyrad Pictures, and has placed Mr. Earl Simmons in charge as manager.

A number of very prominent citizens of Pittsburgh have indorsed "The Red Viper."

In New York City a number of circuits have been already booked, and first runs are booking very speedily. The picture is being handled on a state right basis. Some territory is still open.

Gaudio Joins Mayer

Tonio Gaudio, the photographer who jumped in the limelight through his work on "The Unpardonable Sin" and other Marshall Neilan pictures, has quit the Neilan organization to devote his time exclusively to the photographing of future Anita Stewart Productions. Gaudio is one of the men who has brought motion picture photography to the high standard of perfection it has reached today, where it is recognized as a real art.

Schomer Signs Feminine Star

Muriel Ostriche in Addition to Emily Stevens Now Under Producer's Banner

ABRAHAM S. SCHOMER, author and director of many screen successes, has now persuaded two screen favorites whose faces have been missing from the silver sheet for some time to return, and they will make their new debuts in "The Sacred Flame" Mr. Schomer's newest play which is now being filmed up at the old Biograph Studios.

It was but recently that Emily Stevens, the star of the new production, announced that she has been persuaded to again face a camera through reading the script of "The Sacred Flame" which she declares is a story worth while making and not the inane sort of material which so many producers have recently been offering and which she so condemned that she had declared she would not longer appear in any of them. In Miss Stevens' case, it was Mr. Schomer's literary ability and directing generalship which brought a star back to the movie fans.

Now comes announcement that another actress who has been devoting her attention to things far removed from the calcium will also return via "The Sacred Flame." She is Muriel Ostriche, well known to all the moving picture world as a leading woman and ingenue since she long ago played child parts with the old Biograph company. For the past two years, Miss Ostriche who will appear in the new feature as ingenue, has been devoting her entire attention to war work, being chiefly affiliated with the Stage Women's War Relief.

Mr. Schomer believes that it is as ingenue rather than leading woman, however, that Miss Ostriche is at her best, for she weighs but ninety pounds and her screen manner is that of the unaffected very young girl.

Radium Mystery Scheduled

Universal Will Release Long Serial; Four Well-Known Stars Are Featured

"THE RADIUM MYSTERY," said to be one of the most interesting serials of the year and which has for its basis the mystery of the location of a tube of radium, the costliest substance known, is to be released by the Universal Company.

The serial, which will be made in eighteen episodes, is being made by the Pacific Producing Co., and will be released through Universal some time later this fall.

Four very well known film stars are to be featured in this serial. They are Cleo Madison, whose latest success was in "The Romance of Tarzan"; Eileen Sedgwick, who has been starred in a number of successful serial productions, including the Eddie Polo serial, "The Lure of the Circus," formerly U. S. cavalryman who has been featured in "The No-Good Guy," "The Waifs," "Cactus Nell" and "The Narrow Trail," with Wm. S. Hart in "Square Deal Sanderson," and Edwin Brady, who has been the "villain" in such photodrama as "Neal of the Navy," "Out of the Shadows," and "The Fount of Courage." All of these artists have been in Universal productions before.

The opening episodes of the serial are laid in Northern Montana. After the third episode the scenes will be laid in Barbary Coast and later to the tropical climes.

One of the most unusual incidents connected with the making of this serial was the obtaining of one gramme of radium from Joseph M. Flannery, the Pittsburgh millionaire who is said to own eighty per cent of the world's supply.

Minter Photos are Exhausted

Edition of Over Million Used in Big Publicity Campaign Quickly Run Out

THE first edition of portraits of Mary Miles Minter, eight by ten inches in size, printed in four colors and to be used as inserts with Saturday and Sunday editions of newspapers, has been exhausted according to an announcement from Realart Pictures Corporation and arrangements now are under way for a second edition.

The printing of the first run was 1,040,000 copies. Requests from additional newspapers with total circulation in excess of 500,000 copies have been received for permission to use the portrait.

Among the large newspapers in which the insert will appear in the near future are the New York World, the Atlanta Constitution, the Birmingham Age-Herald, the Philadelphia North American and the Nashville Tennesseean and American. The aggregate circulation of these publications is in excess of 950,000 copies, the New York World leading with 600,000 and the Philadelphia North American being second with 215,000.

Newspapers which are under consideration include one in New England, three in the South and one in the West. All are desirous of widely advertising the portrait in connection with circulation promotion work. The picture is the framed one of Miss Minter which Realart used recently in trade paper advertising. The requests for permission to use it followed almost immediately upon its publication and have been coming in since at the rate of one a day.

Edwin August Back as Director Again

After having enjoyed the pleasure of appearing again on the spoken stage for several years, after a long number of years directing pictures, Edwin August is again handling the megaphone at the World Studio at Fort Lee. Mr. August, while waiting in his dressing room for his cue to appear on the stage, whiled away the time writing a motion picture play. He called it "The Poisoned Pen." This brain child of his appealed to his sense of value as a director and he set about to see it put on the screen. He brought it to the World Film Corporation and sold it.

The next thing was to get a director and the officials of this company, remembering that August had made many good pictures for the company, asked if there was any reason why Edwin August, the director could not cooperate with Edwin August, the author, and make the picture. The director and author agreed that this was a very good idea and thus Edwin August is directing June Elvidge in "The Poisoned Pen," and it will be released some time during the month of November.

Earle Williams Signs for Long Term

Earle Williams has just signed a new contract with Vitagraph which will assure his services to that organization for several years to come. Mr. Williams is now at work on "The Far East," by H. H. Van Loan. When this is finished he will make a trip to the East.

Mr. Williams, after signing the contract, said that he had had many offers from other producers, who knew that his contract with Vitagraph was about to expire. He long ago decided, he said, to remain with the pioneer film company, with which he had been identified ever since gaining prominence on the screen.

Select's Chief Artist

Anthony Gablik, for four years head artist for the Universal Film Corporation and founder of the Kiddie Art Novelty Company, has been engaged as chief artist of the Select Pictures Corporation.

Prints of First Equity on the Way

"EYES OF YOUTH," the first of the Equity Pictures Corporation's productions, in which Clara Kimball Young is starred and which, from Equity's announcements, is her first big dramatic vehicle, is complete and prints will arrive in New York early next week.

Harry Garson, who is making all Equity productions, and who is responsible for the direction and creation of all studio activities, notified his distributing concern that the negative was being cut and titled and that a new scheme of animated titles had been gotten and that the mystical effects in the picture were so unusual as to be almost startling.

President Herbert K. Somborn of the Equity is returning east this week, having remained at the coast studio until he witnessed the very last shot, and according to his wire to General Manager Joseph Schnitzer, the picture is all and more than was anticipated.

The new Equity pictures are being handled on a franchise basis in the domestic market.

Eugene Roth of San Francisco has procured the rights in that territory and is opening exchanges in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

G. A. Metzger, formerly with Universal and prominent in northwestern film activities, controls the franchise in the Oregon district and has already set about opening exchanges.

"Eyes of Youth" Completed; Somborn Coming East

Samuel Zieler controls the New York territory and will open offices here under the name of Commonwealth Pictures. Mr. Zieler will surrender his position with Universal, and start work at once on his new venture.

Benjamin Amsterdam, director of the exchange bearing his name, in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, secured that territory and Southern New Jersey and has opened new exchanges at 1235 Vine street under the name of Equity Productions and has already been busy on the exhibition end of "Eyes of Youth" which will come to the market about November 1.

Colonel Fred Levey, of Louisville, will control Kentucky and Tennessee and journeyed to Los Angeles as Miss Young's guest to witness part of the picture's production. He was responsible for a wire to the Louisville Courier Journal, in which he stated that after viewing the work at the Garson studio for a week, he was firmly convinced that a new school of dramatic film production was at hand and that he had purchased all the Equity pictures at a price greater than he had ever considered paying for any films.

Edward Golden, of the American Feature Film Company of Boston, will handle the New England States on Equity productions and anticipates extremely active trading.

His offices at 60 Church street will be the New England headquarters.

Clarke and Rowland, trading under the First National Exhibitors of Pennsylvania, has purchased the entire Equity output for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and as usual, Joseph Skirboll from his Ferry street location will control the picture's destinies.

Floyd Brockell and his associate, Elliot, trading under the name of Greater Stars Productions Company, with office in Consumers' Building, will direct the Equity productions throughout Illinois and Indiana while L. C. Thompson, formerly with Universal, at Cleveland, is opening offices in that city for the distribution in Ohio of Equity material.

The remainder of the territory has been practically closed, with the mere formality of signing contracts remaining to make the deals actualities, which will conclude 100 per cent of the territory as active and the first release already booked in a number of the highly important theatres throughout the country, already set for early November.

Goldwyn's Drive Begins Oct. 15

BACKED by definite information relative to motion picture conditions in every part of the country and the specific needs of exhibitors in various localities, the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will launch its contemplated national advertising campaign early in October.

The Board of Directors has authorized Charles D. Isaacson, director of advertising, to proceed on an elaborate scale with the campaign which has been planned with the utmost care during the past two months. A budget has been prepared on the basis of an investigation carried on by Mr. Isaacson, which provides an up-to-the-minute knowledge of the requirements of exhibitors in small towns, as well as the larger cities.

"Puppy Love" it might be titled, for you would scarcely recognize Mabel Normand here. From Goldwyn's "Empty Paradise"

National Ad Campaign to Be Put Before Millions

The Goldwyn advertising director has been instructed to employ the finest talent obtainable—literary, artistic and otherwise—in order to make this campaign completely effective from the standpoint of the exhibitor who sells Goldwyn Pictures to the ultimate consumer.

In a number of vital respects the plan devised by Mr. Isaacson is unique, and it will be worked out along lines differentiating it from any national advertising drive which has been conducted in the past. Instead of shooting into the dark without any definite objective, Mr. Isaacson has surveyed the field which he is going to cover and has gathered the best possible information on where advertising copy can be placed most effectively with a view to getting a full return on every dollar expended.

Goldwyn press and service men, now located in all but one of the company's twenty-two branches, have been scouting the field for almost two months, collecting data in regard to local demands and drawing up a general survey of advertising conditions as they bear upon motion pictures. The survey, as carried on in a systematic way to cover the entire field, has been unique, and has revealed many new angles through which national advertising may be tied up with exhibitors and theatres in a way that gives them a direct benefit.

Plans formulated by the Goldwyn advertising director are such as to build an appeal to the public that will be awakening and stimulating and will cause a country-wide discussion of Goldwyn productions, which present the foremost stars of the screen, the works of the Eminent Authors and adaptations of famous stage plays selected from the inexhaustible number of successes that have come to Goldwyn through the alliance with the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns.

By October 15th, Goldwyn copy will confront the eyes of millions of newspaper readers, who, at no expense to the exhibitor, will be informed of the merits of the super-quality photoplays which Goldwyn has completed for the opening of the fall season that institutes the new policy of "Don't book Goldwyn Pictures until you have seen them."

Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Will Rogers and the other stars of the organization will be kept constantly before the public's attention and readers of the works of the Eminent Authors will be informed about the picture versions of the novels that they enjoyed in book form.

Lait's Contract Calls for Five Years

It is now announced that Jack Lait, well known author, has been signed by Myron Selznick for a period of five years and not one year, as previously announced.

Simplex Notes

Mr. C. D. Struble, head of the Yale Theatre Supply Company of Kansas City, Mo., is being congratulated upon the appearance of the August 7th number of his "Yale Service Bulletin," which has made a tremendous hit ever since the first number was published.

This bulletin is gotten up in folder form and is printed upon glazed paper, using a dignified poster type in two colors. Part of the August issue is devoted to the recent Simplex installation at the Newmann theatre, this section occupying the centre page spread and which comprises an original group of photographs picturing the Newmann installation, while the balance of the pamphlet is taken up in trade talks, and price lists of theatre equipment, with entertaining descriptions of same.

Mr. Struble, besides editing this entertaining little house organ, has also found time to place Simplex Projectors in the following theatres in his territory, all of them being placed since the Newmann installation:

Stone Church, Independence, Mo.
L. S. Reich's theatre, Wagoner, Okla.
Airdome, Sulphur, Okla.
De Luxe theatre, Hutchinson, Kans.
Electric theatre, Quinter, Kans.
Star theatre, Ashland, Kans.
Iris theatre, Hutchinson, Kans.
Cozy theatre, Pratt, Kans.
Opera House, Minneola, Kans.
Liberty theatre, Topeka, Kans.
Airdome, Gypsum, Kans.
Forum theatre, Wichita, Kans.
Sedalia theatre, Sedalia, Mo.
Star theatre, Newton, Kans.
Electric theatre, Larned. Kans.
Murray theatre, Ponca City, Okla.
St. Mary's Academy, Leavenworth, Kans.
Zimm theatre, Winfield, Kans.
J. W. Collins' theatre, Avant, Okla.
Majestic theatre, Devol, Okla.
Highland theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

Mr. Charles W. Johnson, better known as "C. W.," has just returned to this city after a very interesting period of activities at Detroit, Mich.

Mr. Johnson, who is supervisor of projection for the Wm. Fox Corporation in which capacity he has served for the past thirteen years, was sent to Detroit to install his system of projection in the Washington theatre, that city, which the Wm. Fox interests have recently taken over.

Mr. Johnson's system includes special stage settings and lighting effects, as well as specially treated and constructed screens. When Mr. Johnson reached Detroit he found that the Fox company in following out their regular policy had removed the projectors with which the house was previously equipped and had purchased two new Type "S" Simplex Motor-Driven Projectors.

In order that one hundred or more seats might be made available, the projection room at Mr. Johnson's suggestion was removed from its former location in the first balcony into the second balcony. It was here that Mr. Johnson was to meet with considerable difficulty, for with the increased pitch due to the higher projector location a distortion both in focus and in picture shape was inevitable.

Millions Interested in Red Cross Films

The tremendous total of twenty-eight million members of the American Red Cross, divided among nearly four thousand local chapters, offers an idea of the vast number of prospective theatre patrons who will be interested in the new "Red Cross Travelogues," now being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America. In the opinion of Vice President E. W. Hammons of the Educational organization this new series of travel pictures is backed by the greatest organization of bona fide members ever interested in motion picture production.

The Red Cross releases so far completed are "Belgium, the Broken Kingdom," and "America's Watch on the Rhine." Both subjects are essentially "travelogues," but have added interest because of the historical value and the auspices of the Red Cross organization, which in conjunction with the name of the Educational Films Corporation is a double guarantee of quality.

Life-Grams Organized

Alex. Yokel and J. Stuart Gillespie, executives of Briggs Pictures, Inc., the producers of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, have organized Life-Grams, Inc., and will produce a series of one-reel comic novelties written by Neal R. O'Hara, the New York Evening World humorist.

The comedies, which are one reel long, will introduce, it is declared, a new form of screen expression that is expected to prove exceedingly popular. Three of them already have been finished and work is going ahead on others at a Manhattan studio. They will carry the general title of Life-Grams, although each subject will be complete in itself.

Daughter of English Favorite for Screen

Georgette Cohan, the daughter of George Cohan and Ethel Levey, is to appear on the screen. She will make her debut in the forthcoming productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in England.

Miss Cohan lives with her mother in England. Ethel Levey is an English stage favorite and now is the wife of Graham White, the aviator. Miss Levey owns the famous and exclusive Flying Club at Hendon, England.

Realart Gets a Record Contract

WHAT is believed to be the biggest contract ever closed between a West Coast exhibitor and a distributing company is that recently made by Turner and Dahnken through Bruce Johnson, General Manager, and Ralph B. Quive, San Francisco manager for Realart Pictures Corporation.

What makes the contract unusual are the big figures covered by it, the extensive guarantees given by both parties and the large number of theatres and attractions covered. All the star productions of Realart Pictures Corporation are to be presented in the extensive Turner and Dahnken chain clustered around the great Tivoli theatre in San Francisco.

The theatres affected outside of the Tivoli are the T. and D. in Oakland, T. and D. in Sacramento, T. and D. Stockton, T. and D. San Jose, and T. and D. Berkeley. This takes in cities with an aggregate population running well into 1,000,000, or by far the greater number of persons living in communities having photoplay houses served by San Francisco exchanges.

Turner and Dahnken Houses on Coast Take Output

The mighty America theatre of Denver will house Realart attractions first run in the mile high city. There is probably no manager in the western part of the United States who influences the territory surrounding him so strongly as Mr. Alvah G. Talbot. His ambitious presentations and live exploitations are known far and wide in the inter-mountain country.

In the metropolitan district the entire Marcus Loew chain of 26 theatres will display the new pictures of the Realart stars.

Tom Moore's big Rialto theatre in Washington will show the productions first in the Capital City. Mr. Moore is entering on a big exploitation campaign designed to make the Realart luminaries the best known stars in Washington. Mr. Moore's high standing and achievements are well known.

One of the prettiest and best located houses in Kansas City, the Liberty, on Main Street near 12th, has secured first showings. Mr. Sam Harding, one of the most prominent of the Missouri showmen, opened the Liberty a little over a year ago and it has been a great success. Mr. I. Libson has arranged for the attractions for his Strand theatre in Cincinnati. This is one of the downtown houses conducted by Mr. Libson, who has nearly all the first run theatres in the Ohio city. Marcus Loew's Strand theatre in Dayton will present Realart Pictures under the direction of Mark Gates.

Louisville photoplay followers will see Realart's stars and specials at the Alamo. This leading theatre is under the management of Fred Dolle. A. F. Brentlinger, who runs the Liberty in Terre Haute, the Orpheum in Ft. Wayne and the Murette in Richmond has signed his name to a contract to present pictures bearing the trademark of the palette and tube in the Indiana cities. Followers of motion pictures in Providence, R. I., will find Realart Pictures at Max Nathanson's Modern theatre.

"Desert Gold" Gets Recognition

ZANE GREY'S "Desert Gold," produced by Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner for W. W. Hodkinson distribution with the personal supervision of the author and under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter, has been given immediate recognition as a really fine picture. This recognition, of course, takes the form of immediate bookings by the country's largest first-run factors and by important circuits.

Important bookings of the past week included a first run in "The Loop," Chicago, at the Pastime theatre, followed by circuit-wide bookings in all the Lubliner and Trinz and Ascher Bros.' houses in Chicago, giving this production a clean sweep from the far North Side to the extreme South Side of Chicago. Other first runs that have closed within a few days for immediate playing dates are A. G. Talbot's America theatre, Denver; Swartz's Victoria theatre, Wilmington, Del.; the Empire, Portland, Me.

Exhibitor Demand Is Taken as Barometer on Worth

An indication of what Zane Grey has come to mean with his pictures was furnished during the week by the visit to New York of Hugh Shields, of the Denver Dry Goods Company, the largest retailers of books west of the Mississippi River. Mr. Shields came to New York for the sole purpose of facilitating the immediate shipment of his orders of "Desert Gold" and other Zane Grey novels by Grosset and Dunlap to Denver to take advantages in a sales way of the tremendous popularity "Desert Gold" will enjoy as a picture throughout the Denver territory. Immediately after seeing this picture, the representative of the Denver Dry Goods Company placed for his organization's book department the largest order ever received in the history of the Grosset and Dunlap publishing firm for the works of a single author.

Chaplin Finds Europe Is Unsettled

AFTER having half circled the globe since his departure from New York nine weeks ago, during which time he visited England, France and Switzerland, Sdyney Chaplin returned to this country Saturday, bringing with him close to thirty thousand feet of films, the best of which will be used in his first Paramount Special under his million dollar contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Although very enthusiastic over his success abroad, especialy over the fact that he has obtained a new character of material for the screen, the producer-star regretted his inability to return with a complete picture, attributing this impossibility to existing conditions in those countries close to the war zone.

According to Mr. Chaplin's findings there is tremendous scope for the production of motion pictures abroad, especially in France, but this virgin territory will not be available for the camera until business conditions and facilities become normal.

Returns from Long Trip with 30,000 Feet of Film

Those scenes which were filmed by the star, however, furnish, with a few exceptions, the exteriors for his picture. While a number of interiors were made, it was under severe handicap and with approaching winter and a heavy shortage of coal rendering it impossible to obtain artificial lighting, it was found advisable to return to the United States.

Without losing any time the star and members of his company will start immediately for Los Angeles where the picture will be completed within the next two months.

"I could not have selected a better place than France as a background for my first production," said Mr. Chaplin in speaking of his trip. "It is impossible to convey, in mere words, the wonders held in the land of our sister Republic, in the form of scenic beauty.

"But the cloud of war has cloaked itself over all of France for more than five years and now that the first rays of peaceful sunshine are replacing the echo of roaring guns, those who have faced the ravishings of conflict are taking advantage of free air.

"To produce motion pictures many things are required. Coal is one of the greatest essentials being used for the electrical apparatus. Just now coal is at a premium and it is a speculation as to whether there will even be a sufficient supply to meet domestic dmands in Paris.

"And there are many other commodities the picture producer requires which cannot be obtained at this time in France.

Prosaic Happy Ending Not for "Laska" Film

The story of "Lasca," the first production of Universal's winter-spring series, is from the poem by Frank Duprez, and promises to inaugurate a number of new ideas in photoplay stories.

Percy Heath, the new head of the Universal scenario department, formerly a widely-known newspaper man and who for a long time was associated with the Dillingham theatrical enterprises, has taken the lead in the new trend of the photoplay art in his picturization of this famous poem.

Instead of the prosaic happy ending in which the hero and heroine clasp in the final close-up, Mr. Heath with the co-operation of Director Norman Down, have advanced the art of the silent story telling by their scenario innovations in "Lasca."

An ending different and more unique than anything previously attempted in pictures makes this Universal production one of the first of a series to be filmed under the scenario direction of Percy Heath.

Two Pathe Serials Run on the Same Bill

A new record in serial bookings has been set by the Buffalo, N. Y., Branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., at the Try-It Theatre in Buffalo.

Try-It seems to be an appropriate name for the house. The manager, Mr. Parmelee, formerly used a Pathe serial and a Pathe feature on the same day and found the combination had decidedly strong drawing power. Then he tried an experiment. He booked two Pathe serials, "The Lightning Raider," starring Pearl White, and "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, and exhibited them on the same day. The experiment was even more successful, Manager Parmeless reports.

Fox Circuit Takes Big Sennett Comedy

Sol Lesser announces that his New York Exchange has just closed bookings for the Fox Circuit of thirteen theatres for "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the Mack Sennett travesty, in conjunction with the personal appearance of the famous Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties.

Neilan Buys Penrod Stories

Popular Booth Tarkington Tales Will Be Filmed with Wesley Barry as Penrod

J. R. GRAINGER, Eastern representative for Marshall Neilan productions, last Tuesday afternoon annonnced the purchase of motion picture right sto the famous "Penrod" stories. Negotiations for this piece of property have been under way for some time between the Marshall Neilan organization and Booth Tarkington, the author, George W. Tyler and Klaw & Erlanger, who own the theatrical rights.

The Penrod stories have for the past several years appeared in various national magazines including Metropolitan, American, Everybody's, etc., and have become one of the foremost series of popular literature. In 1914 the book, "Penrod" was published by Doubleday, Page & Co., and proved one of the biggest sellers of the day. In fact, the demand for these stories among the reading public was so great that in 1916, Doubleday, Page & Co. published a sequel by Tarkington in book form entitled "Penrod and Sam."

As a play, produced by Klaw & Erlanger and George W. Tyler, "Penrod" proved an instantaneous success. The play opened at the Globe theatre in September, 1918, and was staged by Edward E. Rose, who dramatized the story. On the road the play duplicated its Broadway success and it has just started on tour for the 1919-20 season. According to latest reports it is breaking records for early-season receipts.

Simultaneous with the Penrod announcement, Mr. Grainger stated that Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced youngster who has become one of the most popular child-actors in the country and who was recently signed on a long term contract by Mr. Neilan, will play the part of Penrod.

The "Penrod" story will probably be Mr. Neilan's second First National release following "The Eternal Three," an adaptation from Randall Parish's well known book, "Bob Hampton of Placer," now being produced by Mr. Neilan.

"The Other Half" is Scoring

Such Is Report Received by Exhibitors Mutual on King Vidor's Latest

"THE Other Half" the Brentwood feature released through Robertson-Cole is destined to be one of the biggest pictures of the season in point of popular approval and financial return according to the reports received by Exhibitors Mutual. The success of "The Turn in the Road" and "Better Times" has immeasurably strengthened the demand for pictures made by King W. Vidor and paved the way for "The Other Half."

"The Turn in the Road" was pronounced the second best play of the year by one of the noted critics and many who saw it and who have recently seen the latest Vidor picture have expressed the belief that the latest offering is the better of the two. It received the most remarkable sort of praise from all the reveiwers.

What makes it particularly valuable at this time is the fact that it deals with the question of capital and labor in an entirely novel way in these days of industrial strife. It softly unfolds the fact that there is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it ill behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us.

The rancor and ill will which characterizes so many productions touching on capital and labor is entirely absent in this picture. The struggle between them is there, worked well into plot, but Vidor as always handles his subject in a strong but seemingly gentle manner.

Weird Uniqueness in Setting

Reynolds Tries New Effects in the Interiors of the Pauline Picture

WITH production humming merrily onward at the studios of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., at Flushing, L. I., Sidney Reynolds discloses the fact that he is incorporating many original effects in interior settings. Employing an artist well-known in Washington Square circles for his illustrative work and decorative conceptions on magazine covers, Mr. Reynolds had this painter design a series of original panels for the interior of the mysterious house in which a large part of the action of his serial featuring J. Robert Pauline, the famous former hypnotist and vaudeville headliner, takes place.

These designs are of a weird and yet artistic conception. Each design embodies in its conception a symbolic meaning and is not the mere, idle vagary of a dreaming mind but forms part of a connected whole-making a vertible symposium of interperative art. Music, the dance, literature, painting, sculpture, human aspirations and human struggles are represented in fantastic and yet beautiful figures which form the panel effects. These works were not done by ordinary decorators but were executed by a number of associates whom this artist obtained for the purpose. It is confidently stated by Mr. Reynolds that nothing like these weird and fantastic panels of modern art has ever been done for the screen.

A number of interesting shots of J. Robert Pauline's hypnotic eyes have been made by Director Davis for this serial. Mr. Pauline has adjusted himself admirably to the world of the camera, according to Mr. Davis, and is right at home in this field of histrionic endeavor with Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer, Peggy Shanor, Ralph J. Locke, George Clarke and Horace Braham.

Foreign Deals on Hodkinson Releases

The W. W. Hodkinson Export Department reports the sale of a year's series of J. Warren Kerrigan productions for all of Continental Europe to the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., the negotiations having been made with Mr. Brockliss, now on a visit to the United States during the absence of his American associate, Sidney Garrett.

Complete world rights to the Kerrigan and Billie Rhodes productions are controlled by the Hodkinson organization and sales of important territories are now being closed. The rights to "A White Man's Chance" and "The Joyous Liar," the latter a Kerrigan production still unreleased in the United States, have been sold to Max Glucksman for Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile through Jacobo Glucksman, of 110 West 40th street, New York.

Tableaux with Ancient Deities Represented

"The Feast of the Gods" in "Dangerous Waters," William Desmond's latest Robertson-Cole production, distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, is said to offer suggestions for society tableaux as well as being a screen novelty.

This spectacular scene is laid in a rocky crystal grotto were all the guests come costumed in the filmy apparel of gods and goddesses. Jupiter and Inno, Venus and Adonis, Vulcan and Bacchus, Hebe, Minerva, Proserpine, Neptune, Cupid and Psyche, and all the other mythological folk are shown in a Saturnalia of Bacchus and revelling in the old pagan way. Beautiful tableaux entertain the guests, and later revelry leads to riot.

Canyon's President on Way to Coast

Jacob Weinberg, president of Canyon Pictures Corporation, left last week for the Selig Studios, Los Angeles, to supervise the serial production in which this company will feature Franklyn Farnum. Mr. Farnum is now at work completing a series of two-reel Western dramas for Mr. Weinberg, three of which are now ready for review.

Victor Moore will make his screen reappearance in stage stories produced by A. E. and R. R. Riskin

Another Capital Comedy Unit

Engagement of a comedy production unit is now under way at the studio of the Capital Film Company in Hollywood, where arrangements are being conducted by S. L. Barnhard, president of the Company, for the establishment of a production unit which will make two-reel slap-stick comedies.

The services of a noted comedian have been secured as well as those of one of the foremost directors of humorous subjects on the West Coast. Their names, however, are being withheld, pending completion of details necessary to the production of the first of the comedies.

The comedy company makes the fourth of the producing organizations working for the Capital company, the other three being those in which Al Jennings, the noted ex-bandit, Neal Hart, prominent portrayer of Western roles, and Helen Gibson, "the railroad girl," are the respective stellar heads.

Nazimova Shatters Records in the West

Nazimova in her new production, "The Brat," has shattered attendance records that have stood for years in the principal cities of the West, according to reports reaching the home office of Metro Picture Corporation. These reports indicate that the Russian star has surpassed even her own previous boxoffice achievements in the face of most unusual climatic obstacles.

Telegrams from every house where Nazimova was shown revealed uniformly that she had drawn capacity houses in the largest theatres at new high prices for admission.

Allgood Company Goes to Adirondacks

Director Joseph A. Golden and his company headed by Charles Hutchinson, premier stunt man, left the first of the week for Ausable Chasm in the Adirondacks, where they will shoot thrillers for the early episodes of the new Allgood Pictures Corporation serial.

Allgood Pictures Corporation has just been organized to exploit some new ideas in the serial field—among them a combination of super-stunts and human interest story.

William Farnum's Latest Scores

"Last of Duanes" Is Presented on Broadway

FOLLOWING immediately upon the successful run of "Checkers" at the Central theatre on Broadway, William Fox, its producer introduced William Farnum in the stellar role of Zane Grey's western novel, "The Last of the Duanes." The crowds which are packing the Central to see this big pictorial version of Grey's story, speak volumes for the popularity of the author, star and producer.

In "The Last of the Duanes," Mr. Farnum essayed many daring and dangerous tasks during the filming of the play.

It was necessary at one time for Mr. Farnum to descend the face of a waterfall eighty-five feet high to escape a pursuing posse. When he dropped into the boiling pool below it seemed for a moment to the anxious observers that he would be engulfed; but he emerged without injury.

"The Last of the Duanes" is frankly a melodrama, and as such has been received by the newspaper reviewers as a production of the most thrilling type. They unite in warm praise of the work of the star and the producer, declaring this to be the strongest vehicle the actor has had.

In the audiences which have crowded the Central for the past week were followers of the stage and screen who had seen Mr. Farnum in such of his triumphs on the speaking stage as "Ben Hur," "Virginius," "The Prince of India," "The Littlest Rebel" and others. There were also those who had seen him in screen vehicles like "The Lone Star Ranger" and "Wolves of the Night"; and all declared that in "The Last of the Duanes" his work in the character of Buck Duane was the finest bit of Farnum artistry they could recall.

Mr. Farnum himself it is said feels that he has surpased his best previous efforts in the role of Buck Duane; that it is his crowning achievement on either stage or screen.

In no other screen production has Mr. Farnum produced such effects in make-up as in this picture. For the big scenes in the desert for example, the star deprived himself of many pleasures after studio hours that he might permit his strong beard to grow as a feature of his make-up rather than resort to the unconvincing false beard.

Country Coming to Longer Runs

Goldwyn Exchanges Say They Are Now More Prevalent

"BETTER PICTURES AND LONGER RUNS," the goal at which Samuel Goldwyn, founder and president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has aimed ever since he launched the producing and distributing organization which has become a twenty million dollar corporation, is being realized as never before, according to reports received from Goldwyn exchanges where the first of the Goldwyn fall series productions have been screened for exhibitors.

Under its new policy of "Don't Book Goldwyn Pictures Until You Have Seen Them," the company has made a point of producing photoplays of such a caliber that exhibitors would see the wisdom of extending their bookings beyond the number of days they had been accustomed to giving a feature attraction. Goldwyn has worked on the theory that with the present condition of the industry, the increase in the number of large theatres, the extensive exploitation utilizing all mediums of reaching and increasing the army of photoplay fans, pictures of quality would demand more than the one or two days' bookings which have been prevalent in all but a comparatively few houses.

The managers of the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges were instructed to report early results in the booking of the fall series, special note being made of exhibitors who had changed their policy to allow for longer runs. Reports from Boston, St. Louis, San Francisco, Dallas and other points based on contracts signed for the first of the new year productions, Rex Beach's "The Girl From Outside," Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Women," Will Rogers in "Almost a Husband," Pauline Frederick in "Bonds of Love" and Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," show that Goldwyn's faith in its product is justified.

Many small town exhibitors, catering to a limited clientele, still hesitate to experiment in full week showings, however firmly they may be convinced of the merits of a picture, but they are shifting from one or two days to three or four days and if the longer runs prove profitable, these exhibitors have expressed a willingness to test the week run when a production that seems especially suited to their patrons comes along.

Exhibitors Sought to Name a Play

Metro President Will Buy Any Play or Novel Wished

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., announces that in its determination to co-operate with the exhibitor by producing "fewer, bigger and better" pictures, Metro will buy any successful stage play or notable novel that a sufficient number of Metro and other exhibitors may name, regardless of the market price.

"If there should be, among the prosperous showmen who exhibit Metro pictures now, who plan to show them in future a favorite drama or book to which the screen rights are available," says Mr. Rowland, "Metro will purchase that play or that novel and make it into a motion picture special. All producers are aware that the prices of plays and books have been skyrocketed to unbelievable heights; but Metro is game enough to pay the price for a vehicle that the judgment of experienced exhibitors decides is worthy of screen representation."

Metro's "fewer and better" pictures policy for 1919-20 contemplates the production, as de luxe specials, of thirty-six stage successes and novels by celebrated authors. A majority of these vehicles have already been acquired. They will be produced by Screen Classics, Inc., stars, Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and May Allison in stellar roles. A few of the thirty-six stories remain to be selected.

"We want plays of the high standard of Maude Fulton's 'The Brat'," states the Metro president. "Or of the quality of 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' by the Hattons, just completed by Bert Lytell; 'Fair and Warmer,' the Avery Hopwood farce that is May Allison's newest vehicle or 'Please Get Married,' by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, which Viola Dana has finished at our studios in southern California."

Mr. Rowland declared that exhibitors will be asked to suggest to Metro any pre-eminent stage successes or famous novels that they know of, which have not as yet been done on the screen. The plan is, in a way, a contest. Metro will welcome the suggestions not only of exhibitors who have regularly been showing Metro and Screen Classic pictures, but theatre owners and managers who have been playing the productions of other big producing companies.

In his purchase, during his recent trip abroad, of the five Drury Lane spectacle dramas, "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Best of Luck," "The Hope," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriage at Mayfair," Mr. Rowland intimated that he was influenced largely by the opinions of a number of exhibitors who had faith in the drawing power of tremendous melodramas constructed by experts.

Hats Off to Neilan's Efficiency Idea

Having contracted for a series of special productions for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and arranged for the building of a $750,000 studio Marshall Neilan may now rightly be styled an independent producer and a regular business man. The following move in Mr. Neilan's idea of efficiency and he stoutly maintains it to be such. Before his departure for New York the producer sent this letter to each of his employees:

"I am about to leave for New York and during my absence I want you and other members of my loyal organization to have a vacation on me. It is probably that I will not resume work for six weeks. Please leave your address with Mr. Wellington Wales, my business manager, who will notify you when I wish you to report again. In the meantime your weekly checks will be mailed to you.

Japanese Estate Set to Be Permanent

A miniature Japanese estate will be constructed for the Screen Classics, Inc., production of the Japanese stage fantasy, "The Willow Tree" at Metro's studios in Hollywood. After work on the picturization of the play has been completed the garden of the estate will become a permanent studio feature for the pleasure and recreation of the company's employes.

The plans as outlined include the laying out of a lake, a hill covered with lawns and ornamental pathways, a temple, a shoji, a Japanese dwelling house, snow lanterns and the willow tree itself.

Predictions Verified by "World Aflame"

Predictions made as to "The World Aflame" just before its release by Pathe are rapidly being verified. Telegrams from exhibitors in all sections of the United States bear convincing testimony to the drawing powers of this new Frank Keenan feature. Reports by Pathe branch managers show that New England likes the picture as well as does the South, and that the Pacific Coast finds the appeal quite as strong as does the Atlantic seaboard and the great middle West.

Eugene Walter Goes to Coast

Playwright Now Associated with the Goldwyn Forces to Observe Operation

EUGENE WALTER, whose drama, "The Challenge," is now running at the Selwyn theatre in New York, and who is known widely as the author of "The Easiest Way," "Paid in Full," "The Wolf," "Fine Feathers" and "The Knife," has left New York to associate himself for an indefinite period with the Goldwyn forces at Culver City, Cal.

Mr. Walter goes to the Goldwyn Studios with no definite mission nor with any special plan to be executed. His arrangement with the Goldwyn Company will give him free range to observe the operation of the Goldwyn Studios, and anything more than that if he sees fit. He will be associated for the time being with the editorial forces at the studios. His present purpose will be that of study and co-operation rather than that of any active studio undertaking.

Mr. Walter goes to Goldyn equipped with a good deal of previous practical motion picture experience. He denies that he has any theories on motion pictures, but confesses that his experience has been extensive enough to make him realize that the present form of the feature picture is not a permanent one. He says:

"Sometimes I think that the idea of business organization, which motion picture producers picked up after a good deal of sad experience in its absence, has been allowed to usurp the place of artistic discretion. I find now that studios are being run with the same efficiency as executive offices. This is excellent and advantageous up to a certain point, but the point at which it ceases to be a good thing is the critical point in all motion picture productions. It is the point where group action upon an artistic object can never take the place of individual creative effort."

Arrow Has Sunbeam Comics

Deal Closed Whereby It Will Handle Both Foreign and Local Distribution

FROM Jacksonville, Florida, comes the news that the Florida Film Corporation has completed negotiations with the Arrow Film Corporation whereby the latter will have the entire distribution—foreign and domestic—of the Sunbeam Comedies.

After a two-weeks' visit to New York, H. J. Kluthe, President of the Florida Film Corp., returned to his Southern studio more than pleased with the results of his trip.

Already the Sunbeam product has met with a big reception and is keeping up the standard promised in the beginning of placing a good, snappy, clean and up-to-the-minute comedy.

Mr. Kluthe took with him the latest film, "Hot Sands and Cold Feet," a clever two-reeler, directed by Glen Lambert and its showing has effectually placed his company in the first flight of comedy productions.

With the most modern and best equipped studio in the South, capable of accommodating four working companies simultaneously, with an able cast of players and a solid financial foundation, big things are expected from this centre.

Associated with Mr. Kluthe in the management are Messrs. Fay and Harland Smith, both well-known business men. Mr. Virgil Mackenzie handles the managerial reins and has planned a schedule guaranteed to startle the comedy market.

The direction of the company's two two-reelers each month is entrusted to well-known and capable men in the persons of Glen Lambert and Bert Tracy.

Big Moments in Coming Path

Jesse Hampton Declares "A Woman of Pleasure" Abounds with Vital Interest

ADVANCE information concerning "A Woman of Pleasure," the first Blanche Sweet special to be released by Pathe, shows it to be a rapid actioned melodrama, which combines the appeal of sensational climaxes, with a human story that carries home a vital life thought.

"A Woman of Pleasure" is an adaptation by George Elwood Jenks, from James Willard's stage play which ran for three years with such remarkable success at the Adelphi theatre, London, in the early nineties. Besides having been translated, in all languages, including the Scandinavian, it has also been produced in all parts of the world as a spoken drama.

"In the presentation on the screen," says Jesse D. Hampton, whose company is producing the Blanche Sweet specials, "the thrills and surprises build up to dramatic peaks of unflagging suspense. The stirring Zulu uprising commands attention because of the masterful manner in which it carries on up to a bigger moment of a hair-breadth escape in a war balloon, which climax, in turn, leads up to the genuine sensation of the drama—a thrillingly realistic rescue from a burning ship in midocean.

"The spectacular effects are treated only as Wallace Worsley himself can handle them. The maudlin and cheap melodrama has not been allowed to creep in and lessen the value of these dramatic moments in the play, or diminish the value of the completed picture to theatres where top-notch productions attract quality patrons.

"The love story, intertwined with the climaxes, offers a series of some out-of-the-ordinary twists, deftly carrying vitally human thoughts that hammer home powerful messages."

Fritzi Brunette is starred in Universal's "The Woman Under Cover"

Short Subject Demand Still Increasing

"In the face of all the furor and discussion regarding fewer and better pictures, the engagement of renowned authors and similar prophesies and promises in which producers generally are indulging, the most striking feature of the motion picture business, is the increasing demand for short subjects of quality and interest superior to those of preceding years."

This is the observation made by S. L. Barnhard, president of the Capital Film Company, and prior to his return to the offices of that organization, in Chicago, from an extended visit to the Company's studio in Hollywood, the film executive, while in the West, arranged for the addition of two producting units to the studio, one of which will feature Helen Gibson, "the railroad girl" in a sereis of twenty-four two-reel dramas of railroad life, while the other will make two-reel comedies combining both the slap-stick liveliness and the more polished interest of less farcical humor.

"Bearcat" Picture Is a World Success

The competition between the different branches of World Pictures for the honor of the greatest number of pre-release showing of "When Bear Cat Went Dry," the big super feature picturization of Charles Neville Buck's story of mountain life in Eastern Kentucky is reaching such a point that all estimates made as to the gross business this picture would do has been shattered. It now looks to the officials of the World Company that "When Bear Cat Went Dry" will be the biggest money getter ever released by this company.

Camera Work Finished on "The Climbers"

Corinne Griffith and her company have returned from Bayshore, Long Island, where the outdoor scenes for "The Climbers," Vitagraph's screen version of the famous drama by the late Clyde Fitch were taken. The picture is now completed, so far as the camera work is concerned and Miss Griffith will take a few weeks rest before beginning on her next feature, which probably will be "The Tower of Jewels," written especially for her by Lucian Hubbard.

Pathe News Scores a Remarkable Record

All past performances of the Pathe News, which has scored many "beats" on big news subjects were made to look like minor feats in comparison with the accomplishments in connection with the reception accorded General John J. Pershing in New York, beginning Monday morning, Sept. 8th and ending with the great parade of the First Division on Wednesday, Sept. 10th.

At a fitting finale to the three days efforts on the part of the entire Pathe News staff, from photographers to the laboratory and exchange men, a copy of the print showing the First Division parade and the reception on two continents to General Pershing, was taken to Washington by aeroplane and exhibited before the War College as the official record, on Thursday evening, Sept. 11th.

Thirty prints of the Pershing parade were shown in leading New York theatres hardly more than two hours after the last foot-sore trooper of the gallant regulars had passed under Washington Arch.

Title Given Besssie Love's New Film

Vitagraph has definitely decided on "A Fighting Colleen" as the title of the new Bessie Love feature which has just been completed at its West Coast studio at Hollywood. The play was made under the working title of "Love at First Fight," which aptly described an early scene, but was apt to be misquoted as "Love at First Sight."

"A Fighting Colleen" will be Miss Love's next release, her last having been "Over the Garden Wall," which was given to the public several weeks ago.

Realart Publicists

The publicity department of Realart Pictures Corporation welcomes another member to the staff in the person of Ben Davis, who joined the company this week.

C. Alfred Karpen, who has been associated with photoplay publicity and advertising since the days when multiple reel features were first introduced, has also joined the publicity staff of Realart.

Another Big Universal to Come

Said to Be Greatest Yet Put Out by Company

FOLLOWING close the dramatic success, "The Right to Happiness," is another Universal super-production, which has been produced and which will soon be released and of which little has been said. Owing to the fact that this new production is expected to startle the film world by its uniqueness and magnitude it was decided not to announce the production until every detail connected with its selling and exploitation had been completed.

It has been given a private showing to a number of critics, and has been proclaimed one of the dramatic triumphs of the year.

It was produced under the title of "The Pinnacle," but a new and more appropriate title has been selected, it being "Blind Husbands." And thereby hangs a tale.

"The Pinnacle" was a good title, but exhibitors thought it was too "deep." R. H. Cochrane offered a prize of $100 to the Universal employee who would suggest a better title. One day's notice was given, and within that time four hundred and twenty-two titles were suggested. The winning title belonged to Edward Moffet, assistant advertising manager of Universal.

Eight titles were selected from the 422 submitted. They were: "The Glory of Love," "Everyman's Wife," "Temptation," "Neglected Wife," "Thy Neighbor's Wife," "The Dead Line," "Blind Husbands," and "While Good Men Sleep." This list of eight titles was submitted to all the exhibitors in New York City, and a vote taken resulted in the selection of "Blind Husbands."

"Blind Husbands" is a story written by Eric von Stroheim, famed for his exceptional dramatic impersonation of a Hun officer in "The Heart of Humanity."

It is a most novel fact, perhaps, never before accomplished, that the author of the story takes the leading role in the production and also directed it.

The production was more than three months in the making, another month was spent in editing it, and another fortnight in an ultimate polishing, which gives it a distinguished place in artistic productions. The minimum estimate of the cost of the production is $125,000. Mob scenes employing hundred of extras are used, the costumes were all especially made, the architecture is purely original in this country, all under the personal supervision of von Stroheim.

The dramatis pensonae of the production features an American surgeon and his wife, Sam DeGrasse and Francelia Billington, respectively.

Katterjohn Steps Out for Himself

Will Release Pictures Through the Equity Corporation

MONTE M. KATTERJOHN, for years known as a most successful scenario creator, this week announces his allied connections for the filming and distribution of stories created by himself.

The productions will be made at the new Harry Garson Studio in Edendale, Cal., and will be known as Katterjohn plays.

Business and production organizations have been completed, and the screen visualization of the young author's first play will be started within the next two weeks.

Henry G. Mehl, formerly with Butler Brothers, of Chicago, has been selected as production manager, and William E. Keefe, who for years was associated with D. W. Griffith acting as personal representative, will assist Katterjohn in the same capacity.

Four productions will be made within the year, to be presented by Harry Garson, and distributed by the recently formed Equity Pictures Corporation, which likewise promotes the Clara Kimball Young productions.

The author of the play who also does the work of supervising the production from its inception as an intangible imaginative spark until the finished product is thrown upon the screen creates a new departure in the annals of filmdom.

Heretofore when a scenario creator arranged a manuscript and relinquished his efforts to the production manager or director, his work was over, except that he was ordered to grind out another, and then another. The writer, as a rule, had little or nothing to say in the further shaping of the play. If a director decided to eliminate or change any portions of the dramatic construction, he usually did so without consulting any one.

While Katterjohn will engage the most skilled directors in filmland to stage his plays, yet at the same time he will personally supervise their entire production, being in constant attendance and consultation with the director.

Another revolutionary step taken by Katterjohn will be the reversal of the present custom in purchasing published stories and stage plays by well-known authors.

Arrangements are now being completed by which several novel and stage play authors of popular note will fictionize and arrange in spoken plays the original screen stories created by Katterjohn. These books will be published simultaneously or a short time following the exhibition of the films. The works of fiction will be published by Katterjohn and circulated in the same manner employed by the foremost American publishing houses.

Cuckoos Through United Theatres

Dintenfass' Product Sought by Many Buyers

SIMULTANEOUS announcement comes from J. A. Berst and from Mark M. Dintenfass of the signing this week of contracts whereby the series of two-reel monthly releases of Cuckoo Comedies produced by Mr. Dintenfass at his Jacksonville studios have been acquired by United Picture Theatres, Inc. In announcing United as the successful competitor for the Cuckoo Comedies Mr. Dintenfass states that there has been a keen competition for the product among a number of the leading distributing organizations. By the terms of the agreement delivery of the first three of the series already completed is to be made immediately to United and subsequent deliveries are to follow at the rate of one per month.

"In finally deciding upon the releasing organization for the Cuckoo Comedies," says Mr. Dintenfass, "I was largely influenced by the fact that United's established chain of more than three thousand theatres, with their exhibitor-managers ready and anxious to secure these comedy two-reelers, provided a desirable and completely efficient immediate outlet for the product. A remarkable testimony to the efficacy of trade paper advertising of the Cuckoo Comedies is furnished by the really astonishing volume of telegrams and letters of inquiry and requests for booking that followed the announcement of the forthcoming issues, these inquiries being from state right applicants in large numbers and from exhibitors generally throughout the country. Tempting offers for the Cuckoos were also made by some half dozen leading companies desirous of securing the releases for their exchanges.

"Having long enjoyed a close acquaintance and friendship with exhibitors in many sections of the company I have been anxious to secure the most direct distribution possible to exhibitors, and with United constituting essentially an exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled organization, I am very happy to have consummated the contract with Mr. Berst which places the Cuckoo Comedies in the capable hands of that company.

"Delivery of the first three of the series already completed has been made to United.

Mayer Forces Report Fine Progress

Mildred Harris Chaplin has so far recovered her health that she was the central figure in the christening of her beautiful studio bungalow, which is being built in conjunction with the big studio which Louis D. Mayer is building to house the companies making the Anita Stewart, the Mildred Harris Chaplin and special Mayer Productions.

After the christening there was a business meeting, attended by Mrs. Chaplin, Director Joseph Hennaberry, Assistant Director Webb, Bennie Zeidman, Production Manager William Sistrom, Scenario Editor Waldemar Young and Photographer Dal Clawson. Mr. Zeidman announced at the meeting that he had been made vice-president of the new Mayer Productions, Inc.

Mr. Sistrom, who is representing Mr. Mayer in the building of the new studio, reported sufficient progress to predict that the studio would be ready for shooting the first Harris-Chaplin picture the latter part of October. This first picture will be "The Inferior Sex" by Frank Stayton, which was a dramatic success in England as well as in this country.

Famous Players-Lasky Handle Truex Comedies

After weeks of speculation as to who was to distribute the pictures, it was announced last week that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has signed a long-term contract with Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the Ayveebee Corporation, to release a series of high-class two-reel comedies starring Ernest Truex and based on popular magazine stories by famous authors.

The first comedy will be released early in November, and the others will follow monthly, it is announced.

Mr. Truex already has completed two of his pictures and is now at work on the third, under the direction of John Joseph Harvey.

Looking for Stories

Having completed the second of his own company productions for Pathe distribution, J. Stuart Blackton is now considering manuscripts arranged for his perusal by his scenario editor, Stanley Olmsted, preparatory to selecting his next story.

Guarantee of Perfect Film

Select Promises Great Things Through Medium of Process Invented by Teitel

PERFECT projection, full length subjects and absolute freedom from flickering, blemishes, and oil will distinguish all film to be distributed in the future by Select Pictures Corporation, following the announcement this week by General Manager Sam E. Morris of the establishment of a new Reclaiming and Film Processing Department under the direction of Albert Teitel.

Through the new process which Mr. Teitel has invented and perfected it is possible to screen features two or more years old with the same freedom from oil marks and other blemishes as at a first-run showing. Films of first-run condition will be possible until the subject has been retired, no matter how many times that particular piece of film has been screened or how many years it has been in use.

The new process which has been acquired for the exclusive use of Select Pictures and Selznick Pictures is known as the Albert Teitel Wonder Process. He employs a newly-invented scientific machine which is employed in conjunction with a chemical process. Both the machine and the chemical process are the result of several years of experimental work.

By this process it is said to be possible to take an old film that is oil marked, scratched and "rain" streaked and deliver it to the next exhibitor in as perfect condition as when it left the laboratory.

Before his association with Select Mr. Teitel was connected with the Ideal Film Laboratories at Hudson Heights, N. J., which he organized, built and operated until a year ago. Since then he has been on the technical staff of the Interocean Film Company. He was also at one time general manager of the film reclaiming department of the General Film Company, and in 1914 he was president of the Multicolor Film Improving Company.

Pathe Has Henley's New Film

Picturization of "The Gay Old Dog" Is to Be Put on Market as a Special

HOBART HENLEY'S six-reel picturization of Edna Ferber's short story, "The Gay Old Dog," chosen by leading literary men as one of the best short stories of the year, is to be marketed through the Pathe exchanges as a Pathe Special. It was picturized by Mrs. Sidney Drew. Announcement of the transaction was made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, following a series of negotiations recently held between himself and Mr. Henley.

"Two far-reaching purposes—one representing the interests of the exhibitors, and the other Mr. Henley's—were responsible for this company's acquiring 'The Gay Old Dog,'" said Mr. Brunet discussing the transaction.

"The first purpose was based on the desire of the Pathe Company to follow out the basic policy of Better Features—Better Service, and to give the exhibitors the best that the market affords in features that have genuine box-office value.

"The second purpose was founded in Mr. Henley's desire to give the production the widest possible distribution, and to have it marketed through an organization which was not only built to take care of features that have extraordinary pulling power, but was always ready to render the highest calibre of service in exploitation.

"Mr. Henley was approached by many of the largest and most representative distributing companies, to either buy or handle 'The Gay Old Dog,' with offers which were tempting to him. After full consideration of the entire field, Mr. Henley decided that Pathe by virtue of its policies and practices, operating as it does on a plan which admits of the exhibitor booking his pictures either open booking or contract, in fact, the way it suits the particular needs of his theatre, embodies the progressive ideas which would make for the most successful handling of 'The Gay Old Dog.'"

Rolfe Star Publicity Target

Grace Darling, It Is Estimated, Has Received Space Worth Over a Million

IF all the publicity she has received were to be measured in terms of money, Grace Darling, who is playing the ingenue role in "The Amazing Lovers," an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Shining Band," and the first of a series of Chambers stories to be picturized by B. A. Rolfe for presentation through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., could rightly be called the million dollar publicity girl. The space accorded her, reckoned at space rates, would run well into the seven figures.

And all this publicity was gained in a period of a few years—since 1915 to be exact. In that year Miss Darling made a transcontinental trip in the interest of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, appearing before the camera for scenes to be used in the weekly, and writing her impressions of the journey for publication in a number of widely circulated big city dailies.

For weeks before the start Miss Darling's trip was widely heralded in pages upon pages of newspaper space. On January 20 she left New York with the World's Fair in San Francisco as her destination, carrying a message of greeting to Governor Hiram Johnson, of California, from Governor Charles Whitman, of New York.

William Russell Now on "Eastward Ho!"

His initial Fox photoplay "Sacred Silence" having been completed, William Russell has begun work on his second feature to be released on the Fox program. It is "Eastward Ho!" adapted from William MacLeod Raine's story of the same name. The picture will introduce to the followers of the Fox program a new director, Emmett J. Flynn, who will be assisted by John J. Foley. George Lane is the cameraman.

A strong cast has been secured to support Mr. Russell. The story, a pulsing, red-blooded tale, lends itself admirably to visualization. Roy Somerville wrote the scenario which follows the novel faithfully.

The demand for the photoplays starring this star is so great that William Fox asked Mr. Russell to forego the usual rest between features, so that this demand might be satisfied.

Comedy Series with Al St. John as Star

A new series of two-reel comedies, featuring Al St. John and declared to be of a nature that will cause a sensation in the comedy field this season will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, beginning probably in November. Contracts just signed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with Jack Warner, General Manager of the Company producing the subjects at Glendale, California, call for eight two-reel comedies for release this year, and the price paid for them is declared to place Al St. John among the highest paid comedians of the screen.

Third of the Eminent Authors Series

Basil King's novel, "The Street Called Straight," will be the third of Eminent Authors-Goldwyn productions, following Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury" and Gertrude Atherton's "Perch of the Devil." Mr. King is at present in conference at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City where Wallace Worsely will direct the production. Milton Sells and Naomi Childers will have the principal roles.

Universal Expedition Returns Home

The first of Universal's five foreign producing companies is scheduled to return home to America on September 23. This was made known through a cablegram received from London on Friday, September 12. According to the cable the Eddie Polo company which is making the international serial, "The Thirteenth Hour," will sail on "The Megantic" on September 15, and will arrive at Montreal, Canada, on the twenty-third.

Several days will be spent in Montreal taking some of the scenes in the serial, and from there they will come to New York City where a number of interior scenes will be made at the Fort Lee studios in New Jersey.

The Polo company left New York, Saturday, June 21, and immediately after arriving in England began work on the serial. The company while abroad took scenes in England, Scotland, Ireland and France.

The company is being directed by J. P. McGowan, and Mr. Polo's leading feminine support is Peggy O'Dare. The entire company consisted of nine persons.

Ruth Budd Makes Bid for Screen Fame

A newcomer to the screen who bids fair to achieve fame over night is Ruth Budd the featured player in "A Scream in the Night," which Select Pictures Corporation will release in October. The theme of this picture is an insane scientist's attempt to prove the Darwin theory of the origin of man.

Miss Budd plays the part of Darwa, a creature brought up in the jungle wilds, where she knows no other human than Lotec, her Indian guardian, to await the great experiment by which a scientist hopes to prove the Darwinian theory.

Miss Budd is a recruit from vaudeville.

Universal Head Back

Krellberg Boosts His Serial

Producer of "Fatal Fortune" Believes He Has One of the Best Yet Produced

SHERMAN S. KRELLBERG is confident that in "The Fatal Fortune" he has a serial that will prove to be of first water calibre. He said last week:

"In presenting Helen Holmes to the public in her latest serial "The Fatal Fortune," I believe I can say without fear of contradiction that the S. L. K. Serial Corporation has made the greatest serial ever produced from every point of view. In the first place, we have the greatest serial star now on the screen. Miss Holmes has built up a reputation through her various serials that proclaim her the undenied queen of the serial screen.

"In addition the direction has been under the master hand of Donald Mac Kenzie, who is beyond question of doubt the peer of all serial directors.

"Assisting Miss Holmes is an all-star serial cast, the names of each of whom are known throughout the world; Lieutenant Jack Levering, Frank Wunderlee, Leslie King, William Black, Floyd Buckley, Sidney D'Albrook, Lillian Worth and Helen Lindroth.

"Then comes the story. It is plausible, replete with romance, adventure stunts, unbroken excitement and suspended interest. I claim that no serial story has ever been screened that ever equalled it, in all the important and money-getting points that it contains. In addition to the story, no expense has been spared in the settings. It cost ten thousand dollars to install the sets for the first episode alone.

"No expense has been spared in an effort to make this the greatest picture of Miss Holmes's already unparalleled career. I have spared neither time nor money in the effort to afford the exhibitor every possible help to put this serial over to big success. Everything from a twenty-four sheet campaign down has been prepared and is at the disposal of the exhibitor. It is my hope that this serial will not only touch but go beyond the biggest money-getting seial ever produced."

Big Drive on "Topics of Day"

Literary Digest and Pathe Combine on Campaign for Week of September 20

ANOTHER big drive on behalf of "Topics of the Day," selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest, and distributed by Timely Films, Inc., through Pathe, will be launched during the week of September 20th. Every publicity channel will be utilized during "The Topics of the Day Week" to bring to the attention of the public the highly entertaining and educational value of this short subject, which, under Pathe's great distribution sysem, has grown tremendously in popularity in the last five months.

The Literary Digest is offering the fullest co-operation in the publicizing of "The Topics of the Day" and during the week of Sept. 20th, will devote its front cover to extolling the merits of the short feature. In the same issue there will appear a full page story relating to the history of "Topics of the Day."

In more than 500 of the principal papers throughout the United States, there will appear Literary Digest advertisements during the week of Sept. 20th, in which "Topics of the Day" will receive a considerable display. Special efforts will be directed towards having a story on "Topics of the Day" appear in every newspaper carrying the Literary Digest advertisement.

Seventeen thousand exhibitors in the United States will receive a letter calling attention to the front page cover of the Digest and to the other publicity during the week.

If any organization attempted to purchase the front cover of the Digest, it would cost about $25,000, according to its advertising manager, for its circulation is more than 1,200,000. The popular weekly is read by nearly 5,000,000 persons. A new one sheet on the subject has been planned by the Timely Films, Inc., and will be distributed by Pathe during the week of the drive.

Heads Realart Office in St. Louis

Announcement was made this week by Arthur S. Kane, President of Realart Pictures Corporation, of the appointment of Joseph Desberger as manager of the St. Louis Realart branch. Mr. Desberger succeeds J. C. Ragland, who has just been promoted to the position of General Sales Manager.

Capt. Morisson, French Actor, Foch's Double

Captain Joseph Morisson, for twenty-five years in the French army, and during the war an instructor in military tactics at Camp Upton, widely known as Marshall Foch's double, will be seen in an important supporting role in "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," the latest picture he has appeared in.

During the war Captain Morisson appeared with Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand and other leading stars in various Liberty Loan trailers. He has been in this country three years, and is well known for his characterizations on the screen.

To those who have personally seen Marshal Foch, the great Allied leader, the close resemblance of Captain Morisson will come as somewhat of a shock, as he is indeed the French leader's "double."

Captain Morisson resides at 542 West 124th street, New York. After about a year more in pictures on this side of the water he expects to return to cinema activities in his native land.

"Anne" Tales Popular

Motion picture producers have developed such a keen desire to acquire the picture rights to popular plays and books, that publishers are receiving top-notch figures for them. It is a record achievement, therefore, that is claimed by Realart Pictures Corporation in acquiring the motion picture rights to the four "Anne" books by L. M. Montgomery. These popular novels, which have exhausted editions running over 700,000 copies, according to the publisher the Page Company of Boston, comprise "Anne of Green Gables," "Anne of Avonlea," "Anne of the Island" and "Chronicles of Avonlea."

Goldwyn Film Library Is Stocked

Goldwyn's Stock Library of film, containing over five hundred reels, making a total of approximately fifty thousand feet of pictures, dealing with all sorts of incidents that a director may wish to utilize in his productions, has just been completed at the Goldwyn laboratory in Culver City. The library is said to be by far the largest and most complete of any ever compiled.

Magazine Ad Campaign Will Aid Picture

A national advertising campaign of exceptional magnitude, geared to reach twenty-five million persons weekly over a period of months, and entirely unrelated to screen exploitation, unwittingly is to become a very important matter to exhibitors throughout the country.

The fact of its application to the field of literature, with neither thought or semblance of motion picture promotion in its text makes its value to exhibitors greater than would be the case were it to be avowedly a national promotion for a special feature attraction.

The campaign is to be launched this month by William Randolph Hearst, to advertise, in forty-five metropolitan newspapers—one in every city in the country—the forthcoming publication in Good Housekeeping and Cosmopolitan, his two most successful magazines, a news series of animal and outdoor stories by James Oliver Curwood.

These stories are to be published under the general title, "Back to God's Country."

On September 29, First National Exhibitors' Circuit will release a special feature attraction, written by James Oliver Curwood, and produced by the Curwood-Carver Productions, under the title of "Back To God's Country."

Without conflict of any nature, the production will have the benefit in every state, of the big newspaper campaign about to be launched by the Hearst interest in behalf of the new series of Curwood stories.

First National Films Printed by Rothacker

First National Attractions for 1919 and 1920 are heralded by a booklet, attractively announcing the pictures, with photos of the stars. Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge, Anita Stewart, Constance Talmadge, Marshall Neilan, Jack Pickford and the Lehrman comedies are all represented in the list—the prints of every picture being made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., an unusual tribute to that organization, appreciation for which is expressed by W. R. Rothacker.

Admission Increases General

Herbert Lubin of S-L Back from a Long Trip Finds Big Business General

HERBERT LUBIN, member of the firm of S-L Pictures, returned to his New York offices this week, following an extended trip throughout the United States in the interests of the organization's various film activities. Lubin's itinery, which carried him through the principal states of the country, brought him finally to California, where he spent four weeks. Part of this time was devoted by the S-L exccutive to a study of the various studios and the methods employed therein by the leading producers of the West Coast. During his stay in California, Lubin consumated several deals of importance in conjunction with the S-L organization. The details of these arrangements, together with a statement of the plans of the company will be forthcoming shortly.

The S-L executive stated in the various cities which he visited the first production of his company "Virtuous Men" was meeting with great public favor. The picture is being accorded long runs in the most prominent theatres of the country and in several instances, according to Lubin, exhibitors have arranged for repeated engagements.

Conditions among the motion picture theatres are excellent, and there is an unusual amount of new theatres being erected not only in the principal centres, but in many of the smaller towns visited by Lubin. Admission prices generally have been increased and in the greater number of cases which came under the general observation of Lubin, the increase has been cheerfully met by the public, due to the superior quality of films which the producers are offering during the present time. The flood of popular Broadway play successes and picturization from famous books which are now finding their way to the screen is meeting exactly the demand of the motion picture public for better entertainment.

Beach Gets Ideas in the West

Author Is Back from Coast; Gives Interesting Sidelight on Authors' Aid

Brimful of energy and ideas, Rex Beach is back from the coast. "Half the trouble with motion pictures is that they don't give enough time to working out the continuities," he is convinced. His own experience bears him out, and what he has to tell about the Eminent Authors in the studio is an eye opener.

The whole truth can now be told for the first time, and that is that some of the Eminent Authors were not at all taken with the idea of author-director cooperation. They didn't believe the Goldwyn organization meant what they said about the author going into the studio. Only Rex Beach knew, and after considerable hesitation they took his word for it.

Rex Beach reports that Rupert Hughes was a regular demon for work at Culver City the past weeks.

Besides conferring on the continuities for Rupert Hughes and Gertrude Atherton, Rex Beach worked on a third continuity and that was "The Silver Horde." This was rewritten four times. He went West with the third edition of the scenario, and the staff said this is too short. He and Frank Lloyd secured a stenographer and dictated version number four. Mind you, this was done by an experienced writer for motion pictures. No wonder he concludes that not enough time is given to most continuities.

Frank Lloyd, who will direct "The Silver Horde," has just gone north to Lummi Island, near Bellingham, Washington, with the company which will take the pictures for the next Rex Beach picture. Mr. Beach had a good deal to do in selecting the cast with Mrs. Beach. It is said she chose Betty Blythe for the society girl of "The Silver Horde." At any rate the author selected Curtis Cooksey and Robert McKim.

Fischer Has Another Series

In Addition to Chambers' Stories Will Film Stories by Chas. Logue

IN addition to the series of Robert W. Chambers' stories, A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., will picturize a number of original 'scripts written by Charles A. Logue, well-known scenario writer and an officer of the Fischer Corporation, according to an announcement made this week by B. A. Rolfe, who is putting on and presenting the firm's output. The first of the Logue writings has been completed and delivered, and the business of converting it into film form will begin shortly.

With Mr. Logue supplying material, the plans for the picturization of the Robert W. Chambers' works have been altered, so that instead of uninterruptedly putting on the Chambers' stories until the series is exhausted, it has been decided to alternate the Logue stories with the Chambers, the first production to be known as Number One of the Chambers Series, the second Number One of the Logue Series, the third Number Two of the Chambers Series, and so on.

By adding the Logue stories to those purchased from Robert W. Chambers, the Fischer organization now finds itself in the happy position of being provided with sufficient material to meet its production demands for some time to come besides having its vehicles come from sources that auger well for the quality of the output.

Annual Brentwood Report Pleases

Gratifying results were shown in the report to the stockholders of the Brentwood Film Corporation made by its president, L. C. Haynes, at the first annual meeting of stockholders held the first week in September.

The report reviewed the showing of its first three photoplays made, each of which had been released through Robertson-Cole Company, and the Exhibitors' Mutual of New York with high degree of public interest and consequent profits. The fourth production, according to the report, now is being completed under director King W. Vidor.

President Haynes reported the outright purchase of the studio at 4817 Fountain avenue, Hollywood, after having started with rented studio space with offices and laboratory facilities.

A board of directors for the coming year was elected as follows: L. C. Haynes, R. G. Beebe, H. M. Brandel W. H. Rimmer and O. C. Kingsley. The following officers also were elected: I. C. Haynes, President; R. G. Beebe, Vice-President; Willard Barrows, Treasurer; S. P. Trood, Secretary; H. M. Brandel, Assistant Treasurer and H. S. Haynes Assistant Secretary.

De Milles Are Active

Cecil B. De Mille has begun work on "Why Change Your Wife," a special Paramount-Artcraft production, which will be a companion piece to "Don't Change Your Husband," which he made several months ago and which had a phenomenal run throughout the country.

William C. DeMille is progressing splendidly at the Lasky studio with his Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Tree of Knowledge," starring Robert Warwick, with Wanda Hawley as the leading woman and Kathlyn Williams playing a heavy role.

Boy Comedian Seen in "Unpardonable Sin"

Wesley Barry, the freckled faced youngster, who made such a big impression on exhibitors and fans in "Daddy Long Legs," and "The Unpardonable Sin," will be seen again in the laugh producing role of Blanche Sweet's production "A Woman of Pleasure."

The studio caption man has saved us the trouble of giving these Realarters' names. The star is touching up her make-up for a scene in "Sinners"

Interiors of Rolfe Picture Completed

The last of the interior scenes in B. A. Rolfe's production of "The Amazing Lovers" were photographed this week and Mr. Rolfe, who with Chester De Vonde as co-director is personally taking a hand in the staging, now has the subject in the final processes towards completion. Only a few exterior scenes remain to be photographed before the negative is sent to the cutting room.

"The Amazing Lovers" is the first production made by B. A. Rolfe for presentation through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. It is a picturization of Charles A. Logue's adaptation of the Robert W. Chambers story, "The Shining Band," and the first of a series of stories by that author to be transformed into screen entertainment by the Rolfe-Fischer Logue combination.

The subject is being produced to be offered as a special attraction.

Rolfe as a Director in a New Role

B. A. Rolfe, besides presenting "The Amazing Lovers" and being a member of the firm of A. H. Fisher Features, Inc., which is producing it, is personally taking a hand in the staging, working with Chester DeVonde, his co-director.

During his five years as a motion picture producer, Mr. Rolfe has put on the market over a hundred feature pictures, a number of comedies and a serial, but "The Amazing Lovers" marks his initial effort as a director.

Nevertheless, directing is not a new business with him.

Beck Leases Former Kalem Plant

Arthur F. Beck, president of Artco Productions, Inc., starring Leah Baird; president and treasurer of Beck Productions, Inc., featuring Stuart Holmes and Miss Frankie Mann, as well as treasurer of the Deitrich-Beck organization, which has completed Louis Joseph Vance's "The Bandbox," starring Doris Kenyon for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, has taken a long term lease of the Creation studios, formerly the Kalem plant, at Cliffside, N. J., and began active operations there with his three producing companies this week.

Opening a Hayakawa Series

"The Dragon Painter," a Dramatic Japanese Story, Is the First Announced

"THE DRAGON PAINTER," a picturization of Mary McNeil Fenollosa's Japanese tragedy, will be the first of the new series of Sessue Hayakawa's Robertson-Cole Superior Pictures, to be released through Exhibitors' Mutual. It is a dramatic story of a Japanese artist, a half-mad genius, which role is played by Hayakawa, who searches for his "Dragon Princess," Tsuru Aoki. A simple love theme, unusual but entirely human, pervades the story. There are only four characters in it, Tatsu, the Dragon Painter; Undo Uchida, a surveyor; Kanp Indara, the last of a line of famous Dragon painters, and Ume Ko, his daughter.

The scenes for "The Dragon Painter" were shot in the Yosemite Valley, which is known as God's garden spot. In this beautiful setting the village of Hakone, Japan, was duplicated even to its famous Shintu gates. The sets are elaborate and distinctly Japanese, and it was the unanimous verdict of the Robertson-Cole Picture Committee that "The Dragon Painter" will go down as one of the most beautiful and artistic pictures ever presented on the screen. "The Hayakawa productions have created a standard for beauty and artistic detail that has seldom been equalled, but this picture eclipses anything that the famous Japanese has done along those lines."

Hallmark Press-Sheet Scores

J. S. Dickerson Looks It Over and Picks Out the High Lights In It

A PRESS sheet which is a bit unusual both in style and contents is ready for the exhibitors of "The Trail of the Octupus," the fifteen-part serial which Frank G. Hall is presenting through Hallmark Pictures Corporation and in which Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are starred.

A foreword heads the reading matter of the press sheet which gives general information concerning the production, and an advance story for newspaper use has been written which will prepare the public for what is coming.

A detailed synopsis for each episode follows. A story devoted to information concerning Ben Wilson and also one about Miss Gerber are also contained. Facsimiles of the various cuts and paper, ranging from a 24 sheet stand down to several styles of one sheets are shown with several scenes from the production pictured.

The serial is called "The Mysterious adventures of a master criminologist" and much of the advertising matter carries out the idea of mystery and action such a story naturally fosters.

A stunt for a teaser campaign is suggested which while not new is known as one of the most reliable interest arousers ever devised. A long list of catch lines have been writen with many advance notices smaller than the one mentioned ready for the shears. The Hallmark Corporation will attempt to aid the exhibitors who book "The Trail of the Octupus" in giving the serial a big advance advertising campaign believing as is stated on the press sheet, that: "'No matter how good a serial is, it will do more at the box office when properly exploited."—J. S. Dickerson.

Metro Signs an Italian Star

Bettina, Noted Foreign Actress, Is to Make Pictures in Studio in Rome

BETTINA, the Italian actress, a protege of royalty and one of the best known stars of the European stage and screen, is announced by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., as a new Metro star.

Under a co-operative arrangement with the Caesar Film Company of Rome, Mr. Rowland engaged the services of Bettina during his recent trip abroad. The first result of the arrangement will be the early showing of Bettina to the American picture-going public, in some of the two-score productions she has made in Italy. A second development of Mr. Rowland's coup will be that Bettina will make new pictures for Metro and the Caesar Films that will excel her past efforts in sumptuousness and artistry.

Prior to the signing of Bettina by the Metro president, a score or more of the largest producing companies in the United States and Europe had striven for the better part of two years to engage Bettina, but had failed in the attempt.

In fact Mr. Rowland has just permitted it to be known that Metro angled for Bettina a little more than two years ago without success. The Italian actress was then doing her first work before the camera after a meteoric career on the stage, having first associated herself with the Caesar Film Company. Her fervor for this now medium for her art caused her then to reject a flattering offer from Metro, which she declined upon the ground that she did not wish to interrupt her apprenticeship in the silent drama.

Metro's plans for Bettina are not completed, but they are known to include the production of her first two or three of her forthcoming specials de luxe in Italy.

Army Cinematographer to Join American

When General John J. Pershing landed on American soil there was with him as a member of his general staff Captain Nicholas McDonald, one of the foremost cinematographers of the American Expeditionary Forces.

When Captain McDonald arrived he was immediately besieged by numerous offers from motion picture concerns, but it developed that he had already concluded arrangements by cable with Walter Niebuhr by which his exclusive services for a long period of time are given to the American Cinema Corporation. As soon as Captain McDonald has received his discharge and has taken a much needed rest of Mr. Nieboh will send him in charge of a photographic unit on a tour around the world.

Parsons Signs a Star

William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, has added a new star to his production roster.

Previous to becoming affiliated with the National Studios, Mr. McDonald was featured and played leads in many notable productions, some of his best remembered work being the star role in "Tony America," "Teton," with Olive Thomas, "The Courageous Coward," "His Debt," "The Final Close Up," with Shirley Mason, "The Divorce Trap," with Gladys Brockwell, and "The Confession."

Francis McDonald has been signed by the National for a long term contract, the same to begin immediately. The finest vehicles obtainable will be accorded him, the initial one being announced in the near future.

Goldwyn Anniversary Week Successful

Goldwyn anniversary week, Sept. 8-14, brought tremendous results, according to reports received at the home office from Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges, up to last Saturday. The complete figures will not be tabulated for a number of weeks, but the contract reports on hand, showing bookings in new territories, return engagements of early releases and full Goldwyn weeks, to the exclusion of all other pictures are enough to assure the great success of the drive.

Fox Film Foreign Demand Grows

Encouraging Reports Are Received at Home Office

REPORTS from the London branch of Fox Film Corporation are extremely gratifying to the home offices of this organization. They contain accounts of excellent progress being made by the exchange managers throughout the United Kingdom—a result of the increasing popularity of Fox pictures among the fans of Great Britain.

In England, as most producers of this country know, the business of releasing and distributing films is handled in a manner entirely different from the American system. There the trade is given a showing of the picture sometimes months—even a year—in advance of the release date, giving the exhibitor opportunity to prepare his publicity and advertising matter long in advance of his receipt of the film.

Many exhibitors who control a chain of these cinemas, as the motion picture theatres of Great Britain are called, have special representatives whose sole duty it is to attend all trade showings and make official report on the relative values of pictures.

On the valuations submitted by these men, the theatre managers then book the films, between the date of the showing and the date set for release throughout England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. This system has been found to meet the requirements of theatres in all classes of neighborhoods.

In catering to the demands of the English exhibitors the London office of the Fox organization reports a land-office business on the entire array of Fox stars in all their recent starring vehicles.

William Farnum, Tom Mix and the other Fox players are all coming in for a share of praise for the good work they have done in keeping Fox trademark uppermost in the foreign market.

Exhibitors on the other side not only have received the Fox product with open arms, but are seeking to secure pre-releases on all Fox pictures for this season. Sales through the Fox offices are said to be going ahead with tremendous strides and everything is being done to live up to the expectations of the exhibitors.

Whether Fox Film Corporation will arrange to give the English showmen the desired pre-releases on all Fox films has not yet been determined, but it is expected that certain concessions will be made in this direction.

With the announcement in England that Pearl White and William Russell have been added to the Fox list of stars, English exhibitors and fans became very enthusiastic.

Referring to the Fox Sunshine Comedies, a novelty in England in the class of two-reelers, Manager Reed states that a tremendous business is being done on these mirth-provokers. Roars of laughter accompany the showing of each successive release of the Sunshines, and the famous Del Ruth Beauty Brigade is establishing as enviable a reputation today in England as was associated with the well-remembered Florodora Sextet of years ago.

Considering the situation both in Great Britain and on the Continent, Fox Film Corporation looks forward to the biggest year's business ever secured by them in this wide field on all types of pictures.

Fannie Hurst's Story for the Screen

"Oats and the Woman" by Fannie Hurst is to be made into a six-reel Universal special attraction by Director Rex Ingram with Francelia Billington, one of the stars of "The Pinnacle," the recent Eric von Stroheim production, and as the woman in question. This is the second Fannie Hurst story to be given a screen version.

"Oats and the Woman" appeared several months ago in the Cosmopolitan magazine and is heralded as one of Fannie Hurst's most realistic human interest tales. Her first story to be sold for screen production was "The Petal on the Current." This production is now receiving the highest praise from the public.

Tentatively Title for Lee Kiddies Subject

The second of the Lee Kids Comedies has been tentatively entitled "The Dixie Kids." A great part of the action was taken down in Georgia, where the kiddies and their company were sent in order that the watermelon patch and plantation dance scenes might be filmed in fitting settings. For these scenes Al Stevens, who, with Bert Williams, shares the distinction of being the only real negro comedian to attain prominence on the Broadway musical comedy stage, was specially engaged for an important comedy role.

Interest in Madlaine Traverse's Latest

Eager interest in advance bookings of "Snares of Paris" is reported from the offices of Fox Film Corporation. William Fox will release this picture on October 19. It is the second of the season's releases for Madlaine Traverse in the new Excel picture schedule. Howard M. Mitchell is the director.

Branch Office Opened

Supreme Photoply Productions has opened a Cincinnati branch for the exploitation of "Mickey" in Southern Ohio, located in the Cincinnati Film Exchange Building. Art Meyer is manager of the office. He will be remembered as handling "The Mask of Life" in Ohio in successful fashion.

M'Manus Production Noteworthy

"Lost Battalion" Is Received by All with Praise

WHEN the first real history of filmdom is written a prominent chapter will be devoted to the technique introduced by Edward A. McManus in his first production of "The Lost Battalion," according to W. H. Productions. At the George M. Cohan Theatre, where it is now playing, it is meeting with big success and the unanimous approval of the theatre-going public.

The locale and atmosphere are so much like the original scene of the action of the plot that its re-enactors felt they were once again actually living the respective parts they played before and after they became real fighting men. The feature is the simple story of how the jetsam and flotsam of a great city were drawn out of the Melting Pot and poured from the crucibles of refined material into the semblance of real men.

It lends itself in every way to the new technique Mr. McManus claims for it and which he believes will mark it as an epochal production and one that must command the attention of every producer of photoplays, including the seller, the entertainer and the entertainment. To the amusement-loving people, and there are thousands if not millions of amusement-seekers in the United States and Canada who, having heard the exploits, courage and valor of "The Lost Battalion" will want to see it and must see it when it is known that every man in the production—with the exception of the non-combatants—played his own particular role during those unforgettable six days and nights when the Germans strove to starve and thirst them into submission when they could not compel the valiant battalion to surrender by their continuous hell fire of shot and shell. It will not only prove real amusement, but it is an imperishable record of authentic current history appealing to the mind through the eye and will attract to the theatres wherever it is presented all sorts and conditions of amusement seekers. In the preparation of the production Edward A. MacManus, under whose personal direction this photoplay feature was put together, realized that no story, however meritorious it might be from an historical viewpoint, must have a love theme to sustain it as a popular vehicle for the entertainment of the masses, so he started the story of "The Lost Battalion" at the beginning with the men taken from their homes, the lover separated from his sweetheart, the business man from his business, and deftly knitted together into a wholesome plot leading up to the crux a great story—the valiant stand of a body of men hemmed in the gloomy recesses of an impenetrable forest, hardly able to stir without inviting the fire of the enemy and enduring every possible kind of hardship for the glory of the Stars and Stripes.

Grant L. Brightman, formerly of the staffs of the New York Tribune, American and Sun, has taken charge of publicity for Allgood Pictures Corporation, starring Charles Hutchison in a new serial, and Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., starring Emily Stevens in features.

Adhering to Original Themes

Universal Following Policy of Keeping Close to Trend of the Stories

Whether or not the play-going public desires to see the screen version of a story adhere to the original is a debatable question, although directors of Universal productions believe that the public does wish the story to be carried out in detail and true to the original.

In buying the works of popular authors Universal, now, more than ever, has adopted the policy of adhering to the original story.

Conspicuous among the more recent productions which carry out this policy is the one of "The Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," in which Mary MacLaren is starred. The Universal Company purchased the story as it originally appeared in Ainslee's Magazine and it has been produced with such truthfulness its screen version will instantly recall to the readers of that magazine the story, "Aunt Jeremiath," the original title.

Miss MacLaren seldom, if ever has been cast in a role more suitable to her histrionic ability. In this production she is cast as Ailsa Greene, a Scotch girl, who comes to America to make her own way. She has not been in America long until two men determine to marry her. One wants her selfishly and the other is determined she shall marry his nephew. This is a bit of a new twist in such screen stories. Through a series of amusing and serious adventures the girl arrives at happiness and not strange to say—great wealth.

The fact that Miss MacLaren is scoring a success in her plays is evidenced strongly in the fact that the booking reports for Mary MacLaren productions are extremely heavy at the present time. Her recent productions, "The Unpainted Woman," "The Weaker Vessel" and "The Petal on the Current" have broken all records for Mary MacLaren productions and rank among the first of Universal Special Attraction booking records.

A Stringer Mystery for Film

Robertson-Cole Acquires Rights to "House of Intrigue" Magazine Tale

ARTHUR STRINGER'S mystery story, "The House of Intrigue," is being picturized by Haworth for Robertson-Cole to be distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual. The story appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post and received much favorable comment, even to the extent of being declared one of the season's best mystery stories. Bobbs, Merrill & Company afterwards published it in book form and at the present time it has gone through several editions.

"The House of Intrigue" was much sought after by various producers as it is considered excellent screen material. It as a thrilling story that has the strongest mystery element, high dramatic values, considerable suspense and good human interest. It concerns an actress, Barbara Pretlow, who unconsciously becomes the tool of a gang of thieves. When she finds out who they are she leaves them and tries to find employment but fortune does not favor her. Seated in the park, looking over the want ad columns, she is approached by an old man who offers her a thousand dollars for an afternoon's work. It is more than she has earned in a year. Hungry and tired of job hunting she accepts. She is taken to the home of Clarissa Bratlett, an heiress, and is made to impersonate her. Trouble develops thick and fast but in the end her innocence is established and with it comes an acknowledgment of love on the part of a wealthy young man.

"The House of Intrigue" is being given an especial presentation, according to the announcement. It will have a notable cast, including Peggy May, Mignon Anderson, and Donald McDonald. Lloyd Ingraham will direct.

Capitol Arranges for Metros

New New York Playhouse Books "The Brat" and Other Large Productions

THE new Capitol Theatre on Broadway near Fifty-first street, th largest and most modern theatre in the world, is to be the New York home of Metro pictures. Negotiations were closed last week between Edward J. Bowes, vice-president and managing director of the Capitol Theatre, and Messrs. Richard A. Rowland and William E. Atkinson, respectively president and general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, whereby the Capitol closed for bookings not only of "The Brat," Nazimova's latest production, but of "Lombardi, Ltd.," "Fair and Warmer" and "Please Get Married," the Screen Classics, Inc., specials starring Bert Lytell, May Allison and Viola Dana.

The Nazimova production of "The Brat," distributed by Metro, is planned by Mr. Bowes for early presentation at the Capitol Theatre. The fact that the enormous motion picture house is as yet uncompleted makes it impossible to announce the definite date of "The Brat" showing. But it will be among the first three, so far as is now known.

That Metro is proud to be represented on Broadway by the world's largest and most modern theatre, Metro officials are glad to admit. And that the Capitol is further to be the medium of presenting to New York picture-goers the new "fewer and better" Screen Classics, Inc., productions distributed by Metro, is accepted as another cause for elation.

A "Christy Girl" Seen in Fox Offering

Dorothy Langly, who now is known as the "Christy Girl," made her debut in motion pictures recently at the William Fox Studio, where she appeared in a big scene in support of William Russell. Harry Millarde, who is directing "Sacred Silence," Mr. Russell's first Fox picture, pronounced Miss Langly one of the finest screen types he had ever seen.

Miss Langly was the model for one of the recent covers which Howard Chandler Christy, the famous artist, made for New York American's magazine section. She also posed for several of the illustrations now appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Schomer Progresses on "The Sacred Flame"

Abraham S. Schomer, of Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., announced this week that the photography for "The Sacred Flame," in which Miss Emily Stevens is starring, is now half completed. Both Mr. Schomer, who is the author and director of the feature, and Miss Stevens are enthusiastic about the results to date.

E. S. Manheimer, who is handling the output of Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., has made no announcement yet of plans for distribution. This is expected within a few days.

Latest Christie Comic

"He Married His Wife" is the title of the farce comedy in which Edith Roberts is featured in the current release of the Christie Special Productions. In this special, produced by Al E. Christie, the plot hinges on the predicament in which a young divorced husband found himself when he tried by devious methods to avoid the payment of his alimony. His last expedient was courting his divorced wife, which was all right because he found he was really in love with her after all.

Americans Scored in Summer

Flying "A" Brand Put Out Number of Pictures That Hit the Public Taste

REVIEWING its summer output, the American Film Company, Inc., reports that the half-dozen romances, mystery plays and satirical comedies which have made up its program of releases for June, July and August have carved new notches in the summer business record.

The warm-weather list was opened by "A Bachelor's Wife," a comedy-drama by Joseph Franklin Poland, which was specially written for Mary Miles Minter. This delightful picture immediately achieved a coast-to-coast popularity that is still on the up-grade. "Yvonne from Paris," another Poland drama in which Miss Minter was starred under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn, has proved itself an equally excellent money magnet for exhibitors and is winning lengthened runs and return bookings everywhere.

Two popular Margarita Fisher productions were on the "Flying A's" summer list; namely, "Trixie from Broadway" and "The Tiger-Lily." Concerning "Trixie," that live-wire theatre of Denver, the Strand, reports: "In the sweltering weather, ours was one of three houses out of the seven first-run theatres on Curtis Street that enjoyed big business. On Saturday and Sunday, the last two days of the run, the picture played to capacity business." It had a week's run in August at the Star theatre, Chicago.

Business that classifies as 'way above normal is being reported by all exchange men for William Russell's adventure-mystery, "A Sporting Chance."

"This Hero Stuff," only recently released, is a timely satire based upon the tendency of our returned warriors to become "fed up" with hero-worship. It is giving "A Sporting Chance" a close run for its envied position as the most popular of the summer's crop of high-class comedies.

American completed another William Russell production during the summer, the big six-act play of American life founded on Jackson Gregory's best-seller, "Six Feet Four."

Two Plays for Billie Rhodes

Popular Stories Bought for the Star of "The Blue Bonnet," Her Best Play

THE announcement that "Mary Minds Her Business," George Weston's Ladies' Home Journal serial success, is to be the Billie Rhodes vehicle following Harold MacGrath's "Hearts and Masks," on which the artiste has begun work at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America, has strengthened the exhibitor interest in "The Blue Bonnet," first in Miss Rhodes' series of W. W. Hodkinson releases.

The purchase of two such stories bears out the statement of William Parsons, producer of Billie Rhodes productions, at the time he contracted with the Hodkinson organization for their distribution, that Miss Rhodes would be seen only in the picturization of stories popular with readers of "best sellers."

Trade showings on "The Blue Bonnet" in the thirty Hodkinson offices last week testified to the high regard in which the production is held by scores of the first run exhibitors of America, word of the tremendous reception accorded "The Blue Bonnet" at its American premiere at the Kinema, Los Angeles, attracting many of the country's most prominent picture showmen to the simultaneous invitation showings. Reports from Hodkinson managers in Atlanta, Cleveland and Minneapolis show marked interest in the Billie Rhodes production among first run exhibitors in the key cities of these zones.

Powerful in its theme, brilliant in its enactment, "The Blue Bonnet" is certain to give the artiste a splendid opportunity.

Players of ability, including Stanhope Wheatcroft, Irene Rich, Ben Wilson, and Lloyd Bacon accord Miss Rhodes capital support.

"Woman Fire Fighters" in Pictographs

The leading subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph scheduled for release September 28 is "Women Fire Fighters," a remarkably interesting bit of film that will give audiences a new insight into the work being done by women who proved their efficiency during the war when they were obliged to fill the places of men called into the service. Instead of being released with the return of the Forest Rangers from overseas, the women recruits are being continued as a valuable part of the organization formed to protect the vast wooded areas in the west.

Story for Tsuru Aoki

The second story for the use o Tsuru Aoki has been purchased b Universal from Abigail Hazen Fitch The story, "The Breath of th Dragon," is especially suited to th roles portrayed by Tsuru Aoki.

The novel itself had a wide circula tion in this country and abroad and is an exciting adventure story o China during the reign of the Empres Dowager. Intimate glimpses of life i the imperial court are given. The heroine, which part will be played by Tsuru Aoki, is a young Chinese gir whose lover has been condemned to die because of his activity with the Young China movement. The heroine gains admittance to the imperial household hoping to win the favor of the Empress and win a pardon for her lover. A young American assists her and an American girl also has an important part in the plot.

Jose Picture Finished

"Mothers of Men," the first of the Edward Jose productions, for Film Specials, Inc., is now completed, with the exception of the titles. These are now being written, in collaboration with Mr. Jose, by Mary Murrillo.

The executive offices of the Jose productions will be at 140 West Forty-second street, where the Film Specials, Inc., is one of the five companies to enjoy the personal attention of Jos. M. Schenck, who has concentrated all his interests on the movies, since becoming established in these new quarters.

"Mothers of Men" will be issued as a six-reel special production, and is soon to have a private showing, after which its definite manner of being released will be announced in this paper.

May Allison on a New Picture Soon

June Mathis and A. P. Younger have completed their adaptation and scenario of "The Walk Offs," a picturization of the Oliver Morosco stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, which will be May Allison's next starring vehicle for Screen Classics, Inc., to follow the production of the Avery Hopwood farce, "Fair and Warmer."

Jack Dillon, a recent addition to the Screen Classics, Inc., directorial staff, will direct Miss Allison in "The Walk Offs."

George B. Seitz, director and star in "Bound and Gagged," a Pathe release

Sennett Picture Cleaning Up

WITH the organization of his New York Exchange, Sol Lesser gives a statement of the business which has been thus far enjoyed by "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," in conjunction with the appearance of the original Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties in person. It has been Mr. Lesser's policy to only buy pictures with a showmanship possibility, as evinced by his success with such productions as D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and others, all of which are sent out as road shows, and which at the present time are playing to record business all over the country. Now he has taken a comedy, "Yankee Doodle In Berlin," and from records received to date will even surpass business of the above mentioned spectacles. It was Mr. Lesser's showmanship mind which conceived the plan of sending this picture on tour with the bathing girls, and at the present time he is negotiating with Mack Sennett for further activities in the line of special pictures.

"Yankee Doodle In Berlin," opened at the Broadway theatre, New York, at a $1.00 top price, and played to record houses for eight solid weeks, during the hottest weather of the season, and could have easily drawn for another eight weeks., were it not for the fact that the theatre management had contracted for other pictures previously. From the Broadway it went to the Montauk in Brooklyn, where it ran for two capacity weeks. Other bookings which have been closed are for Shubert's Teller's in Brooklyn, Henderson's, Coney Island; Mount Morris, New York, and others still under consideration to be announced very shortly.

When one considers the expense attached to the presentation of such a production as "Yankee Doodle In Berlin," is with the Bathing Girls, exhibitors have the opportunity of a wonderful cleanup, as the picture is a travesty which all will enjoy, and the girls who are known all over the world, are even more popular than some of our big stars.

"Confession" Finished

William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, has telegraphed to Joe Brandt that a print of the "Confession" featuring Henry B. Walthall is on its way East.

George Seitz, Actor-Director

Always Active at the Pathe Studios Producing "Bound and Gagged" Serial

"NO, I don't find it particularly difficult to direct and act in the same picture, except, of course, that it keeps one going all the time," George Seitz maintained casually, as he lingered in his dressing room at the Pathe Studio for a few moments between scenes of the serial "Bound and Gagged," in which he is star as well as director and producer.

Incidentally, it's his own company that is working with him, and the only part of the production for which he isn't solely responsible is the scenario.

"I have written a few stories," he said, when someone asked why he wasn't doing the whole thing. "I wish I could claim the credit for this story, because it's a good one, let me tell you, but, being honest, I can't. I started in the picture business as a scenario writer, however, in the old days when we had to turn out three one reelers a week in order to hold our jobs. I remember that George Fitzmaurice, Ouida Bergere and I made up Pathe's first scenario staff."

"What can you say about directing for the screen as compared with the stage?"

"Well, at least, one's voice doesn't count against one," Mr. Seitz laughed, "and you're most certain of getting just the result you want, because you can always have your film run off, and if it isn't just what you want, you can do it again. We haven't had many retakes so far, however, Everything is going very smoothly, and I have another serial all ready to commence as soon as this one is finished. Wouldn't you like to come down and watch us work?"

The most impressive fact about George Seitz's work, we realized at once, is the rapidity with which he does it. There is no fooling about the studio waiting for actual "shooting" to begin, or wondering when the set that was promised for day before yesterday will be ready, and whether there is any hope of commencing a scene before ten P. M. Floor space is carefully planned, so that sets for future scenes can be built in advance. Then, if the weather prohibits the taking of certain location scenes in the episode on which he is working, the director has an indoor set in the next episode waiting for immediate use.

Marguerite Jones.

Educators Cooperate on Film

"Evangeline," Fox Production, Is Given for Children at Extra Shows

THE big special production by William Fox of "Evangeline," one of the big dramas in the history of American literature, has been enthusiastically received by the principals of the schools throughout the country. To them it means a keener interest, a better understanding, and closer study of Longfellow's immortal poem by those attending the schools. Cooperating with them by giving special matinees for school children and their teachers, the exhibitors have brought home to the mothers and fathers of the country the immense value, not only as entertainment of the highest type, but also as a means of education, of a faithfully depicted and carefully interpreted screen version of the best in literature.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures have said of this picture:

"This is an undoubtedly sincere and faithful screening of Longfellow's famous poem. It should appeal to all classes, young and old, who have a perception for the dramatic, the significant and the beautiful. It is treated with imagination and artistry and is remarkably successful in making live the period of the story and in creating reality in the characters. It is one of the most truthful pictures to the original ever produced, both in spirit and content of narrative."

Such an endorsement is remarkable and of the highest value to the exhibitors. Then, having viewed it and made a critical analysis of it, the American Longfellow Society also has endorsed the William Fox production with Miriam Cooper as Evangeline.

Famous Has Broadhurst Plays

Contract Signed Whereby F. P.-Lasky May Produce Past and Future Works

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has signed a contract with George Broadhurst whereby it acquires the rights to all of his plays, both those which are already proved successes and those he may write in the future. Following closely on the corporation's accession of the plays and manuscripts controlled by Charles Frohman, Inc., and Oliver Morosco, the arrangement gives Famous Players-Lasky control of the greater part of the dramatic material now available for the screen.

George Broadhurst, as a playwright, is unique in the quantity of work he is able to turn out and the great number of successes which have been his "Bought and Paid For," "The Man of the Hour," "The Law of the Land," and "Today" are among his best known plays, and "The Crimson Alibi" is one of the current season's hits. His first success was made with his farces, among them being "What Happened to Jones," and "Why Smith Left Home," the latter already filmed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with Bryant Washburn in the leading part.

Peak of Business Is Reached

NEARLY twice the aggregate business of National Week last year and a record of selling and service to exhibitors established which it is said has never before been equaled by any organization—this, briefly speaking, is the story of the second National Paramount-Artcraft Week and the achievement credited by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to its sales force.

The week was one of the most perfectly organized intensive selling campaigns in the history of motion pictures. The extensive advertising program which proved to be a tremendous force in the sales campaign was laid out nearly ten weeks in advance. Then, as the time for bookings approached, each exchange voluntarily pledged to secure a certain quota of business set by the exchange itself. These pledges were signed by nearly 1,500 emeployes of the distributions department and an aggregate business of $641,750 was voluntarily promised to the home office. Reports received up to Saturday indicated that this amount would be far exceeded, as approximately 4,000 theatres participated.

The event was known within the Famous Players-Lasky sales organization as "Adolph Zukor Week" and someone in the department of distribution conceived the idea of having these pledges gathered together in a handsomely bound volume and presented to Mr. Zukor. The presentation was made quite informally on Tuesday last by Walter E. Greene, vice-president in charge of distribution, the only others present being Jesse L. Lasky and Eugene Zukor.

Commenting upon the big success of National Paramount-Artcraft Week Vice-President Greene said: "There is one feature of these National Weeks to which I wish to call particular attention, and that is the enthusiastic support and co-operation which have been accorded us by the better exhibitors of the country. Although the total number of theatres booked solid for the week is an enviable one, we could greatly have increased that number had we not been handicapped by a general shortage of prints.

"Early in the campaign several offices were forced to discontinue accepting solid bookings owing to the fact that every available print in the exchange had been scheduled for use."

Neilan Returns to the Coast

FOLLOWING a month's vacation in in New York, Marshall Neilan has returned to Los Angeles where he will soon begin work on his initial independent picture for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, with an adaptation of Randall Parrish's well-known novel, "Bob Hampton of Placer."

Under the title of "The Eternal Three," the continuity for which has just been completed by Marian Fairfax, this story will be brought to the screen with all the vivid heart interest that made the book so popular. The Neilan organization has prepared the necessary sets and no delay will be occasioned in the shooting of the picture.

"The Eternal Three" will, it is claimed, be the most ambitious production which Neilan has ever attempted. In the light of "The Unpardonable Sin," and "Daddy Long Legs," this statement is of weight. This attraction will be unique. While in some scenes as many as five thousand people will be used, there will be no attempt to make it a spectacle. The mass of cast members will simply form a background for the principals of the picture.

It is expected that many of the scenes will be made in Montana, due to the fact that thousands of horses and Indians are requisites to the picture and this is the only state where such "properties" can be obtained. The location men who have visited the state report that the scenery exceeds anything which can be found in or near Los Angeles.

As in his recent pictures, Neilan will have a strong cast for this picture. Lewis Stone will make his return to the screen in the role of Bob Hampton. Marjorie Daw, who has just completed a two-year contract as leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks, will play the leading female role. Wesley Barry, famous for his remarkable performances in "The Unpardonable Sin" and "Daddy Long Legs," will have a feature part as will Mahlon Hamilton.

The production will be made at the Lois Weber studio which has been rented by the Neilan organization pending the completion of the Marshall Neilan studio.

"Erstwhile Susan" Is Completed

Announcement comes from Realart Pictures Corporation that "Erstwhile Susan," in which Constance Binney plays the stellar role, is almost ready for showing to Realart officials. Active production has been completed under the direction of John S. Robertson.

Press Book Out on "Six Feet Four"

The American Film Company, Inc., has issued a most attractive and practical press book on its new superfeature, "Six Feet Four"—the screen version of Jackson Gregory's popular novel of the same title.

The book is not only considerably larger, but far more ambitious and artistic than the usual run of Campaign Books.

Notable First National Deal

Will Distribute Louis Mayer's Series of Pictures Starring Mildred Chaplin

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT announces this week that it has signed a contract with Louis B. Mayer for the distribution of a series of from six to eight special feature attractions starring Mildred Harris Chaplin.

The series includes screen adaptations of at least six successful books and plays, which Mr. Mayer has chosen as the most suitable vehicles for the wife of the famous comedian. Mrs. Chaplin has entirely recovered from her illness, and work on the initial release will be started in time to make possible its first run presentations late in December.

Joseph Henaberry, who wrote and directed the story of "His Majesty, The American," starring Douglas Fairbanks, and which will be the initial release of the United Artists' Corporation, has been engaged by Mr. Mayer to direct Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Extreme care has been taken in the selection of stories. On the list of those intended for her are "Old Dad," by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott; "Pollyop of the Storm Country," by Grace Miller White; "Foolish Youth," by Louise Winter; "They'll All Bear Watching," by Alice Roberts; "Danger," by H. H. Van Loan; "Watch Your Wife," by E. Mason Hopper, and "The Inferior Sex," by Maxine Elliott.

Mr. Mayer's own publicity and exploitation organization will have charge of a national promotion plan, involving newspaper and magazine material, and all syndicate material. First National's advertising and publicity department will supervise all trade advertising and exploitation direct to exhibitors.

Within the next week, Mr. Mayer will decide which of the stories arranged for will be material for the first production.

Pictures on Life of Roosevelt

Hallmark This Month Releases Feature Approved by Roosevelt Memorial Asso.

HALLMARK PICTURE CORPORATION through its president, Frank G. Hall, has closed a deal with Herman Hagedorn, chief executive of Roosevelt Memorial Association, whereby "Trough the Roosevelt Country with Roosevelt's Friends," a two-reel feature production, will be distributed through Hallmark exchanges. This picture is an official production made under the auspices of the Roosevelt Memorial Association, under the direction of Mr. Hagedorn, author of the most popular boys' work on the ex-President's life, "The Boys' Life of Theodore Roosevelt." Mr. Hagedorn spent several weeks in North Dakota, the country where Roosevelt spent his ranch life, and took an extended trip through Montana and Wyoming, Colonel Roosevelt's favorite hunting-grounds.

Before his death Colonel Roosevelt gave Mr. Hagedorn personal letters of introduction to his many and intimate friends in this country, and armed with these, Mr. Hagedorn invaded the Dakotas, Montana and Wyoming, with a cameraman and the result is an intimate study of Colonel Roosevelt's closest friends during the time that he spent in ranch life. Among these friends are included some of the most picturesque figures of Western ranch life.

The picture is said to reveal, as no words could, the life which Theodore Roosevelt led in the years he spent in the West. "Whatever happens to me," he said when he returned to Medora as a candidate for the Vice-Presidency, "I thank God that I have lived and toiled with men!" This film shows how he lived and how he toiled.

"Through the Roosevelt Country with Roosevelt's Friends" will be released through the Hallmark exchanges this month.

Edith Storey's Reappearance

Robertson-Cole Announces Her First Haworth Picture for Release in November

EDITH STOREY'S first Robertson-Cole picture, produced by Haworth and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, will be released in November. This will be Miss Storey's first screen appearance in a year, and judging from the numerous comments made by exhibitors concerning the Edith Storey series, none of the popularity which placed her among the elect stars of filmdom has been lost.

Prior to her temporary retirement from the screen in order that she might devote her time to war work, Miss Storey was acclaimed by critics, exhibitors, and the motion picture public as one of the best actresses in the silent drama. The large number of contrasting roles that she played not only showed ability but versatility as well.

Miss Storey will make a series of eight Superior Pictures for Robertson-Cole. They will be produced by Haworth and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual. Work on the first picture will be started within a short time. The story has been selected and the scenario completed by the Haworth staff. It is said to be an intensely dramatic work and one that will give Miss Storey full opportunity to do some excellent acting. The studio is being enlarged and will be ready when Miss Storey arrives at the coast.

Goldwyn Playreading Scheme

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporatio announces the formation of a ne playreading department to sif through the two to three thousan plays which become available throug the recent affiliation of the Shuber Woods and Selwyn organizations wit the Goldwyn concern. Heretofore, scenario reading department has bee maintained both at the Culver Cit studios and in New York. The wor done in these offices has been centere on the reading and passing upon th fitness for picturization of novels an stories.

However, since the expansion of th Goldwyn company, the former depart ment has been unable to keep up witl the work to be done. Consequently it has been decided to separate th routine work of reading stories fron the close examination of the vast num ber of successful plays to which Gold wyn now has the photoplay rights.

In the new department, plays wil be considered not only from the stand point of their success as dramatic pro ductions and the advertising value o the author's name, but also from va rious technical angles, such as th feasibility for telling the stories in pic tures and not in titles, the opportuni ties offered for individual Goldwyn stars, the general appeal of the sub ject, and the possibilities which the play offers for unusual directoria finesse.

Among the plays which are avail able for early picturization are suc cesses by such noted authors as Oscar Wilde, Eugene Walter, Harry Leone Wilson, Augustus Thomas, Rex Beach, Paul Armstrong, John Gals worthy, Leo Tolstoi, the Russian philosopher and author; Butler Daven port, the Hattons, Githa Sowerby and Clyde Fitch. Out of the great mass of material which Goldwyn has se cured from the Shuberts, Woods and Selwyns, the play readers have selected a number of scripts that appear to offer the best opportunities for pic ture presentation and have passed them on to Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of the organization for final approval.

Appointed N. Y. Office Head for American

C. A. Stimson, general sales manager of the American Film Company, Inc., announces that L. B. Douglas, formerly representative of the company at the Kansas City Exchange, has been transferred to the East as manager of the New York office.

Mr. Douglas has a wide experience in the picture field as salesman, publicist and manager.

"Gas," New Model Comic

Gale Henry has finished her fifteenth comedy under the banner of the Model Comedy Company, and production has started on her next two-reeler of mirth at the company's studio in Hollywood, Cal. Her latest is titled "Gas."

Pete Smith Leaves Lasky, Joins Neilan

Pete Smith, for some time publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has resigned from that organization to become special publicity representative for Marshall Neilan Productions and took over his new duties September 15th. Mr. Smith will make his headquarters in the New York offices of the Marshall Neilan organization in the Capitol Theatre Building, and will leave for the West Coast studios in a few weeks to consult Mr. Neilan in connection with a tremendous publicity campaign. He will work in close conjunction with the publicity department of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which company will distribute the Marshall Neilan productions.

Mr. Smith has been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its affiliated units for nearly five years and the news of his change comes as a surprise. Prior to his connection with that company he was employed by various theatrical and motion picture publications.

Keystone Bathing Girls on a Long Tour

The Film Colonies at Hollywood and Los Angeles lost forty of their beauties last week, for the time being, when the girls left for New York to start on tour of the New England and Southern States to appear at the first run motion picture houses, thus satisfying the desires of the film fans to see their favorite Keystone bathing beauties in person.

Dorothy Haven is among the girls.

Pacific Co. Goes Ahead with Mystery Serial

The third episode of "The Radium Mystery" has just been commenced by the Pacific Producing Company under the direction of Robert Broadwell. This chapter of the story is being shot at Universal City, California, but the balance of the serial will be taken on many locations. The fourth episode will be at tropical islands, miles out in the Pacific Ocean and later the company will go to the big lumber lands in the North.

STATE RIGHT AND FOREIGN SALES

AMONG other sales during the past week Victor Kremer reports disposing of four Shorty Hamilton features and "Stripped for a Million" for all European territory; "Stripped for a Million" for four states; ten pictures featuring Henry Walthal, Bryant Washburn, Taylor Holmes and others for Oregon, and some thirty pictures for Washington and Montana.

The Facts and Follies series of short photoplays will be handled in New England by the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, of which Herman Rifkin is President and General Manager.

A. C. BROMBERG, vice-president and general manager of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta, Georgia, has just bought "Lightning Bryce," Joe Brandt's new serial, from the Arrow Film Corporation, for eight Southern states, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

The South American rights to Wistaria Productions, Inc., new serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," co-starring Anne Luther and George Larkin, under the direction of Burton L. King, have been sold to the Tower Picture Corporation, according to an announcement made by Lynn S. Card, president of Wistaria. The Oriental rights were disposed of last week to the Australation Film Company, foreign bnyers, and negotiations are under way for the disposal of France and England.

South America will see four of the biggest and most recent Universal-Jewel productions. This fact was disclosed by the announcement of the sale of the rights of the four productions to Argentina and Chile to Max Gluckman of Buenos Aires.

The four Jewel productions which he contracted for are "Destiny," "Paid in Advance," "Borrowed Clothes" and "Husbands Only."

Victor Kremer, who has transferred his headquarters from Chicago to New York, closed many sales on the 47 pictures he controls. Rights for the following states have been sold on "Stripped for a Million": California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska and northern New Jersey. Also all world's rights outside of the United States and Canada.

A number of territories have also been closed on the short subjects. The entire Pacific Coast and nearly all the states on the Atlantic Coast have been sold.

Photo Products Export Company reports that 44 features and 65 comedies were disposed of for the United Kingdom; 32 features for Norway; an entire series of one-reel James Montgomery Flagg comedies and the Ebony Comedies for Argentine; 7 features, the Ebony Comedies, and 3 two-reel comedies for Spain and Portugal; 20 comedies for Japan, and 3 two-reel comedies and 2 features for Mexico.

The C. B. Price Company, Inc., has sold the world rights to a number of feature productions. George W. Lederer's five-reel feature, "The Decoy," in which Francis Nelson is the star, was sold to John D. Tibbetts Productions, Ltd.

"The Kaiser's Bride," starring Gail Kane, the American rights of which have not been disposed of, was sold for the foreign market to Cine Productions, Ltd.

Exclusive Features, Inc., have sold sixteen two-reel Kathlyn Williams productions for Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, Greater New York and New York State, Michigan, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and North and South Carolina.

The Tower Film Corporation, through Joseph Simmonds, its president, concluded negotiations with the Wistaria Productions, Inc., whereby they secure "The Lurking Peril," the new feature serial, for the Spanish speaking countries of the globe. Spain, Portugal, South America, the West Indies, Mexico, and Central America, including the Canal Zone, are the territories included in this deal.

Leonard Making Fourth Cosmopolitan Picture

Robert Z. Leonard is completing "The Miracle of Love" at the Biograph studio, this being the fourth of the series of Cosmopolitan Productions. Lucy Cotton and Wyndham Standing are the featured players. The story is after the novel of the same name by Cosmo Hamilton.

Progressing on Kay Laurel Picture

Jack O'Brien, director general, Shear and Company, producing a series of feature pictures, starring Kay Laurel, announces that he has completed the first two reels of Miss Laurel's first big feature, the story of which tells of romance of the Texas-Oklahoma oil country.

Metzger Handles Equity Films in Northwest

Gus Metzger, pioneer in both the exhibiting and the motion picture exchange business in the Northwest, has severed his connection with the Universal Film Company and is selecting Portland as the center of a new big enterprise of his own. In coming to Portland he comes again to the city in which he began his motion picture career, after a year's absence in New York and Los Angeles, first as manager of the Jewel offices and then as manager of the West Coast Division of Universal.

He has just closed a contract for handling all of the Clara Kimball Young productions in the territory of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, and will establish distributing facilities at once.

"The Clara Kimball Young productions," says Mr. Metzger, "are the highest priced, per negative, that have ever been put on the market and the forthcoming features are to be of unusual merit. I feel that in securing the Northwest territory on these features, I have put myself in a position to bring the exhibitors something of unusual merit and to handle what is to be the most distinctive series of features that will be shown.

"I will also handle through a contract just perfected with the Equity Pictures Incorporated, eight other similar high class productions, the first a Katterjohn story, 'Love Honor and Obey,' featuring House Peters and an all-star cast."

Canyon's President Off for the Coast

Jacob Weinberg, president of the Canyon Pictures Corp., 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, has left for Selig Studios in Los Angeles to assist in the production of a serial with Franklyn Farnum.

Two-reel westerns are now being made at the above studio, in which Franklyn Farnum plays the leading role. Three of these western features are now completed and a trade showing announcement will shortly be made.

Joseph M. Goldstein, treasurer of the Canyon Pictures Corp., states that these productions will be offered on a state right basis, release date to be shortly announced.

All Directors and Casts Are Busily at Work; Marie Walcamp Serial Begun

WITH every director busy and all casts working Universal City presents an atmosphere of action that is far removed from the idleness so prevalent at this time in many of the Eastern studios.

The starting of Marie Walcamp's new serial, "Petals of Lac-Tze," from the novel by J. Allen Dunn, and the finish of the Jewel production, "The Beach Comber," starring Elmo Lincoln, have been the two big events of the week at Universal City.

Henry McRae, who directed Lincoln in "Elmo, the Mighty," is producing the new Walcamp serial. Harland Tucker is her leading man, while others in the cast include Otto Lederer, Wadsworth Harris and George Hively, who in addition to playing the heroine's father, is preparing the screen script for the various episodes.

"The Beach Comber" was produced by Rex Ingram from the story by J. G. Hawks, with a cast including Mabel Ballin, Harry van Meter, Ethelyn Irving, Frank Brownlee, Paul Weigel and Dick La Reno.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the starting of production on "The Virgin of Stamboul," which is to be a Priscilla Dean super-feature, and her first under her new contract. The story was originally called "Undraped," and is from the pen of H. H. Van Loan.

Allen Holubar is at Pleasanton, Cal., filming the small town scenes for "Ambition," Dorothy Phillips' versal feature, written by Mr. H bar in collaboration with Olga I Scholl. Robert Andersen has leading male role.

One of the busiest of West C stars is Harry Carey. "The Gi the Desert," his current produc is well under way under Jack F direction. The story was writte Peter B. Kyne, under the title "The Three Godfathers," and peared in the Saturday Evening I Carey's supporting cast includes W fred Westover, J. Farrell McDor Ted Brook, Joe Harris and Cha LeMoyne.

Tsuru Aoki, who has yet to m her first public appearance under U versal direction, is busily engaged "The Breath of the Gods."

Author Likes Scre Version of Novel

Jackson Gregory, popular autho best sellers, has just reported to home office of the American F Company, his impressions on see the first Coast print of "Six F Four"—the big six-act super-feat of American life which the "Fly A" has made from his famous nc of the same name.

"The pictured version of 'Six F Four,'" he writes, "preserves with markable fidelity, not only the story self, but the very spirit and atm phere of my novel."

After having worn lavish sartorial effects in her last four pictures, Bessie Barriscale has got away from the fashion show and is leading a simple life as far as her costumes are concerned, for in "Kitty Kelley, M. D.," her latest production, she is being gowned very simply, and states that she is glad to escape the necessity of frequent changes and elaborate preparations for wearing clothes. Her picture is being directed by her husband, Howard Hickman.

Russell Simpson, star of "Out of the Dust," the recently completed nine reel picture made by the McCarthy Picture Productions, is now associated with Blanche Sweet with whom he is appearing in the production of Bret Harte's story, "Cressy." It is possible that Simpson will produce independently on completion of his contract with Miss Sweet.

Keeping pace with the expansion of the Goldwyn Studio, the publicity department there has been increased by the acquisition of Charles Condon, recently discharged from the army, who will specialize in preparation of press books, Helen Starr, formerly in charge of Universal's Literary Bureau, who will devote attention to the feminine side of studio activities, and Lieutenant Donald Biddle Keyes, who will record photographically, the daily happenings of similar interest. Norbert Lusk will continue in charge with Clark Irvine, remaining as editor of the Studio Skeleton, the Goldwyn house organ.

That the real west is not the reel west of bad men and "hero stuff," but instead is the west of clean living and rollicking humor, is the contention of Will Rogers, who is creating the role of Billy Fortune from the stories by William R. Lighton. According to the author, "In my twenty-five years on the plains I have never yet seen a bad man make a gun play. You can find more wickedness, swagger and four-flushing on the streets of a modern town in twenty minutes than you would see in twenty years in Wyoming."

Director Frank Lloyd has returned with his company from Bellingham, Wash., where he staged scenes of the great salmon industry for his forthcoming production of the Rex Beach story, "The Silver Horde," and is now engaged in dramatizing the scenes representing the story of Cherry Malotte among the fisheries. Production is advancing rapidly in spite of the discomfort caused by the necessity of wearing Alaskan furs and other garments on a studio stage during hot summer days.

Director T. Hayes Hunter has been given charge of the production of the Rupert Hughes novel, "The Cup of Fury," for the Goldwyn Studio, and opening scenes already have been made of the picture. Incidentally, Hunter is directing the acting of Herbert Standing, who plays one of the leading roles, and with whom Hunter was associated sixteen years ago when both were playing with Cissie Loftus in the Israel Zangwill play, "The Serio Comic Governess." Mr. Hunter, in the requirements of the story intends to kill off Herbert Standing in the ninety-second scene, which will leave that veteran actor free to return to Catalina Island to continue his vacation.

The time is coming when correspondence schools will prefix their names with the word, "screen" to designate that a majority of their courses will be taught by the motion picture, according to Monte M. Katterjohn, the author-producer, who is now filming, "Love, Honor and Obey," starring House Peters. Mr. Katterjohn believes that the screen will be used not only in showing various occupations, but in demonstrating surgical operations, experiments in dentistry, medicine and similar sciences.

William Duncan, star and director of the Vitagraph serial "Smashing Barriers" directing his leading woman Edith Johnson in an aquatic stunt Alfred E. Green, recently director of Peggy Hyland at the Fox Studio, is busy in his new engagement with Katterjohn productions, where he is preparing the preliminary work in collaboration with the author, the star, House Peters, and Mary Alden, the leading woman, for the filming of Katterjohn's first play for the Garson Studios, called "Love, Honor and Obey." The principals are going through the story from start to finish in accordance with Author Katterjohn's belief that a day spent in presentation saves two days of production time.

Mel St. Clair, who recently completed an engagement directing William Fox Sunshine Comedies, has been engaged by Harry M. Race track scenes in which his star played the role of a jockey were made by Scott Dunlap recently during a visit to the California State Fair at Sacramento, where Dunlap utilized the crowds and the ponies for several exteriors in his production of "A Little Prayer for Rain," with Al Ray and Elinor Fair co-starred. The feature is said to be one of the best of the light comedy-dramas which Scotty has been making at the William Fox Studios. Ray, incidentally, was observed a few days afterward declining with thanks to be seated while waiting for his work in a scene.

Burton King is busy thinking up ways and means of killing George Larkin. It must be done, because the scenario compels George to sell his brain to an eminent but unscrupulous psychologist for examination after death, and the psychologist wants to make sure that George doesn't win out by living any longer than he does. And as one man couldn't possibly think up enough murderous methods to keep a fifteen episode serial going, the director has to help him out. Meanwhile, Mr. Larkin is quite worried for fear they'll forget it's only a movie.

Gladys Valerie received a letter from a sailor fan last week posted in South America and promising to send her a parrot. Miss Valerie didn't bother much, as such promises are very frequent, but a little later, the parrot actually arrived. Now she doesn't know whether she likes it or not, as it shocks the family one minute with profanity that's extreme even for a parrot, and flatters her the next with phrases about her herself that its former master had evidently taught it. Rather a novel way of getting yourself heard, that of sending a parrot along with messages, isn't it?

Edmund Goulding, the most prolific writer that we know in New York at the present time, is working on "The Daughter of Two Worlds" for Norma Talmadge. Were it anyone else it would be quite safe to assume that this report would hold true of Mr. Goulding for a few weeks at least, but as it is, we know it will be finished and almost forgotten by the time this goes to press.

Trailing George Larkin Through Perils : : : :

"SAY, George, will you hang from that bridge we saw yesterday—that one about two hunderd feet high that shakes every time anything goes over it—I want you to run for your life over that bridge, and just as they shoot, you drop through the ties, and hang, while another bandit points a gun at you from the ground Alright with you?"

Director Burton King was discussing a scene in "The Lurking Peril" in which George Larkin is co-starring for Wisteria Productions. His satisfied smile showed his confidence in his hero, even before the hero's ready:

"Sure."

"How do you feel about those stunts, Mr. Larkin?" we asked, "Are you one of the fatalists who believe themselves just as safe on a shaky bridge as on a sidewalk?"

"Yes, I suppose so," he answered, "but I'm so used to doing things that some people think are risky that I don't think about it at all. My parents were circus people, you know, and I learned to swing on a trapeze as soon as I learned to walk. My first job was being the top man in one of those pyramid affairs, where the men stand on each other's shoulders. I believe I was about seven then, and a rival company offered to pay me for doing the same thing. You see, my money was always given to my father where I was, so I ran away and took the other job. It didn't last long, however, they found me and brought me back very speedily."

"What are you doing in this picture," we asked, "besides getting shot off a two hundred foot bridge?"

"Almost getting shot," he corrected, "the heroine is also armed, and will shoot the pistol out of the villain's hand while his finger is on the trigger. There's a diabolical old professor after me, you see, because I'm supposed to have an unusual sort of brain, and in a moment of extreme financial stress, I sell my head to him for diagonsis after death. So he tries in every possible way to have me killed without suspicion falling on him, of course. The picture with the hands typifies my state of mind, because I know that all these hands are after me, while I can prove nothing. We got some good scenes up at Marshalls Falls, Pa., last week, a runaway and swimming rapids and a lot of stuff."

"What was the closest call you ever had?" we persisted.

He gave the question serious consideration. Danger is so much a part of the day's work to George Larkin, that it is merely incidental and hard for him to recall.

But one event in "The Tiger's Trail" came into his mind and he told us about it indifferently in order to satisfy our persistency.

"I was supposed to cross the tracks of a fast express just a little ahead of it. The car I was driving was to be wrecked later on, so of course it was a very old one, not in the best mechanical condition. When the director called to me to go, the engine refused to start for several minutes, so that when I finally got away, the train was nearer than we had intended. I heard the director yell to me to stop, that I couldn't make it, but I had already gone so far that I thought the chances were better for going ahead than resorting to brakes that were almost useless and might only lessen my speed without stopping me in time. The next thing I knew I was over the tracks with everybody screaming and looking the other way, but luckily the camera man had sense enough to keep on turning. I believe the engine actually touched my rear mudguard, so I guess I wasn't a second too soon. But 'a miss is as good as a mile,' you know."

"Perhaps," we agreed dubiously, wishing that we had time to hear more, but someone announced that a car was waiting to take us back to the Forest Hills Station, and we left the Mirror studio to Mr. Larkin's adventure.

More About Players We Meet Around the Studios

This fair lady is Lucy Cotton, appearing in "The Miracle of Love," the International production

With Jimmy Aubrey, Babe Hardy and Dick Smith featured in the production, Director Noel Smith has begun his latest two-reel comedy at the Western Vitagraph Studio, which at present has the working title of "The Jail Bird's Last Song." The picture is said to be a clever travesty of prohibition, part of the action of which concerns rival soda water "jerkers," who find their trade increasing rapidly as the result of miraculous pills which may be slipped into otherwise inocuous drinks.

Marking, it is declared, a distinct departure from other features in which she has been starred, Peggy Hyland, the noted English actress, has departed from her usual light comedy roles to play the principal character in a murder mystery being staged by Howard M. Mitchell at the William Fox Studio, in what is titled "A Girl from Bohemia." In it Mitchell is said to have built up many strong dramatic situations, and a climax of mystery in which Miss Hyland has surprised her associates by her versatality in meeting the demands of the heavier roles as well as those of a comedy type.

"The boys," Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, are perpetrating one of their funniest comedies at Universal City, working with Charlotte Merriam as the principal feminine player. The two comedians assert they have succeeded in developing around "Solid Comfort" more novelties in the way of rough and tumble comedy than in anything they have produced.

Director Tod Browning has begun work on the elaborate production of "The Virgin of Stamboul," in which Priscilla Dean will have her first stellar role since her return to the Universal Studios. It is to be an eight-reel picture from the story of H. H. Van Loan, and is said to be the most pretentious photodrama that author has written.

William Parke, Pauline Frederick and their company were engaged in the opening scenes of their new production at the Goldwyn studio when a special delivery package containing a suspicious rattle was delivered to the star. Miss Frederick hesitated at opening it, but Parke threw caution to the winds and unwrapped the package. Inside was found a tightly soldered tin can which, upon yielding to the persuasion of a can opener, exposed within it a card on which was written "best luck with your next production."

"Marie, Ltd." J. Stuart Blackton's "DAWN"

"Avoid Overwork," Says Director Terriss

"MY ideas about directing?" repeated Tom Terriss, when we caught him in his office at the Vitagraph Studio. "Well, I believe the most unique characteristic of mine is that I don't believe in overworking. A man ought to be able to make a living in at least eight hours a day, I think, and I simply cannot sympathize with directors who rush about the studio, tearing their hair and raving about a set not being ready or a necessary prop not having arrived."

"But what do you do when such things happen?" we inquired, curiously.

"Why, I go home and wait till they're ready. It doesn't do any good to get excited about it, does it? Life's too short, and I want to enoy some of it. So I never begin work beroe ten o'clock, I always stop at five, and I never work on Saturday. Of course, other people rave about that, but I'm not here, so I don't obect if they do."

Right here let us say that Mr. Terriss has a charming personality, he smiled most engagingly as he emphasized these views, and he had on a beautifully fitting dark blue suit, so that we thought silently that he probably "gets by" with the delinquencies that other people have to account for. But, he has been responsible for a huge number of Vitagraph successes, such as "The Lion and the Mouse," and he frequently completes his productions in less time than is allowed him. Therefore we knew that there was another reason than charm, for his ability to make pictures without working at night and over the week end and on holidays, etc. His next sentence gave us the explanation.

"I don't like to waste time," he declared. "Very often, when you hear directors saying that they were working until four o'clock that morning, you will find, if you question them closely, that they didn't start until one the preceding afternoon. They come in the morning and stand about discusssing politics or strikes or another picture or something, and then they expostulate because their script isn't ready or they don't like a scene, and they don't "shoot" a foot of film until half the day is over. My scripts are seldom ready, either, but I start work on as much as I have, and in the afternoon we all stop and have tea, and enjoy ourselves."

"Players must like to work with you," we exclaimed.

"Of course they do," he agreed, "and I'm sure they work far better when they're happy and at ease. Strain is bound to show in a picture, it always does, and the most difficult thing in the world is to be perfectly natural. That is why I believe that a pleasant atmosphere has more effect on a picture than many directors realize. And I always make a point of being calm and apparently satisfied no matter how important a scene may be. It doesn't do any good to try to bully an inexperienced actor into doing what you want him to do. He grows more nervous every minute and you lose the very thing you're striving for. I like to know my company very well, so that they will feel absolutely at home and natural on the sets, and I'm certain it shows on the screen."

He laughed again. "Do you know," he went on, "Last summer I worked in the studio only twelve days. All the rest of my scenes were exteriors, and I took most of them near my home at Bayshore. There are magnificent homes there, good examples of every sort of architecture that one could want, so that it's an easy matter to find the right locale for one's story. And thanks to the chances I've had for travel, I know how places ought to look to represent any corner of the earth. I've been around the world twice, and I have an enormous book of photographs that I took, so that I can refer to it whenever I need to refresh my memory. I consider that book one of my most valuable assets."

Places and fresh air and scenery are among Mr. Terriss' hobbies. So, of course, he enjoys his exterior scenes. And it was delightful to find some one in the busy rush of New York who admitted that he had time to enjoy his boat and his car, and wasn't so tired that nothing ever pleased him. We don't care in the least if the story does set a bad example that other directors may follow.

As for his plans, he expects to make only special productions, and is contemplating a trip to London and the continuent in the spring, to make some European productions for Vitagraph. With his knowledge of the country, he will be particularly well qualified to join the producers who are already eastward bound. As a parting word, we heard him tell his assistant that he thought his latest picture, "The Climbers" had turned out exceptionally well, and he was looking forward to a most successful showing.

Screen Work Play? Ask Ruby de Remer

THE Gaumont feature picture play, "His Temporary Wife," with Ruby DeRemer in the title role, is finished—and until she starts her next engagement which despite rumors and announcements Miss DeRemer says is not fully decided upon, what will Ruby do?

Just after her final scene—before the "good byes" and "wish you luck" were being said, Ruby was asked "What now?"

"You mean where do I go from here," she questioned, quoting a familiar line, "well, first I shift the responsibility of getting my belongings into their proper places upon someone else—for I am too tired to do anything but climb into my ear and say 'home.' Then when I arrive there I will arouse myself long enough to say 'goody' and 'tumble in' for a sixty-hour nap. It will be glorious not to 'hate to get up in the morning.'"

From "Confession," the National Film Corporation production featuring Henry Walthall

Gets Credit for "The Confession" Excellence

BERTRAM BRACKEN is given by President William Parsons and Isadore Bernstein of the National Film Corporation of America full credit for the excellence of the production of the Hal Reid stage play. "The Confession," which stars Henry Wadham, and which was sold recently for the highest initial payment of any film to date. Bracken reported about five weeks for the production of this picture, and it will require at least two weeks for the editing.

The success of Director Bracken points out that experience is the best teacher for one who wishes to direct pictures. He has been in the show business since a boy, having first been a performer with a wild west show, because of his ability as a western rider. From there he went to the speaking stage, and for the past ten years has been in pictures, first as actor, but for the most part as director. His first exceptional position was that of managing director for the Lubin Tour of the World. Later he directed for Lubin in Los Angeles, was with Fox for two years, directed Henry Walthall and Billy Elliott for Balboa, and has been director for Walthall for the past year for National, as well as having made "The Code of the Yukon," starring Mitchell Lewis. While with the Fox organization, Bracken was the director of Theda Bara. One of his noteworthy productions with Walthall recently released was "The Boomerang."

Will Direct Catherine Curtis Productions

GEORGE FOSTER PLATT, the noted stage director, who produced the Helen Kellar picture, "Deliverance," has been engaged for the direction of Catherine Curtis' productions, according to an announcement made in Los Angeles by Miss Curtis who in addition to being starred in its forthcoming pictures, heads the organization named after her.

Mr. Platt has had a wide stage experience, having been an actor, stage manager in San Francisco and Milwaukee, a playwright and stage producer, his latter activities having begun with the rehabilitation of the Madison Square theatre, New York City.

His chief prominence came through his connection with the New theatre in New York, where he staged many of that institution's successes, including "The Blue Bird," "The Thunderbolt," "Sister Beatrice," and others. From the New theatre he became associated with the Little theatre, where he produced among others, "The Pigeon," "Snow White," and the Anatole series.

Mr. Blatt is now in Los Angeles, and is in conference with Miss Curtis regarding her initial production.

"A sizable affair of 24 pages, printed on high grade stock, it may be kept for a reference book indefinitely after the timely value of it has waned.

"'Selection, not censorship, the solution,' is the argument which the Board advances for the solution of the greatest problem confronting the industry, and the pamphlet contains a list of approximately 900 photoplays which have been selected . . . as suitable for universal presentation."

"Up-to-Date List"

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

ALL of Vitagraph West Coast companies have returned from location work and vacations with the result that both serial companies, the two dramatic companies and the four comedy units are crowding the stages to their capacity.

The cast of the forthcoming Earle Williams feature has been filled and under the direction of Chester Bennett, production is well under way on "The Far East," a story by H. H. Van Loan. In Mr. Williams' support are Edward McWade, Margaret Loomis, T. S. Guise, Barbara Tennett, Rudolph Valentina, John Elliott, Yuki Aoyama and Mrs. Margaret McWade.

Severe scorching, and, in some cases, painful burns, were suffered by every member of the company working under the direction of David Smith, in staging the fire scene of "Pegeen," the forthcoming Bessie Love feature. In order to obtain some double exposure, close-ups were made of the fire, and the heat was so intense that cameramen forced to stick to their posts, as well as Director Smith, who stood near by,. resembled persons with severe cases of sunburn.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

A NEW mystery story which is expected to duplicate the thrills in "The Grim Game," is being prepared for Houdini, whose arrival is expected on September 15th. Production will be begun under the direction of James Cruze by the first of October.

On completion of his work in "It Pays to Advertise," within a week or two, the final scenes of which will be made in Chicago, Bryant Washburn will begin stellar work in "Too Much Johnson," a William Gillette farce to be directed by Donald Crisp.

Ethel Clayton's next starring vehicle is to be "The Thirteenth Commandment" from the play by Rupert Hughes. She is at present at work at the Morosco studio in "More Deadly Than the Male," under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, who will have charge of her next feature.

Continuing in production are "Why Change Your Wife," Cecil B. deMille's companion piece to "Don't Change Your Husband," in which Gloria Swanson and Tom Meighn have leading roles, and the William C. deMille special feature "The Tree of Knowledge" which has Major Robert Warwick and Wanda Hawley in the leading roles, and which includes in its support Kathleen Williams, Irving Cummings and Tom Forman.

Fox Studio Doings

A HEAVY tragedy which is declared to be the strongest vehicle in which she yet has been starred, will form the basis for the forthcoming production for Madlaine Traverse. The story now is in preparation, but its title and theme are being withheld. Scott Dunlap, who has been directing Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in comedy dramas, will have charge of the production as a result of correspondence between Sol M. Wurtzel, studio manager and William Fox.

Scenes of artists' life in Sheridan Square, New York City, are being staged by Director Howard M. Mitchell in the direction of his newly begun Peggy Hyland feature "A Girl in Bohemia."

Director Frank R. Beal is finishing the "Devil's Riddle" in which Gladys Brockwell is starred, and is said to be making an elaborate production. Upon completion of this picture Miss Brockwell will begin work on a highly emotional story which has been given the temporary title of "Flames of the Flesh."

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of William Fox Sunshine Comedies is author of a story on which he is collaborating with Edward Cline in that director's production of a two reel comedy being made at Balboa Beach. Polly Moran is prominent in her character of Sheriff Nell, while Slim Sommerville, Dave Norris, Mrs. LaVarnie and the comedy bathing girls are included.

About Metro Players

FOUR new productions either have been begun or are in the course of preparation at the Metro Studio, as a result of the recent completion of their big starring vehicles.

Viola Dana will have the leading role in the Japanese fantasy, "The Willow Tree," in which she will have the stage role created by Fay Bainter.

Mr. P. Staulcup, technical director, is at present at work designing and constructing a Japanese estate for the production.

Bert Lytel's next vehicle, having completed "Lombardi, Ltd.," will be "The Right of Way," picturized from the famous novel of the Canadian Northwest, by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Kathryn Adams will appear as the heroine in "The Best of Luck," the Drury Lane thriller, which is to be produced by Screen Classics, Incorp. Ray Smallwood will have direction.

Production has been begun of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," with Jack Mulhall in the leading role. Alice Lake has the leading feminine role, and continuity was written by Finis Fox, of which will be directed by John In May Allison is taking a vacatio having completed her final scenes "Fair and Warmer." and is awaiti production of "The Walkoffs," t stage play by Frederick and Fan Hatton.

Universal Newsette

WITH three feature productio either newly begun, or in t preparatory stage, three others neari completion or in the process of editio and with several feature serials a short subjects under way, productio activities at Universal City are at high point.

Attention of studio executives ten porarily is centered on the forthcon ing expedition to the Orient of Mar Walcamp, her Director, Henry M Rae, and their company to film t serial, "The Petal of Lao Tze." T first episode has been made at t studio, and the entire company inclu ing Harlan Tucker, leading mar Otto Lederer and Wadsworth Harri heavies; George Hively, scenari writer, and a technical staff were t sail from Seattle on September 13th.

Work on the eight-reel Priscill Dean feature "The Virgin of Stam boul," soon will be begun from a stor by H. H. Van Loan and script by Wil iam Parker, under the direction o Tod Browning. Director Browning i supervising Mary MacLaren's currer feature "The Pointing Finger."

Director Jacques Jaccard has com pleted "Cassidy of the Air Lanes," th aerial feature starring Lieutenant C L. Russsia Will Soon be a Gold Mine for American Manufacturers

Says Herbert Griffin Recently Returned from that Country

AFTER seventeen months in different parts of Russia and Czecho-Slovakia, Herbert Griffin has returned to take up his pre-war work with the Nicholas Power Co. In his work as head of the Motion Picture Bureau of the Y. M. C. A. with headquarters at Vladivostok Mr. Griffin has had an unusually fine opportunity to see Russian conditions as they truly are. With the idea of learning first hand the absolute truth concerning the country of the ex-czar and also to find out its possibilities for American trade a NEWS representative saw Mr. Griffin at the home of the Cameragraph.

The Motion Picture Bureau of which, as has been said, Mr. Griffin was head, came under the control of the Lecture Bureau, and is now operated by the Community Motion Picture Bureau. The idea of the Lecture Bureau was to provide entertainment for soldiers of any and all nationalities in that part of the world. That such entertainment was furnished, even though at times a stupendous task, certainly speaks well for Mr. Griffin and the men he trained to help.

In telling of the apparatus needed to put on a picture show in Siberia, Mr. Griffin said:

"We rigged out American freight cars as a combination motion picture machine shop and power plant. To furnish the current we had a 30 amp. Imsco gas engine set and an Exide storage battery. With this power plant and a Powers machine equipped with a 30 amp. Edison lamp we obtained wonderful results. At times we ran shows to an audience of over 3,000 soldiers grouped around on the sides of a natural ravine. Just to show you the kind of show we put on, I remember clearly where at one place to accommodate the crowd we had to throw a 12 x 14 picture over 200 ft. After seeing what the Incandescent lamp did there I can hardly believe a man when he says that the lamp is not suited to any but the very small theatres. On that night the picture was so clear at 220 ft. that people a mile away watched it through glasses."

Having created a number of traveling shows it was necessary to procure projections. This was done, according to Mr. Griffin, by carefully instructing fifty Russians until they were able to do the work mechanically.

As long as initiative was not required they were very successful.

One of Mr. Griffin's statements in speaking of the type of films demanded by the natives was peculiarly interesting.

"We found," he said, "that the peasants and country folks were most interested in Industrial films, especially those which showed how farming or manufacturing was being carried out in America. They didn't care much for dramas, but they 'ate up' Industrials."

On the other hand the soldiers wanted the same sort of pictures that the doughboy demanded, the well played drama sprinkled with high class comedies.

Thinking perhaps that Mr. Griffin's observations as regards trade possibilities might be of interest manufacturers in this country he was asked to say a few words on the subject.

"I am thoroughly convinced," he said, "that the market in Russia for American machines is a wonderful one and one filled with great possibilities. It is absolutely necessary however, to have your goods on hand where the buyers can look them over. The people there are naturally distrustful of everyone, because of the fact that they have been oppressed for so long. But if the trader can show them the goods he has for sale they are quick buyers. It is well though for American manufacturers to remember that the salesman must be able to speak the language of the native, if he intends to have any success at selling.

Mr. Griffin had an excellent opportunity to observe the general condition of amusement houses in the cities he visited. He found the theatres in the larger cities about 8 or 10 years behind the United States insofar as development was concerned. The projectionists were turning out fair work but as is usual with that race, they were doing it mechanically. Most of the projectors were enclosed in sheet iron booths. That was particularly necessary in Russia as fire-protection facilities have been but slightly developed. For instance in Vladivostok, a city of 200,000 population there was one auto fire truck. But after responding to a call of fire the truck was practically useless since Vladivostok is a city of no sewers or water mains and whatever water is used for any purpose had to be brought from outside the city in gasoline cans swung from the shoulders of the coolies. Thus if water did not happen to have been carried to the fire the fire apparatus was utterly helpless.

In this city of Vladivostok the city supply of electricity was so poor and unreliable, according to Mr. Griffin, each theatre had to have its own power plant. Otherwise it would have been a pretty difficult task to have run a show through without interruption.

In considering the immensity of the task he must have had before him in putting on many shows in different parts of Siberia it would seem that Mr. Griffin would have had but little time for other purposes. But, as it turns out, motion picture exhibiting was but one of his sidelines.

For instance he collected the material for and built a complete motion picture laboratory. His equipment consisted of two B & H printers, two up-to-date cameras, the necessary drying drums and developing and fixing tanks. Water for this purpose had to be carried from distant wells just as for other purposes, and while the water was "death to drink" without boiling it seemed to function with excellent results in the production of pictures.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Production Practically Ceased During War But Arc Controllers are Now Coming Back on Market

The First Article of a Series Describes Design and Operation of "Speedco"

WITH the opening of the new Newman theatre in Kansas City a few weeks ago there was brought to light a brand new arc controller. The Precision Machine Company, who made and installed the controllers installed in that million dollar house had been working for some time on an arc controller design which incorporated many new features entirely lacking in other controllers. In line with their usual policy the controller was not put out until it had passed through every conceivable test at the factory. It had been used for some time in their model theatre on East Thirty-fourth street and there it was seen long before the finished equipments were shipped to the Newman theatre.

At that time and even up to the present we have been requested not to describe the device nor to point out its many features as the Simplex factory has not been in a position to supply the demand for the controllers which is sure to be made upon it as soon as they are ready in quantity for the market.

In the meantime comes the news from the E. E. Hilton Company of Chicago, that the Speedco Arc controller, which has been practically defunct, due, we believe, to its former factory having been taken over for war purposes, will now be made at the Hilco plant. This will mean that the high standard set by the previous Speedco makers will be maintained in equipments to be put out by the new manufacturers.

There are a large number of Speedco controllers now in use and giving excellent satisfaction. Supply dealers have received requests for additional units, but have been unable to supply them. Such a state of supply and demand indicates that the field for the arc controller is broadening. At first the thought in the minds of altogether too many managers was that the projectionist had nothing else to do other than manipulate the arc, so why take that little task away from him. To them it seemed that an arc controller would only give the projectionist more of a chance to loaf on his job.

But that type of manager is steadily growing less. The new type realizes that if much of the routine work of the projectionist can be eliminated by automatic devices the man will have more time to attend to the finer points of projection, which means a better picture on the screen.

Anticipating a continually increasing demand for controllers the NEWS will print a series of articles covering the various types now on the market and those that will make their appearance in the meantime. The first one to be described and explained will be the Speedco appearing in this issue. Others will be presented as soon as data can be secured and arranged

The Speedco Arc Controller

The Speedco arc controller consists of the controlling mechanism proper and a 1/12 h.p. direct current motor, the two units being coupled together mechanically. The measurements over all are 6 in. by 7 in. by 17 in.

The motor used with this outfit has been designed to be extremely sensitive to changes in voltage, for of course, in the variations of the voltage lies the power of the controller to adjust the arc. At 50 volts the motor consumes approximately one half an ampere, which indicates the slight current consumption as compared to the current demanded at the arc itself. For this reason there is no ground for the argument against its use because of its cost of operation.

In order to receive the fluctuations in arc voltage the motor is shunted across the arc terminals at the machine switch. And as the motor changes its speed the controller mechanism must follow because of the coupling connecting them.

It is needless, however, to point out that the motor is but a small part of the whole device as far as importance is concerned. In the controller proper is found the vital mechanism. The motor should be sensitive to the slightest change in arc voltage but there its duty ends. At that point the controller picks up the function and makes a success or failure of the equipment.

In a few words, the Speedco controller consists of a centrifugal governor, a spring actuated pawl and a differential resembling the type found in automobiles. Under normal operation the spring holds the pawl away from the gear which it actuates but when the motor speeds up, due to increased arc voltage the governor weights are thrown outward by centrifugal force and press against the spring. This allows the pawl to make contact with its gear and hold it stationary. By holding this gear from rotating, the differential gears are allowed to function and they in turn cause a rotation of the driving gear and rod. This rod is connected to the feed handle of the arc and accordingly feeds the carbons together until the voltage has been reduced. With less voltage supplied to it the driving motor naturally slows down, allowing the tension in the spring to draw back the pawl from its gear which stops the feeding instantly. Although the cycle of operation consumes some minutes in description, in action it happens in an instant.

In fact, the manufacturers of the Speedco state that the movement of the carbons at each change are so slight as to be measured only by an accurate micrometer, calibrated to thousandths of an inch.

When the Speedco is received care should be taken that suitable location is selected for it. It should be set up slightly off the floor so that dust and other foreign materials cannot work their way into the revolving parts. The controller proper is provided with an adjustable foot to take up any inequalities in the flooring.

After placing in its proper position behind the lamp house the feed rods and bearing should be connected to the feed handles. This is a simple operation and requires only the removal of one fiber or wooden handle. Over the shaft is slipped the mechanism containing the larger bevel gear and to this is attached the rest of the gearing including the universal joint.

Arc Controllers Installed on Two Machines

Fig. 2
Showing Method of Attachment to Existing Control Rods

With the Speedco outfit there is supplied a switch box in which the fuses for the armature circuits are placed and on the outside of which is a double pole indicating snap switch for controlling the motor. It is not necessary to fuse the field of the motor so that no arrangements have been made for this purpose. The wiring of this switch box is shown in Fig. 3.

The electrical connections between switch box and arc leads vary according to the supply system from which the motion picture machine is fed. There are three separate systems which will be described here, the two wire direct current, the three wire Edison service and the two wire compensarc circuit.

When using the straight two wire d.c. supply system the connections are as shown in Fig. 5. It will be noticed that the terminal marked "Arm" has been carried to a point between the rheostat and the arc and that the rheostat has been placed in the positive wire. These connections are not arbitrary but must be made if the controller is to work satisfactorily. The lead marked "Field" should be carried to a point on the arc side of the machine switch so that when this switch is open

Connections when Supply is Two Wire d. c.

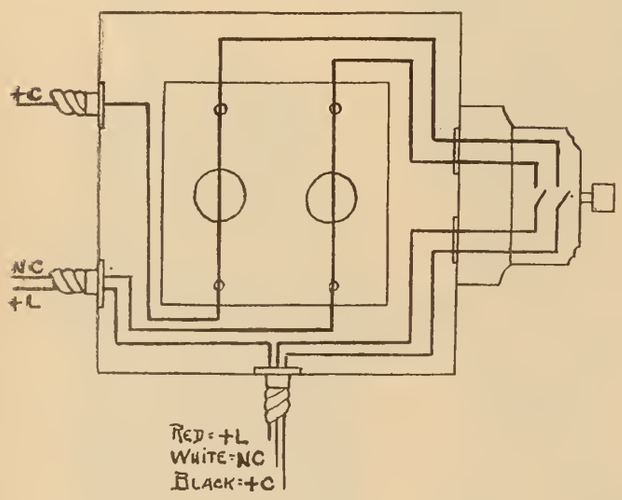

Fig. 3
Diagrammatic Connections of Switch Box

and the projector not operating the controller circuit will be dead. With these connections made there is but one other to consider, that one being the line wire. This lead goes from the switch box to the "dead side" of the machine switch not occupied by the field connection. Since the latter was made to the positive wire the "Line" lead will go to the negative.

For the theatres supplied with the Edison three wire service the connections will be as given in Fig. 4. Both "Line" and "Arm" connections which are in one armored cord must be made on the live side of the operating switch. "Arm" goes to the outside wire and "Line" to the neutral wire. The "Field" connection must be carried either to the service side of the rheostat itself or to the "Dead" side of the "Outside" leg of the switch controlling the rheostat.

The only difference is connections between the straight two wire d.c. system and the two wire system from a compensarc or equivalent lies in the connections to the service side of the controller switch box. A great many theatres have provided themselves with an emergency throw-over switch so that if anything goes wrong with the converting equipment, use may be made of the alternating current circuit. The motor used as part of the equipment of the Speedco is not designed for operating on a.c., and to do so would spell disaster in large capital letters. It is necessary to make arrangements so that this will never happen, a very simple thing to do.

Although what has been said before may lead one to believe that the connections are different when using a compensarc or its equivalent than when using straight d.c. from the service, this is not entirely so, but has been mentioned in that manner to emphasize the necessity for care in connecting up with a converter in the circuit.

When using a compensarc, converter, transverter or similar device, extreme care should be exercised to make sure that the entire set of three wires are connected on the machine side of any cut-over emergency switch so that when the converting apparatus is cut away from the supply lines the controller will be dead. Otherwise the controller motor might be subjected to the a.c. with results as pictured heretofore.

When these connections have been made the question of operation may be considered. First see that the oil is of sufficient height in the controller box. It should be at the level of the brass pipe on the side of the controller near the bottom and may be observed by taking off the brass plug. Next, loosen the knurled thumb screw projecting from the fibre handle which took the place of the old handle on the arc feed rod. This operation disconnects the controller from the feeding mechanism and permits the arc to be fed by hand.

Now throw the lamp switch and before striking the arc throw the controller switch. The motor will start and run at full speed. It is well to allow the motor to run in this way for several minutes each day until the fields have been warmed sufficiently to function properly. If the service is 220 volts d.c. this procedure may be omitted and the arc struck by hand after throwing the lamp switch. Once the arc is struck and parted the arc controller switch may be thrown. Then tighten the knurled thumb screw which was previously loosened. The arc controller will now take over the job of feeding the arc, adjusting it until its size has reached that for which it was set when leaving the factory.

Perhaps it will be necessary to change the size of the arc, which is done by loosening or tightening the adjusting nut at the end of the cover of the controller. By loosening this nut the arc size is reduced and by tightening the opposite is effected. At any time it is desired to move the carbons by hand simply loosen the knurled thumb screw and the lamp becomes manually operated.

Paint for Lamp House

ALEX. FORD of the Bijou theatre, Lincolnton, N. C., asks for the kind of paint to be used on a Simplex Lamp House.

Since Ford doesn't describe the condition of his lamp house it will be assumed that it has either rusted or has been exposed too closely in spots to the heat of an arc, causing the iron to become discolored.

If it is a case of rust, the manufacturers suggest the use of machine oil. Soak a wad of cotton waste in the oil and rub briskly the rusted surfaces. Rusty spots unless of too great depth should disappear under this treatment.

But, if the surface of the house has been badly discolored by the intense heat of the arc it will be necessary to paint the surface either a flat black paint or asphaltum. Both of these substances may be purchased at any paint store.

A Stunt with Carbons

WE would advise even the most expert handlers of projection carbons against trying out the experiment described below. It is related here simply to show that carbons have an unusually wide range of application.

land was the scene of a most unusual carbon test the latter part of June. It seems that a certain vaudeville performer by the name of Dan Nagyfy is using carbons in a most unusual way in his stunt, and he visited the General Office to register the complaint "that National carbons left a black mark on his tongue."

Mr. Nagyfy said he tried other carbons but that they scratched and that he was off them for life, and unless we could do better with Columbias they would be in the same class.

Following is an extract from a circular letter which Mr. Nagyfy uses to advertise his act: "One of the most daring things ever attempted by any performer of novelties of this description is done by the man with the aid of two white hot carbons. The carbons are first heated to a degree that is guaranteed to eat its fiery way through iron. Then when the ends of the carbons are so hot that even spectators in the audience are forced to turn their faces away while holding them for examination, the man draws the sizzling points across his tongue."

Almost unable to believe that the man was perfectly sane a number of interested spectators watched Mr. Nagyfy repeat his stunts a number of times until he found a National carbon that would satisfy his most unusual specifications.—From "Carbon News."

Watch for Stolen Mechanisms

THE News has just received the following notice from Mr. Mueller of Chicago, Illinois:

"A reward of $50.00 will be given for the arrest and conviction and return of the mechanisms stolen from the Broadway theatre, 5206 Broadway, and the Leland theatre, 4716 Lincoln avenue, Chicago. Two of the mechanisms were Simplexes No. 8267 and No. 8297. The remaining two mechanisms were Motiograph No. 2165485 and No. 2165475."

If these mechanisms are offered for sale to any readers of this notice we would suggest that they get in touch immediately, by telegraph, if possible, with Mr. Mueller at either of the above theatres

Camphor Ice for Emulsion Trouble

C. W. JASTRUM, of Pecatonica, Illinois, says: "I notice Clarence Leland of Sullivan, Illinois, has trouble with new film. Your remedy of using leather may be all O.K. where new film is frequently encountered, but around here we only get a new film occasionally, and up until about two years ago used wax. But then a traveling operator tipped me off to the camphor ice, and I have had real good luck with it. Has any one else used it, and how does it work for them?"

N. A. M. L. Slides

OR the benefit of W. Lane, chief at the Star theatre, Humble, Texas, and others who have asked about N. A. M. L. slides we will say that such slides may be obtained from Mr. Chas. W. Dorr, 41 Sargent street, Winthrop, Mass. The charge is 30 cents. It is better to send your orders direct to Mr. Dorr.

Alone in Its Class

TALK about your portable machines! Here is one beside which the real, so-called portable machine looms up like an ocean liner beside a harbor tug. But size is not of particular importance, especially in projection machines. This pygmy has been in use for over a year and according to its designer and "projectionist," George A. McGuire, is running as sweetly as on the day he first cranked her up. He isn't bothered with emulsion on his tension shoes; his condensers never crack; his shutter is always well timed and ghosts are an unknown quantity.

But you're interested in the machine, so here goes the story of its life, just as Mr. McGuir publicity man sent it in.

In the days before it occurred to anyone to that motion pictures were still in their infan the old peep-hole bioscope was the only projecti machine. Nowadays, even in the preparation the highly perfected Screen Classics, Inc., spec productions, the peep-hole machine still has place.

It is all because Maxwell Karger, Screen Classics Director General is what his fellow worke

Mr. McGuire using his new invention

when one scene flashed into another, and when a subtitle gave the spoken words of an actor, his head cutter, George A. McGuire, decided to obtain a machine that would enable him to examine minutely the film, each frame of which is only an inch wide and three-quarters of an inch high.

An eyepiece had sometimes been used for this purpose, but the instrument was trying on the eyes, enlarged the picture only a little, and did not give the illusion of motion that projection does. Mr. McGuire had heard of a device that alleviated these difficulties, but he had never seen one. He therefore drew up his own plans, and a machine was constructed in the studio laboratories in Hollywood from parts of an old projecting machine and of a Pathe camera.

The crank and intermittent claw movement of the camera draws the film under a microscope, formerly the lens of a projecting machine. A small electric light globe and an extension cord with push-switch and plug socket, complete the apparatus. The device was built a year ago and still serves its purpose.

What is Best Signal?

F. T. M. says:

Please tell me what kind of a signal to use to show the end of a reel?

Reply: The eye is a far better signal than the ear. Don't depend on any audible indicator to do the work for you. Your place is at the porthole watching the screen. Therefore, your signal should be received from the screen.

To do this and do it correctly it is necessary to screen your films before the theatre opens. When you come to the end of each reel, write down a short description of the scene, thus making a "cue sheet." After running the films through a few times the "cues" will be remembered and the "cue sheet" may then be done away with.

A "cue sheet" is the best reel signal that has as yet been devised.

We'd All Be on the Warpath Then

TODAY upon reading the latest copy of your publication, in fact the first one I have read in a long time, I note where you have an organization under way which is named N. A. M. L. Now, if this body can get results by team work, as I understand that every man wearing a button is pledged to care for the film to the best of his ability, a long felt want will be taken care of. I am very glad to see this organization taking form. I have been in the game in the operating end since 1907 and believe me some of the stuff I have had to handle would have made a wooden man sick. I only wish you had as one of your by-laws that any member attending a theatre at any performance excepting the first show of the day and seeing a film projected on the screen of this theatre containing misframes can, on displaying his button to the operator of said theatre (providing this operator be a member also) collect a forfeit of $———, amount to be agreed upon. I think this little amendment would also help a whole lot and any misframes would be the fault of the man at the machine because he is allowed one show to "get set."

I close in wishing more power to this organization and hope that it gets what it is going after. You may send me a button when you receive them.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK PAYNE,

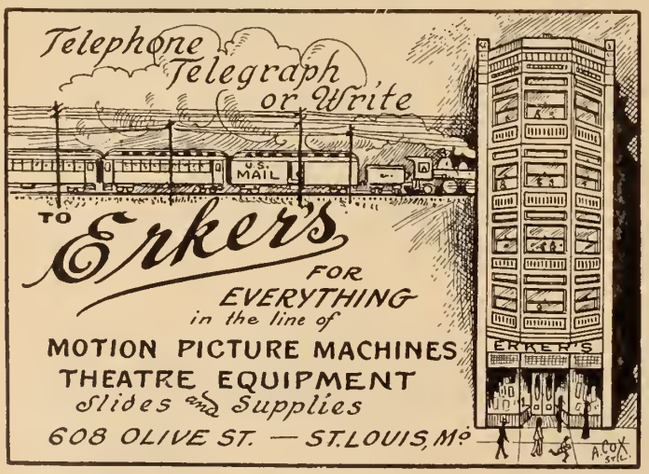
Condenser Breakage

C. T. of Midland, Mich., is in trouble:

"I am in trouble. Serious? No, and yes.

I am working on a Powers 6A and 6B machine with alternating current, using the combination A. C. Special White Flame Carbon, 220 volts, 60 amps., ¾-inch carbon.



My Condensers break continually. The intense heat simply burns a hole through the condenser and breaks it in from 15 to 30 minutes. I have tried all makes of condensers, also as many different adjustments as possible on my arc.

At the other theatre here I use direct current and have experienced no trouble of this kind. I temper all condensers before putting them in.

I find your Projection Department very valuable and interesting.

Answer:—Have you examined your machine closely to see that there isn't a blast of air blowing the heat from your arc directly against the condensers? In a case of your kind where the condensers break persistently without any special reason the cause is more often than not found in the ventilation of the room anl lamp house.

If you have looked carefully into this possibility, you had better get another combination of condensers and try to get your arc further back from the condenser. In your letter you neglected to give your condenser sizes.

Six Color Cinematography

It will be clear from the above that although the positive film is projected with the aid of two primary color filters only, the projection effects a wider range of color tints than has been possible with any other method, but by the method of taking the pictures it is claimed that it is possible to enhance still more the variety of tints in the color combinations by utilizing in projection a recurring color screen having four openings, two of which are filled with red color filters, each being of a different shade, for instance, pure red and orange-red; the other two openings of the screen filled with green color filters, likewise differing in shade, a blue-green and yellow-green, and so arranged to move in relation to the film that as one picture image-section appears at the gate of the projector, one color-filter passes in the path of the light. Thus, in one complete revolution of the color screen four picture image-sections will have passed the gate, thus providing means whereby the picture image-sections of red color selection can be alternately colored by pure red and orange-red filters and the images of green, yellow and bue color selection can be colored by alternating blue-green and yellow-green filters.

In the drawings, Fig. 1 is a diagrammatic view showing a section of the film and the relation of the picture image-sections to the picture-taking screen when the film is regarded as a negative and to the projection screen when the film is regarded as a positive; Fig. 2 is a view showing a positive film with its picture image-sections operatively related to the color screen used in projection; Fig. 3 is a view showing a section of a negative film and the relation of the picture image-section to the picture-taking screen and the relation of the image-sections of the negative film to the tinted corresponding image-sections of the positive film and to the positive film projection screen when the film is regarded as a positive; and Fig. 4 is a similar view showing a positive film in four tints.

Referring to Fig. 1, A designates sufficient of a film to include a group of picture image-sections of which alternative sections 1 are red color sections, as designated by the letter R, and the sections 2, 3 and 4 intermediate adjacent sections 1 are green, yellow and blue color sections, as designed by the letters G, Y and B. Adjacent to the film, which is to be regarded as a negative, is a color screen S which moves in synchronism with the film by any approved manner and is employed in taking of the moving pictures. This screen has three red color filers 1a, which are substantially of a color selection of the same wave-length, through which the picture sections 1 of the film group are exposed. The screen also has green, yellow and blue filters 2a, 3a and 4a respectively, arranged in alternate relation to the red filters. The relation of the color filters to the picture image-sections can be traced by the connecting arrow lines 5.

In Fig. 1 is shown the screen S, which is used in projecting the moving picture image-sections. This screen has two filters, 6 and 7, which are red and green, as designated by the letters R and G. This screen is moved in such relation to the film A, which is assumed to be a positive in this explanation of the screen S^1, that the red filter 6 will register with the successive red image-sections 1 of the film and the green filter 7 will register alternately with the green, yellow and blue picture sections 2, 3 and 4, this relation being indicated by the arrow lines 8 and 9, respectively.

Fig. 2 shows a portion of a negative A with two groups of moving picture sections, and the projecting screen S has two groups of red and green filters designated R^1—G^1 and R^2—G^2, respectively. The relation in which these various filters register with the image-sections of the film can be traced by the arrow lines designated respectively g^1—r^1, g^2—r^2.

It will be clear by reference to Fig. 2 that the picture image-sections of green, yellow and blue color selection in one group of six picture image-sections are differently affected by the G^1 and G^2 filters than they are in the next following group. In a given group, for instance, the picture image-sections of green and blue color selection are affected by the G^2 filter and the picture image-section of yellow color selection is affected by the G^1 filter, but in the next following group the order reverses—the picture image-sections of green and blue color selection will be affected by the G^1 filter and the picture image-section of yellow color selection by the G^2 filter. Also, in every group, that every other picture image-section of red color selection is affected by the R^1 filter and the intermediate picture image-sections of red color selection by the R^2 filter.

In further reference to the drawings, Fig. 2 illustrating the projecting method with four filters, the R^1 is a pure red and the R^2 is an orange-red filter; the G^1 is a yellow-green filter and the G^2 a blue-green filter. Assuming that the screen revolves to the left, the R^1 filter will follow the G^1 and the R^2 filter will follow the G^2, and when in combination with the differently color-selected picture image-sections, projected at a speed of about thirty pictures per second, each two successive picture image-sections are alternately colored by the red and green filters and are overlapped by persistency of vision, thus forming pairs, the color combination of which are being successively varied, due to the changing relation of the different color filters in combination with the varied color selections of the picture image-sections, for example, as shown in the drawing, the film passing downward in a given group of six picture image-sections, beginning with a picture image-section of red color selection and the R^2 filter, the R^2 and G^2 filters effect the picture image-sections of red and green selection, whereas in the following group of six picture image-sections the picture image-sections of red and green color selections will be affected by the R^1 and G^1

Transformers were never known to burn out a lamp.

We challenge successful contradiction of this statement. Some dealer who has his own axe to grind has made a statement to one of our distributors that lamps have been burned out on account of the transformer. COME OUT IN THE OPEN AND MAKE THAT STATEMENT IF YOU DARE.

Project-A-Lite Regulators are also furnished for direct current at any voltage desired down to the 32-volt battery or small generator systems.

We manufacture and FULLY GUARANTEE both transformers and adapters to be free from mechanical or electrical defects and to do the work for which they are designed.

We quote verbatim a part of one dealer's letter to us:
"Why the regular dealers do not care to push your equipment is because in doing so he is losing the cream of the business in lamphouse parts, such as condensers, lugs or terminals, carbon jaws, etc." Right here we want to say that there are not many dealers who do this, most of them are honest, upright men who will give the exhibitor the best on the market for his use, but the letter we quote tells you the reason, Mr. Exhibitor, why some dealers are small enough to knock any device that SAVES MONEY FOR YOU.

Look into the Project-A-Lite devices for economy and service—it's there all the time.

Write us for information; many are doing it and we are busy telling them what we can do with Project-A-Lite. We want to tell you, too.

filters; likewise, in the first group the picture image-sections of red and yellow color selection will be affected by the R^1 and G^1 filters, whereas in the following group the picture image-section of red and yellow color selection will be affected by the R^2 and G^2 filters; so, also, in the first group, the picture image-sections of red and blue color selection will be affected by the R^2 and G^2 filters, and in the following group the picture image-sections of red and blue will be affected by the R^1 and G^1 filters.

Referring to Fig. 3, N designates a negative film and S a color screen substantially the same as described in connection with Fig. 1.

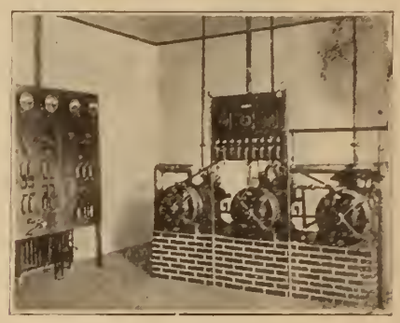
P designates the positive film, of which 1^P are the picture image-sections corresponding to the red section 1 of the negative film N, the gelatine of which is tinted red. The picture image-sections 2^P, 3^P and 4^P correspond respectively to the sections 2, 3 and 4 of the negative film, the gelatine of which is tinted green; with a positive thus tinted projection is made without the use of recurring color filters.

In Fig. 4 the screen S and negative film N are the same as in Fig. 3, but a greater length of the negative is shown to bring out the relation of several groups of picture image-sections in the positive film P^1.



To effect a wider range of color tints it is possible to enhance still more the variety of mixtures of different wave-lengths by tinting my film into two different tints of red color and two different tints of green color, for instance, pure red and orange-red, blue-green and yellow-green, designated as R^1—G^1 and R^2—G^2.

It will be clear by reference to Fig. 4 that in the positive film P^1 the picture image-sections of green, yellow and blue color selection in the group a of six picture image-sections are differently affected by the G^1 and G^2 tints than they are in the next following group b. In a given group, for instance, the picture image-sections of green and blue color selections are affected by the G^2 tint and the picture image-section of yellow color selection is affected by the G^1 tint, but in the next following group the order reverses—the picture image-section of green and blue color selection will be affected by the G^1 tint and the picture image-section of the yellow color selection by the G^2 tint. Also, in every group, every other picture image-section of red color selection is affected by the R^1 tint and the intermediate picture image-sections of red color selection by the R^2 tint.

Fig. 4 illustrates the film ready for projection in four tints. The R^1 is a pure red tint and the R^2 is an orange-red tint; the G^1 is a yellow-green tint and the G^2 is a blue-green tint, and when projected at a speed of about thirty pictures per second, the picture image-sections bearing their respective tints are overlapped by persistency of vision, thus forming pairs, the color combinations of which are successively varied, due to the changing relation of the different color tints in combination with the varied color selections of the picture image-sections. For example, as shown in the drawing, assuming the tinted film travels downwardly, beginning with the picture image-section of red color selection bearing the R^2 tint, it will be plain that in a given group of six picture image-sections the R^2 and G^2 tints affect the picture image-sections of red and green selection, whereas in the following group of six picture image-sections the picture image-sections of red and green color selection will be affected by the R^1 and G^1 tints, as shown in the drawing.

What is a Perfect Theme?

REPEATEDLY the question is asked, "What should a musical interpretation of the picture be?" and the answer logically is, "Music for the picture should be an interpretation and development of the subject matter, just as the symphony is a musical development of the original theme or motif.

What is a theme or motif? A musical theme in motion pictures is more or less based on the same principle as all famous composers introduced in opera. Massanet, Verdi, Puccini and others in their music scores always associated a certain music theme or motif with the appearance of the leading characters upon the stage. This effective musical device has great possibilities in the picture drama and is valuable in giving unity to music and dramatic action. The picture musician has wide freedom in choice of his "theme" material. Most important to remember, however, is that the first requisite is a genuinely melodious theme, one which will bear repetition without becoming monotonous to the audience or performer in general.

A theme such as that described may be varied in tempo and played either ff. or pp., as the varying of the stage action may demand. It will make the role with which it is identified "stand out." The use of the "leading" theme is naturally best adaptable for the larger and more elaborate picture productions in which the appearance and stage action of principals is broken up to some degree by minor incidents. At all events the use of the theme is an idea on which the intelligent motion picture musician can ring his own variations. Frankly, this cannot be carried out in every picture, for the sole and only reason that few compositions can be manipulated in such a way as described in the above. By this I mean some beautiful andante movements which are suitable for love themes will absolutely lose their musical vaiue if the tempo is changed or the character of the composition the least bit mutilated.

However, such an exceptional opportunity for the development of this idea has just arisen that the editor of these columns feels it should be brought to the attention of all readers.

The general idea of depicting a theme to the action of the screen is to slect one composition and use it in the most appropriate spots, but in many pictures when the leading character is depicted in extremes of emotion, the ordinary selected motif is really inappropriate, because its orchestration is presented only in one definite form.

During my ten years of experience in playing for the picture I must say in very few instances have I been able to adapt a music theme in an appropriate manner to the action of the screen. In every case I have found that a composition published for a certain purpose cannot be phrased or played in every possible way as demanded throughout the varied stages of emotions depicted by the leading character throughout the picture. In a case of the picture mentioned below, entitled "The One Woman," released by Select Pictures Corporation, I have found it impossible to find a composition which could depict all the emotions displayed by the leading character (Mr. Frank Gordon). In some scenes Mr. Gordon is calm, in others he is mentally excited, and in still others he reaches a climax of physical violence where a dramatic agitato is needed. In a case of this kind, to let his calm action predominate, an andante movement would be appropriate for a theme which cannot be brought up to an agitato. In a case where the climax should predominate, an agitato is the most suitable theme, but it can hardly be played as a melodious pp. without spoiling the entire effect of the musical number.

Herbert Voges, organist at the Mall theatre, Cleveland, Ohio

I personally am the owner of a very large music library, and I have been able to find only one composition really suitable and adaptable for a theme, and that is a suite entitled "The Symphonette Suite," by Irene Berge. He has taken an original motif and has arranged it in four distinct parts. The first part is a lento dramatic movement, later changing to an allegro. The second part is a beautiful broad adagietto movement, the third a scherzetto movement, and the concluding part of this symphony is a vivace allegro movement. Readers will quickly see that here is an idealistic development of the "theme" thought because in this composition will be found one motif in almost every musical characteristic. It is high time that some publishers began to issue numbers on the style of the "Symphonette Suite" depicting the various characters probable to appear in the motion pictures.

Song Dedicated to "Some Wild Oats"

THE Joe Morris Music Publishing Co. has published a song called "Some Wild Oats," which was dedicated to the motion picture recently produced by Samuel Cummins of the same name. This song is considered one of the hits of the season and the publishers have started exploiting this music in 14 of the principal cities of the United States.

"Some Wild Oats" which has finally been completed is now ready for exploitation. This picture will be released throughout the country as a road show. The picture was recently screened for physician, clergy and social workers who highly praised and endorsed same.

The Social Hygienic Films Co. of America, Long Acre Building, New York City, will distribute the rights for this production.

4—"Poeme Symphonique," a composition of exquisite tonal beauty, the latest from the pen of Gaston Borch. (Belwin Inc.)

6—"Say—Yoh and Delhi," offered by Boosey & Co., for Band or Orchestra for 25 cents postpaid. The above numbers are two exotics of the Orient. (Boosey & Co., 9 E. 17th St., New York City, N. Y.)

7—"On Miami Shore." A melodious waltz of much charm and grace. (Chappell & Co.)

8—"When The Cherry Blossoms Fall," featured in the New York Broadway hit "The Royal Vagabond." (Carl Fischer-Whitmark.)

9—"The Gates of Gladness," (On the Road to Sunshine Land), a real sunshiny one-step. By the writers of "Have a Smile." (Carl Fischer-Whitmark.)

10—"Madriola," a Spanish one-step, published for orchestra and vocal. This composition was written by Sol. P. Levy famous for his "Hunkatin," a half tone one-step and "That Naughty Waltz," a melodious waltz. (Belwin, Inc.)

Results Claimed by Steinheimer

CONSIDERING the wonderful possibilities as to positions and salaries that there seems to be in playing the pipe organ in theatres, it might be worth while for every pianist and organist who desires to better himself or herself financially to get in touch with Sidney Steinheimer of 145 West 45th street, New York City, N. Y., booking agent and instructor for pianists and organists on theatre organ playing, as the following will show:

Sasa Barberia, a pianist of Brooklyn, N. Y., after receiving only a few months' organ instruction from M. Steinheimer was recently appointed organist in one of New York's largest theatres at a large salary, his work consisting of playing only two hours daily. Also Howard Murphy, a church organist of New York, though receiving only one month's instruction from Mr. Steinheimer on the correct style and repertoire for theatre organ playing is also now playing in one of New York's largest circuit theatres, with great success. Both the above organists are only a few of the many who have received fine theatre positions through Mr. Steinheimer.

Mr. Steinheimer is placing his pupils in some of the finest and largest houses all over the country.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

Barton Organ in Dancing Pavilion

ARTHUR JAY ABRAMS, general sales manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has just made one of the largest sales in the history of his company, selling to the Dreamland Pavilion, a specially constructed Barton Ball Room Organ, built along entirely new lines.

The instrument is designed to add the results of fifteen or twenty musicians to the orchestra, these beting the musicians that ordinarily would be furnishing the foundation for the music, such as the Bass Viols, Cellos, French Horns, Oboes, Violas, etc. The melody instruments, such as Violins, Flutes, Clarinets, Cornets, Trombones and Drums are retained in the orchestra. Or, it can be added to a full fledged orchestra containing all of the different instruments with the result of doubling the foundation or body of the music. It is also possible to use the instrument in combination with other instruments to secure a great number of musical stunts and novelties. It is designed for this purpose only and cannot be played alone. It could be used in a theatre with a ten or twelvepiece orchestra and they would get the result of a Rialto or Rivoli musical organiaztion.

Smith Writes Words for "The Miracle Man"

WHAT is declared to be one of the prettiest songs to appear in many a day, and one destined to attain widespread popularity, is "The Miracle Man," the inspiration for which was received from the George Loane Tucker production which has just started on its triumphal career under Paramount-Artcraft auspices in the foremost motion picture theatres of the country.

The song was published by the firm of Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, whose offices are in the Strand Theatre Building, New York. The music was composed by Jacques Grandei and the words are by no less a celebrity than Harry B. Smith, who wrote the books and lyrics for most of Reginald De Koven's great operatic successes and who has collaborated with many of the foremost song composers for years. Mr. Smith has caught the theme and spirit of the photoplay and is said to have transferred it admirably to his lyric.

The publishers have prepared a complete line of advertising accessories and exhibitors who contemplate booking the picture are advised to get in touch with their office where full information may be obtained regarding window display tie-ups, etc.

THE CIRCLE is running the Stage Women's War Relief series of twelve all-star pictures under the title "Circle's Half-Hour Masterpieces." The first of these productions, "Tom's Little Star," was shown this week in connection with a bill which had three distinct features. One of these productions will be shown each month. Constance Talmadge in "A Temperamental Wife" was the other screen attraction.

MISTER SMITH'S theatre, the distinctive new little downtown movie house, is running full week bills. The Circle is the only other house following this policy regularly. S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle is handling publicity for Mister Smith's. The management has adopted the following catchy motto: "A little theatre with big ideas."

RALPH W. ABBETT, manager of the Universal Film Exchange of Indianapolis, and Cleve Adams, Universal salesman, have returned from a two weeks' vacation in New York, Atlantic City and other eastern towns.

"THE FIRE FLINGERS," the Universal production in which Rupert Julian is featured, played to large houses at the Rialto, the first half of the state fair week. "The Trap," featuring Olive Tell, was played during the latter half of the week and also drew large audiences.

M. Schonberger, presenting the educational department of the Universal Film Company, recently spent several days in Indianapolis in the interest of a Universal one-reel subject furthering the campaign for better roads in Indiana. The Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, the Hoosier State Automobile Association, and all of the newspapers of the city co-operated with Mr. Schonberger and the film was shown in a number of houses in the city.

E. W. PENROD, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, will leave soon on a two weeks' vacation trip.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

OLIVE THOMAS was featured at the Princess theatre September 3 and 4 in "The Follies Girl," a Triangle production. Miss Thomas proved to be a fine drawing card.

EARLE WILLIAMS was the featured player at the Family theatre on September 2 and 3. His picture, "A Gentleman of Quality" was well liked by all who witnessed it.

GRAND patrons were pleased with the September 3 and 4 program at the theatre, for on those days Dorothy Gish was presented in that novel comedy "Boots."

THE Liberty presented Mary Miles Minter in "Wives and Other Wives," on September 3rd.

"A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE" came to the Dreamland on September 3. The star, Mary Boland, was very pleasing.

THE Star theatre's September 3rd program drew extra big houses. It consisted of a feature "Mistaken Identity" with Anita King and a comedy "At the Old Stage Door" with Harold Lloyd.

THEDA BARA in "The Forbidden Path," came to the Family theatre September 4 and 5. As usual the picture was very well attended.

THE Thursday, September 4, program at the Liberty theatre was a Metro production "The Divorcee," starring Ethel Barrymore. The star was well liked in this picture.

KITTY GORDON was featured at the Dreamland on September 5 and 6 in "The Scar" one of her recent pictures.

"CARMEN," with Geraldine Farrar, came back to the Grand on September 5, and played to good afternoon houses and large crowds in the evening.

THE last episode of "Perils of Thunder Mountain" with Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, was shown at the Grand on September 6. This was one of the most successful serials ever shown at the Grand.

ROY STEWART was presented at the Star theatre on September 5, in "By Proxy."

"SPOTLIGHT SADIE" with Mae Marsh, was shown at the Princess on September 5 and 6. Miss Marsh was fascinating in the role of the saintly chorus girl.

BILL HART played at the Star theatre on September 6 in one of his early plays "The Devil's Double." This picture drew good houses, especially during the evening.

"MADAME JEALOUSY" with Pauline Frederick, was shown at the Family on September 6. Miss Frederick's work in this play received much praise.

THE Grand presented Margarita Fisher in "Trixie From Broadway" on September 6.

BERT LYTELL was featured at the Dreamland on September 7 and 8, in "Easy to Make Money." The picture was excellent and entertaining.

Heard In Detroit

THE BROADWAY STRAND opened Sunday with the Sennett girls and Bothwelle Browne in person in a special engagement of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." This picture, with several girls, was shown at the Adams last spring, but the girls failed to give satisfaction. Phil Gelichman booked in the same company that has been appearing at the Ziegfeld, Chicago.

"TILLIE'S PUNCTURED ROMANCE," state rights of which are owned by Minter United Co., is reported as going over especially big in the state. The picture recently broke the summer record at the Detroit on the Campus.

THE DETROIT on the Campus becomes a regular playhouse again next week, playing the Shubert attractions. "Mickey" was revived for the last week of pictures and proved as popular as ever.

"EYES OF THE WORLD" is to be shown at the Broadway Strand for two weeks, H. A. Hawxhurst, of the Globe Film Co., practically leasing the house for this period. The engagement is accompanied by a $6,000 advertising campaign in the newspapers.

CASH HUBBARD has sold out his interests in the General Theatre Display Co. to his former partner, Art Blankmeyer. Chris Kline will be associated with Mr. Blankmeyer and will manage the company.

Never in the history of Detroit have so many pictures been advertised to the extent that they are at present.

THE WASHINGTON THEATRE, under the direction of William Fox, will open on Thursday, September 11, completely re-decorated. There will be a symphony orchestra of thirty pieces. "Checkers" will be the opening attraction, running for ten days, and it will be followed by Tom Mix in "Rough Riding Romance."

"THE MIRACLE MAN" will be shown at the Broadway Strand in October.

THE MYRTLE THEATRE has reopened, J. E. Stocker having had the house enlarged and decorated during the summer.

TAYLOR HOLMES was a personal visitor in Detroit last week, appearing three times daily at the Colonial theatre, where "Upside Down" was being shown. A reception was tendered him by the Triangle exchange at the theatre on Wednesday night. The Colonial adopted a new vaudeville and picture policy on Labor Day.

In Springfield Theatres

THE Vaudette has started on the new pictures for 1919-1920, the first one being Dorothy Dalton in "The Market of Souls." This proved a most attractive offering, and started out to do fine business the week of September 7. The settings were most lavish, the cast fine, and the whole play excellently done. Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss," followed the Dalton picture.

MARY PICKFORD opened a five days' run at the Gaiety on September 7, in "The Hoodlum." The picture more than pleased, and the theatre was a beehive all the time. "A Village Venus," two reel Century comedy, was on the same program. Dorothy Phillips in "Paid in Advance" came after the Pickford picture for two days. Douglas Fairbanks is scheduled to then come in "His Majesty, the American."

"THE MIRACLE MAN," will be given the heaviest advertising campaign ever run by a picture at the Gaiety. It comes on September 21 for one week..

DUSTIN FARNUM in "A Man's Fight," enjoyed three excellent days at the Princess, September 7-8-9. Prizma picture and a Gale Henry comedy were also on the program.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, the Jewel-Universal star, is coming to Springfield in person in "Scandal," a stage production, to be played at the Chatterton.

MABEL WITHEE and Jack Sherill pleased big crowds at the Lyric for two days in "Once to Every Man." The picture went over big simply because it was a good picture. A Christie comedy was on the same bill. For the balance of the week Loper had "A Little Brother of the Rich" and Alice Brady in "Marie, Ltd."

YOU have to hand it to Ben Rovin at the Amuse-U. Ben dug up the three-year old feature, "The Little Girl Next Door," put it on for two days and kept the crowd out on the street all the time. It's a caution the way that man can do business. William S. Hart in "The Captive God," and in "The Silent Man," and William Farnum in "The Heart of a Lion" were other pictures recently shown at the Amuse-U to a handsome profit.

MAE MURRAY in "The Scarlet Shadow" pleased big crowds at the Empress on September 7. Dorothy Dalton and Harry Carey were also booked for the same week in late releases, and Mrs. Duer, manager, predicted that both stars would draw heavy, being great favorites.

"THE RED LANTERN" ran four days at the Royal, and Manager Gus Kerasotes said he was more than pleased with the patronage. The picture had previously run a week at the Princess.

ED MAISEL'S Capitol, the finest theatre on Washington Street, claimed his booking for the week of September 7-13 about the best he has had to date. The pictures ran as follows: Sunday, Charles Ray in "A Nine O'Clock Town;" Monday, Mae Marsh in "Spotlight Sadie;" Tuesday, Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar;" Wednesday, Alma Rubens in "A Man's Country;" Thursday, Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green;" Friday, "Lady Windermere's Fan," a special Triangle play; Saturday, "The Hostage," Paramount with Wallace Reid.

Pearl White, Fox star in a tense moment from an imaginary serial entitled, "Don't let the Child Fall"

"VIRTUOUS MEN," featuring E. K. Lincoln, will come to the Princess on September 21, for a full week's stay.

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT week at the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres was a good one, though the Vaudette was handicapped by having a star the latter half of the week who is unpopular here. Lila Lee in "The Heart of Youth," was the attraction, and it did about as well as former Lee pictures. The first four days went to Dorothy Gish in "Nobody Home," one of the star's most pleasing pictures. The Gaiety had "Fires of Faith" all week, and due to the presence of Eugene O'Brien and Theodore Roberts was able to prosper.

THE Princess had a clean-up week August 31—September 6—with "Better Times" for three days, and Bessie Barriscale in "The Woman Michael Married." With popular Jack Holt appearing with the equally popular Bessie, there was no stopping the crowds from heading for Fifth and Capitol Avenue for four days. It was one of the most satisfactory engagements the Princess has had in some time.

HARRY LOPER'S Lyric enjoyed good patronage for the week of August 31—September 6—with Mae Murray in "The Big Little Person," Hale Hamilton in "The Fourflusher," and Anita Stewart in "Human Desire." Business kept up all week, and the first two days, Sunday and Labor Day, were extra large.

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS," conceded to be D. W. Griffith's most artistic production, has been bought by the Gaiety for Springfield. The price was staggering, according to the management.

W. D. CAVE is dickering for "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and the Mack Sennett bathing girls, and threatens to break out with the announcement any day. The show will play the Chatterton.

LOUIS KERASOTES is suffering terribly these days from a lack of seats—the Savoy being filled all the time and many being forced to turn away because they cannot crowd in. Here is what he had booked for the week of September 7-13: .Sunday, Chapter 14 of "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," a two-reel Jack Perrin feature and a two-reel L-Ko comedy; Monday, Florence Reed in "The Woman Under Oath;" Tuesday, May Allison in "Castles in the Air;" Wednesday, Alma Rubens in "Diane of the Green Van;" Thursday, a special attraction; Friday, "Elmo, the Mighty," and Al Jennings in a western play; Saturday, Louis Bennison in "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U."

KINOGRAMS, the news weekly being used by the Majestic this season, has made a big hit with patrons of Manager Kaufman's pretty playhouse.

THE Royal management says that "Elmo, the Mighty," is a serial that sure does draw the kids. The fifth chapter was shown on September 6, along with a two-reel Pete Morrison feature and a comedy. On Monday, Mary Boland was seen in "A Woman's Experience;" Tuesday, William Russell in "When a Man Rides Alone;" Wednesday, Shirley Mason and Matt Moore in "The Unwritten Code;" Thursday, Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton in "The Prodigal Wife;" Friday, Al Ray and Elinor Fair in "When Love is Love;" Saturday, Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," a Select offering.

BILLIE BURKE in "The Misleading Widow" and Marguerite Clark in "Widow by Proxy" will both be run a full week at the Vaudette.

THE Vaudette has contracted for Hank Mann comedies.

LYMAN HOWE travels will be shown at the Chatterton for three days the latter part of this month. Howe always does well here.

Grand Rapids Theatre Notes

THE IDLEHOUR did a good business with three women stars in one week, playing Pauline Frederick in "The Fear Woman," Bessie Love in "Over the Garden Wall" and Bessie Barriscale in "Her Purchase Price." This theatre makes a specialty of showing films with women stars.

THE APPOLLO theatre, recently purchased by the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., has been reopened after having been closed for a short period for renovation and redecoration.

FANNIE WARD in "Common Clay" drew well at the Isis, as did "Calibre 38," but Annette Kellerman in "A Queen of the Sea" brought a week's receipts up to a substantial mark with a two days' showing.

THE MAJESTIC Gardens gave a whole week to "Eyes of the World," and found the run profitable.

"CHECKERS" had a successful week's showing at Powers' theatre, the racing melodrama proving one of the most popular feature films shown at that house during the summer.

THE TEMPLE "packed 'em in" with "The Struggle Everlasting" and "Stolen Orders."

ELSIE FERGUSON in "The Avalanche" put in a good three days' business at the Strand, as did "A Broadway Saint."

Here and There in Fond du Lac

PAULINE FREDERICK in her latest emotional drama, "The Peace of Roaring River," was the offering at the Bijou September 8 and 9. The picture went over in good shape and the patronage was excellent. This was followed by "Choosing a Wife" on September 10 and 11. "Auction of Souls" was the Bijou offering for the 15, 16 and 17. The price of admission for this engagement was advanced to 15 cents and the war tax.

THE DAVISON theatre, Waupun, put on one of its best program during the week ending Thursday, September 11. The offering on September 5 and 6 was Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance." This was followed by Bryant Washburn in "Putting It Over" and a Mack Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day." On September 8 and 9, D. W. Griffith's "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" drew fine audiences. This was followed by Frank McIntyre in Rex Beach's great story, "Too Fat to Fight."

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD" opened a three days' engagement at the Henry Boyle theatre Thursday, September 11, being presented to good sized audiences. "The Unpardonable Sin" will be the offering at the Henry Boyle on September 20, 21 and 22.

EVELYN NESBIT in "Thou Shalt Not" proved a strong attraction at the Idea theatre on September 10 and 11 and was presented to good business. This program was followed on September 12 and 13 with Harry Carey in "The Ace of Saddles." Manager Vollert declares that the Idea business is keeping right up in spite of the fact that the musicians are out.

THE SCENIC theatre, Waupun, presented an unusually attractive program for the week ending Thursday, September 11. On September 8 its patrons enjoyed Ethel Barrymore in "The Divorce" and a cartoon; on September 5, the program was Betty Barriscale in "Two Gun Betty" and news pictures, while on September 6, 7 and 8 Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" was the attraction and drew good business. This was followed by Helen Chadwick and Franklyn Farnum in "Go Get 'em Garringer."

Gathered in Green Bay

ELSIE FERGUSON was presented September 12-13 in the Artcraft picture, "Eyes of the Soul," in the Colonial theatre. She pleased audiences.

HARRY CAREY played in the Universal film, "A Fight for Love," September 10-11-12-13 in the Grand theatre.

THE New Bijou theatre, opened two weeks ago, played Tom Mix in a Fox special, "Roughriding Romance," and Charlie Chaplin in a two-reel comedy, "A Night in a Show" September 12-13.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was seen in the Paramount film, "Bound in Morocco" in the Orpheum theatre September 12-13-14.

"LIFE'S GREAT PROBLEM," a Stuart Blackton feature, in which Mitchell Lewis plays the leading role, was screened September 12-13 at the Royal theatre.

WILLIAM FARNUM was an attraction September 10-11 at the New Bijou theatre in the Fox film, "The Man Hunter."

They Say in Chicago That—

R. C. SEERY of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, keeps right on making his unannounced trips and coming home with the bacon.

DEBORAH FINNAN is a busy little lady taking care of all the business being heaped on her desk by the First National Exhibitors' Exchange salesman. The lady also wears a smile that would indicate there is something else that makes her happy besides the volume of business the office is doing—Wonder what it could be?

BEN BEADELL, the genial rapid fire sales manager of Select, Chicago office certainly cuts a classy figure now, with his new car, six cylinder Paige and all the "trimmins." When Ben rolls up to a theatre now on business, the manager of the house knows that someone of distinction has arrived. Classy man, classy car, classy pictures and a record for salesmanship, the class and brilliancy of which is dazzling.

J. S. DITTMAN, the popular Freeport, Illinois, impresario has been seen looking over what the Chicago market has to offer in the way of productions.

CHARLES PACINI, Kenosha, flits into Chicago and flits out with a regularity which shows he is always on the job looking over good things for his clientele.

CLYDE QUIMBY of Fort Wayne, Indiana, has been in Chicago, corking things up for the coming season which bids fair to eclipse anything ever experienced in the entire state of Indiana.

ED. BINGHAM and Harry Cohen of the Colonial and Regent theatres, Indianapolis, are elated over the results of the new policy inaugurated at their Colonial theatre. Big pictures, week stands, with the best of music and re-enforced by the well known popular entertainers.

THE new Rembusch theatre, the Ohio, located on Ohio Street, Indianapolis, Indiana, is nearing completion. Under Mr. Rembusch's able guidance, the future of the house is practically assured.

C. EDDY ECKELS, the debonair Chicago head of the Capital Film Company has returned from the great White Way. New York seems to be buzzing in the gentleman's bonnet—Could it be that friend Eckels is thinking of migrating and take up his residence in the city that has lots of big shows, roof gardens n'evathing—Could it be Eddy, tell us, please tell us? We would be lonesome without you.

I. L. LESERMAN, manager of the Universal, Chicago office is looking forward to great things for the big production, "The Right to Happiness," featuring Dorothy Phillips, which opened for a run at the Olympic theatre, Chicago, Saturday evening, September 13th to an audience which packed the house from top to bottom.

"YANKEE DOODLE IN BERLIN" with the Sennett Bathing Girls, has been packing McVickers theatre. Some say it is the picture,, some say it's the girls. Let's say fifty, fifty.

J. W. BURFORD of Aurora, who was supposed to be vacationing, seems to have side-tracked vacation to grab a few feature pictures in Chicago.

MRS. HILBURN, mother of Betty Hilburn, who has been featured in a production made by the Williamson Brothers Submarine Film Corporation, has been in Chicago settling up the affairs of her father, the late Charles Danzinger, owner of the General Film Brokers, who died recently.

THE New Lyric theatre of Indianapolis opened its doors Labor Day with a vaudeville policy. This house has now a seating capacity of 2,000.

MANAGER HERB JOHNSON of the Luna theatre, LaFayette, has purchased the Lyric theatre, Fort Wayne, Indiana, from Oscar Wobrock. It is said the consideration was $20,000. Mr. Johnson figured on taking possession September 15th.

CHARLES SPRAY recently purchased the Grand Opera House at Bluffton, Indiana, from J. Perdue. Mr. Perdue has purchased the Gaiety at Kankakee, Illinois.

CARL LAEMMLE of Universal Film fame, arrived in Chicago on his way east, remaining over for the opening of the production, "The Right to Happiness" at the Olympic theatre.,

ORVAN COHEE, the genial secretary and treasurer of the Capital Film Company, has been working overtime straightening out the volume of business that the company is now doing—Throw the blame on Frank Smith's shoulders, friend Cohee. He's the little boy that has been making rapid fire sales.

THE Birth of a Race Corporation has struck another bump. Mr. and Mrs. Richard T. Piper, owners of ninety shares of the stock, have filed a petition in the U. S. District clerk's office, asking for the appointment of a receiver for the corporation.

SPRAGUE GREEN, the rapid fire salesman, traveling in Indiana for the Beehive Exchange, is making contracts for his service so rapidly that he bewails not being able to write with both hands at once.

INDIANAPOLIS can boast that it has in the opening of a new theatre Labor Day, a house with a name, the uniqueness of which will become the byword in that city. "Mister Smith's theatre"—Some name, and it has attracted not only attention, but capacity at all performances.

NEAL CAYWOOD, the old reliable honorary member of America's great aggregation of P. A.'s is now flivering over the country in his Rohels-Royce, gathering publicity inspiration to be applied to The American Film Company's production, "Six Foot Four"—Go to it Neal. Watch the little squirrels lay in their winter stores, but do it from a distance—You know, old top, those little rascals are keen.

GEORGE HINES, the dean of the managers, has been around Chicago recently, corraling some big feature pictures for his Auditorium theatre, South Bend, Indiana.

ROSE C. CAMEN has moved her desk from the Capital Film Company's offices to Filmcraft, where the lady will do much to brace that organization.

Here and There in Dubuque

THE Liberty theatre has been re-decorated and is now one of the most artistic theatres in the city. The entrance has been done over in stucco color; walls of pastel shades in green and tan replace the old, inartistic paintings. A novel trellis work of leaves and flowers forms an overhead bower. The place is, without a doubt, a theatre where people will enjoy going to see motion pictures.

A NEW theatre is scheduled to open in Dubuque during the third week in September. It is to be called the Little Star, and will be under the management of Manager Bower, who controls the Star theatre.

PRETTY Vivian Martin came to the Grand on Sunday in "A Home Town Girl," a delightful Paramount picture adapted from the story "You Can't Just Wait." Miss Martin is a splendid little actress and appeared to better advantage than ever in this attractive role. Ralph Graves, the leading man, was pleasing.

"SUSPENSE," with Mollie King, was the Sunday, August 31, feature at the Princess theatre. This story, a fascinating mystery play by Isabel Ostrander, drew scores of fans to the theatre, both afternoon and evening.

METRO'S beautiful star, Emmy Wehlan, was presented at the Dreamland theatre on Sunday and Monday, August 31 and September 1, in "The Belle of the Season." Besides this picture a Happy Hooligan comedy "Where Are the Papers" was shown. This bill attracted good houses.

"LIFE'S A FUNNY PROPOSITION" with William Desmond, was shown at the Liberty theatre on Sunday, August 31. Though this was a second run feature, it drew as large crowds as when it was shown at the Dreamland, several weeks previous.

THE Family theatre had as the Sunday, August 31st, feature "The Make Believe Wife" with Billie Burke. Scores of Miss Burke's admirers witnessed this film.

THE Grand celebrated the National Paramount-Artcraft week, August 31 to September 6, by calling the attention of Dubuque picture lovers to the national drive for better motion pictures by half page advertisements in the local papers, and by posters in various shops about town.

MARGUERITE CLARK will draw a full house in Dubuque no matter how old her picture is or what theatre she appears in. This was proved again on Labor Day when she was presented at the Liberty theatre in "The Goose Girl," which has been in Dubuque so often that no one remembers the exact number of times, and drew record houses.

"PAID IN FULL" with Pauline Frederick, held the boards at the Grand on Monday and Tuesday, September 1 and 2. Miss Frederick scored heavily in the leading role, and Robert Cain, Frank Losee and Wyndham Standing received much credit for their good work.

THE Princess had Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass" for September 7.

JACK GARDENER was featured at the Star on Sunday, September 7, in "The Range Boss," a likeable western film.

"TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER," a Vitagraph production featuring Alice Joyce, was shown at the Star on September 8.

Interesting Items of Elgin

LATE August showings at the Grand included Kathleen Williams and Elliott Dexter in "We Can't Have Everything," Shirley Mason in "Good-bye, Bill" and Charles Ray in "Nine O'Clock Town."

SHOWINGS at the Star theatre in the first September week included Tom Moore in "Go West, Young Man," Louis Bennison in "High Pockets," George Walsh in "Putting One Over," Mabel Normand in "The Pest" and Dustin Farnum in "A Man's Fight." There were the usual comedies and the serial, "The Tiger's Trail."

THE Temple on September 12, offered the last chapter in the serial, "The Red Glove," also the first chapter of the new serial, "Elmo, the Mighty." Manager Fay is expecting the new serial to make a great hit.

MARY MAC LAREN drew a fair crowd to the Temple on September 6, in "A Petal on the Current." Bessie Barriscale drew good patronage and praise the day following, in "The Woman Michael Married."

DESPITE the counter attraction of the Elgin National Road races that drew thousands and thousands to town on August 23, "Little Women" packed the Grand opera house for both afternoon and evening showings.

"STOLEN ORDERS" was on the bill at the Grand theatre on September 4 to 6, but it brought crowds to see it. Other attractions at the Grand in the first week of September included Constance Talmadge in "Happiness a la Mode" and Marion Davies in "Getting Mary Married." The Constance Talmadge film was particularly complimented.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

ON September 10, Alice Joyce was featured at the Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., in a Vitagraph play, "Everybody's Girl," adapted from the story by O. Henry.

THE SATURDAY, September 6, program at the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Ia., consisted of a feature, "The Marionettes," with Clara Kimball Young; a comedy, "At the Beach," with Fatty Arbuckle, and a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Going Some." A reel of Pathe News completed the bill.

ZANE GREY'S great drama, "The Border Legion," starring Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth, was presented at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis., on Saturday, September 13. The prices of admission were slightly raised.

A GOLDWYN production, "One Week of Life" featuring Pauline Frederick, was shown at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., on Friday, September 5. On Saturday Alice Brady was presented in "The World to Live In." Billie Burke held the boards on Sunday and Monday in "Good Gracious, Annabelle." On Tuesday and Wednesday Frank Keenan played in "The Silver Girl."

Heard in Detroit

THE APPEARANCE of nine Sennett girls and Bothwell Browne, also in person, at the Broadway Strand during the past week, caused several of the theatre's box office records to totter. Out of six performances daily more than five were sellouts.

The West Coast

Short News of San Diego

W. W. WHITSON, proprietor of the Plaza theatre, was called to Whittier, Cal., recently by the death of his father, John W. Whitson, at the age of 75.

THREE motion picture companies have applied for permits to use the exposition buildings and the Painted Desert in Balboa Park for filming scenes in some feature and serial photoplays. The Master Pictures Corporation will produce a South American play; the Selig Polyscope Company expects to produce an Indian drama, and the Ben Wilson Company will furnish the ninth episode of a serial called "The Trail of the Octopus."

VIRGINIA LEE CORBIN, the famous child emotional star, has been spending her vacation at Coronado Tent City, accompanied by her mother and sister, Ruth.

R. E. HICKS, proprietor and manager of the Cabrillo, reports big results from the first of the Big-Four features, Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American." This is the second production put on at the Cabrillo since the change in the schedule of prices, which were formerly 20c, 30c and 50c, plus the war tax, and which are now 25c, 35c and 55c, including the tax.

THE PLAZA found it necessary to hold over for a second week the big feature, "The Miracle Man," owing to the demand for admission which could not be met with a one week's showing.

With Los Angeles Exchanges

UNDER the direction of David Bershon, Los Angeles manager of the Universal Exchange, the special short subject made by the International Film Service on the life of General Pershing, under the name of "The Weapon of Destiny," was placed at the California theatre as an addition to the program of which the first Douglas Fairbanks United Artists' release, "His Majesty the American," was the feature, and also was exhibited at the Florence theatre in Pasadena. Other subjects placed by Universal in down-town houses, were, "The Woman Under Cover" with Fritzie Brunette, at the Victory for the week of September 14, the three one-reel animal pictures made by Major Allen at the Symphony theatre for the week of September 7 and "The Village Venus," the first Century comedy release directed by Fred Fishback at the Rialto theatre. "The Right to Happiness" was placed for a week at the Cabrillo theatre, San Diego.

AS THE RESULT of negotiations between Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation and D. W. Griffith, the latter's production of "Broken Blossoms" will be marketed in southern California by the local office of the United Artists Corporation, according to word received by W. S. Rand, district manager. Mr. Rand will have charge of booking the Griffith feature in all southern California territory except Los Angeles, where the special feature will have separate handling, its engagement having been opened in Los Angeles the week of September 14 for an extended run. Elsewhere, it will be released to audiences beginning October 20.

MANAGER H. W. HEPBURN of the Vitagraph exchange has engaged George Oldfield as salesman operating over the entire territory. Mr. Oldfield formerly was a Vitagraph man in the middle West, and will devote his energies, principally, to helping along the big drive now under way in marketing the serial, "Smashing Barriers."

M. J. COHEN, in charge of Pathe exploitation on the coast, has arrived in Los Angeles to conduct a special campaign of promotion of "The World Aflame," the labor picture, as part of which Frank Keenan will make personal appearances in Los Angeles. Mr. Carmicheal also is busy preparing for the sales of new material obtained by Pathe as the result of the contracts obtained by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, through which the production of J. Stuart Blackton and Edgar Lewis will be marketed through Pathe exchanges.

DAVID SWING RICKER, in charge of the Pacific coast exploitation of Select pictures, arrived in Los Angeles the week of September 8 to begin a campaign of advertising and special publicity stunts for the showing of "Upstairs and Down," which Select's manager, A. E. Lotz, placed at the California theatre for the week beginning September 22. Another Select picture to be shown at the large Los Angeles house is "The Perfect Lover," which will open at the California theatre on October 6.

THE ARRIVAL of Marion Cohen, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation in Los Angeles, the week of September 8, from the San Francisco head offices of the concern, was expected by J. H. Goldberg, Los Angeles manager, who recently has received new short reel subjects which were the result of purchases made in New York by Dave Chatkin, secretary of the organization, who arrived in Los Angeles recently. Manager Goldberg stated that he had secured the Flanagan and Edwards series of Hall Room Boy comedies, for the California theatre for the week beginning September 29 and every other week thereafter. These and other short pictures were successfully placed along the coast by Robert Amador, who recently returned to the Los Angeles office from the coast trip.

THE CHARLIE CHAPLIN comedy, "Some Nerve," which has been bought outright by Sol Lesser, president of the All Star Feature Distributing Corporation, has been received for local distribution by E. A. Benjamin, Los Angeles manager, who also is placing in the southern California territory, the twelve one-reel Arbuckle comedies, also recently obtained by Mr. Lesser.

JACK WOODIE, general manager of Realart forces and Oren S. Woodie, district manager, are in Los Angeles preparing to give the first exhibition to the trade of the recently completed Realart feature, "Soldiers of Fortune." This and other prints are expected to be ready for distribution about October 1.

Salt Lake and Vicinity

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Company, spent an hour in Ogden last week visiting with Gus Hager, manager of the Universal Film Exchange of Salt Lake. Mr. Laemmle was highly optimistic over the coming season and stated that the affairs of the company were in most excellent shape.

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," will have its premier showing at the Orpheum theatre in Ogden the first week in October. Joseph Goss, manager reviewed the picture while in New York and is highly enthusiastic over the play.

THE local Pathe exchange management gave a showing of "The World Aflame," at the Paramount Empress theatre on September 10th, with Chief of Police, J. Parley White, and delegates to the Salt Lake Federation of Labor convention, then in session, as audience. Much favorable comment was heard on the picture.

"THE MISLEADING WIDOW" starring Bill Burke, made a big hit at the Paramount Empress theatre.

LOUIS MARCUS, district agent for Famous Players booked the American theatre in Butte for Paramount Artcraft pictures last week. The Jensen Von Herberg house formerly supplied the pictures to this house.

West Coast Edition

In Portland Film Circles

"OPEN YOUR EYES," the government health bureau picture was one of the rare pictures to enjoy a two weeks' run in a Portland cinema house. It showed at the Star theatre which is operated by the People's Amusement company.

THE picture to go over the biggest in Portland during Paramount-Artcraft week was Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss" which played at the Liberty theatre owned by Jensen and Von Herberg. A surprise visit from the censor board resulted in the unanimous decision that the picture was "exceedingly pretty and interesting."

C. M. HILL, branch manager of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, has chalked up to his credit for Paramount Artcraft week the booking of every Portland theatre but one. The one exception was a theatre already under contract for a two weeks' picture. To bring about this record it was necessary for Mr. Hill to book a Paramount-Artcraft picture for the Majestic theatre operated by the Majestic Amusement company of which J. J. Parker is president. This had never before been done.

MR. HILL and Mr. Parker went into conference about 10:30 o'clock at night and they stayed in conference until 3 o'clock the next morning when a signature by Mr. Parker ended the discussion. "The Career of Katherine Bush," starring Catherine Calvert was the picture shown and after inspecting the box office receipts for that week Mr. Parker has announced that no more five hour conferences will be necessary to secure the booking of a Paramount-Artcraft picture for his theatre.

"A WIDOW BY PROXY," Marguerite Clark's latest feature, was shown ahead of release time at the Columbia theatre during Paramount-Artcraft week. So many were in the theatre that booked Paramount-Artcraft pictures during that week that it was necessary for C. M. Hill, branch manager, to eke out the supply in this manner. The picture lined people up in front of the theatre for almost a block during the rush hours on Labor Day.

Katterjohn Says Subtitle is a Decisive Factor in Screen Drama

THE importance of the subtitle in enhancing the quality of motion pictures is emphasized by Monte M. Katterjohn, author-producer, in his forthcoming picture, "Love, Honor and Obey," which will be prepared by Harry Garson for distribution by the Equity Pictures Corporation.

"The subtitle is fast becoming more and more a decisive factor in screen drama," said Mr. Katterjohn. "It was only a few wears ago that the subtitle was considered a necessary evil and at first was used almost wholly to introduce the cast. Now it is almost as important as the picture action. No attempt at first was made regarding punctuation. No effort was seriously made to put any beautiful thought into the screen's explanatory phrases. Things are now radically changed and the subtitle of today shows the benefits of intelligence."

Roth of San Francisco Does Good Work Among Local Exhibitors

EUGENE ROTH of the California theatre is rapidly becoming the "father confessor" and chief advisor to the exhibitors of San Francisco, and exhibitors in other parts of the State are constantly watching the experiments of the California for the betterment of their service. Mr. Roth takes the stand that cooperation among the exhibitors is far better than rivalry. He believes that there is a place for every house and he would rather see them all making money than to see a few large houses excessively prosperous and a number of others trembling on the edge of failure or actually closing down because of some business misjudgment. For this reason he is always ready with advice and suggestion to other exhibitors. He believes that the Motion Picture News is doing a good work in its Exhibitors' Service department, as it helps educate the exhibitor and the more houses which are pleasing their patrons the better it is for business in general.

San Francisco News

ALEXANDER PANTAGES, well known theatrical man and owner of a chain of theatres is visiting San Francisco, and it is stated that while here he will decide with John J. Cluxton upon the location of a new theatre in this city to cost approximately $1,000,000.

ALLAN DWAN, with his own motion picture organization arrived in San Francisco last week to make a number of scenes for "The Luck of the Irish," his next production. Midocean scenes will be taken on one of the large ocean liners used on the China run. A second ship will accompany the liner to bring back the company when the filming is done.

MILES BROS. of this city has recently re-equipped his Mission Street plant and studio. He is specializing on advertising and educational motion pictures, and has found a market for the latter in the schools and churches.

A. S. ARONSON representative of the home office of the Goldwyn arrived here from Los Angeles the latter part of last week. While here he will make arrangements for an extensive advertising campaign and for general exploitation work.

AMONG the plans to advertise "The World Aflame" during Fleet week in San Francisco the Pathe arranged for an electric sign display on Market Street opposite Powell. This sign is claimed to be the largest electric in the world.

HENRY PESHON, son of P. H. Peshon who is well known to the local exchange for his work as censor, has entered the employ of the San Francisco office of Pathe, and will have charge of the shipping department.

LOUIS REICHERT, manager of the United Artist Corporation has organized his office force by employing Fred Wescher, formerly of the Metro as assistant, and Mary Clark as stenographer.

E. M. LOY, who recently took over the Divisidaro theatre in this city has installed a foto player in the house.

THE Gaiety theatre at Santa Maria has bought of Metcalfe and installed a General Electric motor generator set.

SHIELDS and Van Buren of the Star theatre, Oakdale are now also operating the Dreamland theatre, Riverbank.

THE Empire theatre, Napa, formerly managed by H. MacDonald, is now in charge of J. P. Knox. C. W. Trabbing of Kingsburg will operate the Family theatre in that town in conjunction with Walter Sandell, who was formerly the sole owner. Improvements are being made on the house including a considerable addition of equipment.

F. VERELY, formerly of Brown's Opera house at Salinas, has been appointed manager of the Lodi theatre, Lodi.

"DOC" HART, who has travelled for some time for the Universal exchange, San Francisco, has been taken off the road and been given the appointment of Service Man. This is a new position and Doc will devote his entire attention to eliminating delays, and straightening out all mixups and complaints.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal, left for the east the latter part of last week.

New Policy and Many Improvements for Strand Theatre, Portland

CHANGES of policy which will result in the installation of a 24 piece symphony orchestra under the direction of an inter-nationally known conductor, house improvements to the cost of $50,000, the installation of a complete four manuel orchestral organ and a diversified programme in which motion pictures will be featured has been announced for the Strand theatre of Portland, Ore., by its owner, Morten Cohn.

The new policy went into effect on Saturday, September 13th, when the Strand opened with the special production, "The Brat," in which Nazimova is the star and which was accompanied by the 24 piece orchestra.

Philip Pelz is the director who has recently arrived from New York to take permanent charge of the Strand symphony orchestra. Mr. Pelz will be remembered as the director of the 400 piece band which opened the Panama Pacific International exposition in San Francisco in 1915 and who wrote the march officially adopted for the fair.

House Improvements at the Strand theatre are already under way but, due to the size of the organ now under contract to be installed, will not be completed until January 1.

Two screens will be installed in the Strand. The smaller of these will be used for the comedies and the larger which will be at the back will be so darkened as to make the extreme front seats as desirable as those back further in the house. About 100 loges are being installed and will be outfitted with lounge chairs.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

THE Babcock theatre of Billings, Mont., has announced a change in prices. From now on all pictures will run at an admission price of 35 cents. This is the first theatre in the state to make such an advance for every show. Other houses in the state may follow the example of the Babcock but managers of Butte houses state that the admission price will not, at present at least, be raised.

GEORGE BOURKE, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, has returned from Billings, where he completed a deal with Manager Rankin of the Strand theatre whereby the Strand will use all of the service the Universal is now releasing.

M. J. RYAN of Ringling, Mont., was a visitor in Butte this week and stated that business was good in his town. Two days each week he uses the Universal service.

ROBERT RYAN of the Salt Lake Universal office, is making a special trip through Montana, handling serials and comedies. He is doing a fine business.

JOE STOUT, representing Metro, is in Butte and has a print with him of "The Brat," featuring Nazimova, which he will screen for the different exhibitors here.

EDWARD HEAD has taken over the Thrift theatre at Miles City and is remodeling it. He is installing a new Minusa screen which he secured through the Western Equipment company.

THE Regent theatre at Billings is soon to be remodeled.

GLADYS PRESTON, cashier at the Liberty theatre, has returned from a vacation of three weeks at Salmon, Idaho, and is again looking after her duties at the local house on West Broadway.

MANAGER MERLE DAVIS of the Ansonia Amusement company has contracted for the State Women's War Relief Series to be run at the Ansonia theatre.

CHARLES KOERNER, Universal special representative, is sending out contracts so fast it is said, that Manager Bourke has had to secure another contract clerk.

O. E. SCHMIDT of the Gem theatre at Bozeman was a visitor in the city this week.

What They Say in Seattle

THE film business has been exceptionally good in Seattle for the exhibitors this summer and is getting to be better than ever. The higher grade houses are doing better in proportion than the cheap ones. People do not care if it does cost them a few cents more to see a real picture.

ALEXANDER ROSENBERG, of the De Luxe Film was recently married to Dorothy Lachmann of this city. The wedding was held at the Washington Hotel and about 100 guests were present.

SOL BAUM, Northwestern Supervisor for Universal was a recent visitor to the Seattle Universal exchange.

"WHIRLWIND" Al. Eden, Western representative for "Real Art" pictures has returned from a whirl around to some cities within 300 or 400 miles around Seattle. It was a profitable whirl too. Al's offices are too small at present so he went down to see Bob Nave, accommodating manager of the big Triangle office in Seattle. Bob is letting Al have some room until Al gets his own building.

SAM WEINSTEIN of Menger, Ring and Weinstein, New York, specialists in picture frames for theatres, lobbies, etc., arrived in Seattle the other day to place the agency of his goods with The H. A. Johnson Company, Seattle. He succeeded in doing it and notified Ray Kelsall that his company this year has the finest lobby displays, and built in wall cases they have ever had the pleasure of handling. Just to show that a trip from New York to Seattle pays, the minute Weinstein stepped off the Pullman and came across Ray Kellsall, he convined John Dantz that his Colonial needed some betterment and in a few minutes a deal was closed.

JENSEN and Von Herberg of Seattle are now controllers of 18 movies in the Northwest and will soon control more, this making them the most powerful private exhibitor concern in the country.

MANY changes are occurring in Tacoma. Jensen and Von Herberg control four Tacoma picture houses and Peter David has purchased another picture house. This newest Peter David picture house is still without a name. That is why his West End house is known as the "No Name." It was opened the Sunday before Labor Day and is well attended. The house manager is C. O. Anderson, a new comer to Tacoma (Tacoma is growing), who has six talented daughters who entertained the audience with instrumental and vocal specialities.

HELEN STARR, formerly of Seattle, has joined the Goldwyn Studios in Los Angeles. During the war she was in the Intelligence Department of the Government in Seattle. She was connected with the Publicity Departments of the Mutual, Universal and American Film companies in New York.

Pictures in Salt Lake City House

THE ACKERMAN AND HARRIS company will soon open up the former Wilkes theatre as a moving picture and vaudeville house. They will give the first morning show ever exhibited daily in Salt Lake as well as afternoon and evening performances. It is planned to intersperse the pictures with Hippodrome Circuit vaudeville. The house is now undergoing a complete renovation. The opening date has not yet been announced.

"Frozen Thrills"

(Robert Bruce Scenic—Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT BRUCE has probably earned more encomiums than any other scenic artist of the screen. And no wonder. He does not follow the beaten path in his exploration of nature's handiwork, but ventures and accomplishes the unattainable. Take his "Frozen Thrills," for example. Here the spectator is conducted through vistas which have heretofore defied the camera. It is not only a beautiful subject but a thrilling one, as indicated in the title. The various views recorded on its single reel are awe-inspiring. It out-serials the serials in the execution of hazardous feats as performed by the explorers.

Three hardy nature lovers whose hunt for the thrill is as keen as their quest for the beautiful take us up the perilous peaks of Mt. Rainier. They, warily, measure their ground before trespassing. Up, up they go, defying death traps which are ever lurking in the shape of crevices in the ice. And the man with the long legs actually strides one yawning chasm. The biggest thrill—a frozen thrill all right—is when his companions lower him down hundreds of feet into one of the larger crevices. And when he is hauled back to within a few yards of the top it suddenly dawns on him that the sharp ice is cutting the rope in two.

Then he indulges in mental flashbacks of all the thrills which he has encountered since he became an adventurer. These past occurrences are visualized briefly. Yet they are exceedingly tame compared to his frozen thrill in scaling the peak.

The tinting and toning of the subject is exquisite, the selection of scenes stamping Mr. Bruce as a true artist. Highly imaginative sub-titles lend enchantment, so that one seems to be lost in revery. At least when one is not living the thrills of the interpid explorers and the invisible fellow who carries the camera.—Laurence Reid.

"Everybody's Doing It"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon Comedy—Half Reel—Fox—Released Sept. 21)

THIS is built in and around a "shimmie." Bud Fisher's comedians appear as proprietors of a gymnasium and guarantee by a special treatment to reduce the weight of the prospective victims or patrons of their institute.

With the aid of severe physical exertion and mental suasion they manage to get their first patient through the narrow door of their sanatorium. While Mutt leads the jazz band Jeff teaches the patient to "shimmie."

Right here is where the theatre orchestra can get in some good work in jazzing with the orchestra in the picture. The patient shimmies off so much superfluous weight that his clothes alone are left.

Of course all this is very nonsensical but nevertheless it registered a big comedy hit with a high class audience.—Tom Hamlin.

"Bound and Gagged"

(George B. Seitz Serial in Ten Episodes—Released by Pathe)

THE first three episodes look very promising and each has the essential climax calculated to bring them back for more.

One feature is that the story has innumerable comedy touches and is more light and airy than the general run of serials. Of course the mystery is there and also the chase for the papers.

But there are no weird hands hovering about and it does not possess such a heavy atmosphere as the usual serial thriller. But there are thrills and stunts enough and a rather neat and logical plot supplying a reason for everything. The continuity is clear and easy to follow, but it does not destroy the suspense.

This can safely be branded a "different" serial and should prove a novelty from this fact alone. A young millionaire to win his sweetheart's favor, which he has been fast losing because of his placid acceptance of the ordinary mode of living, makes a wager that he can start naked and without a penny or the use of influence will make his way around the world in six months.

A villian determines to play havoc with the young millionaire's stocks and bonds when he is absent. And the hero in securing a coat to suitably cover his nudeness manages to grab a coat containing some very valuable papers.

There you have the elements for some excitement and a chase with an added romantic element. For these same papers affect the future of a Princess who is kept a prisoner in her country by revolutionists. The hero rescues this charming Princess just at the conclusion of the third episode and left the reviewer anxious to see the balance of the serial.

The star is athletic and likable and is a good swimmer. The direction is very good and the cast is adequate. Photography and laboratory work is up to standard.—Tom Hamlin.

"Mates and Models"

(Big "V" Special Comedy, Featuring James Aubrey—Two Reels—Released Sept. 14)

IF rapid action alone spells comedy success this two-reeler would register as a fast production. There is a lot of trick stuff and clever photography.

But it is all put on without any apparent reason. And it is the rough slapstick stuff embellished by several "models" on a movable platform.

The usual chases and the hurling of a dummy back and forth a la base ball with the batter missing makes this quite a rough-house. And the married lady considers that she must outrageously flirt with every male.

If a conglomeration of knockabout stuff will entertain your audience and be accepted as comedy this offering will undoubtedly suit.—Tom Hamlin.

The New Lloyd Comedies

(Big Two-Reel Specials—Released by Pathe Exchanges)

THE first two of the new Two-Reel Special Pathe Comedies starring Harold Lloyd were viewed this week and they certainly mark a big advance in this comedian's offerings and the reviewer feels confident that they will register heavily with the exhibitor and public.

For four years this clever comedian under the direction of Hal Roach has been serving one high class single reel comedy every week. The fact that these can be found in all the best New York theatres is enough to convince that this same artist should score heavily in the new two-reel subjects.

The first two are built around regular stories and portrayed by clever screen players. And they are mounted elaborately with a large mob of extras to assist the versatile comedian. And his comedy is always clean and appeals to all classes.

Mr. Lloyd has a cute and breezy little leading woman in Mildred Davis. And Harry Pollard is as active and effective as ever. The titles are by H. M. Walker and contribute no small part to the entertainment. Hal Roach is still producing the comedies and is assisted by Alf Gooding, an able director.

In "From Hand to Mouth" a neat little story of comedy and pathos is seen. And after a wonderful array of fast moving and laughable events the hero manages to rescue an heiress with the aid of about forty policemen. And the most laughable chase on record is shown when the comedian attempts to recruit the army of bluecoats.

They will not come with him when he applies to each of them in person and begs that they assist him in rescuing the heiress from the gang of cutthroats. So he insults them one and all at various intervals until he has every cop in town chasing him and eager for his blood.

Then he leads them a merry chase until they finally come to a pitched battle with the group of thugs.

If this don't make them laugh themselves out of their seats your audience is hopeless.

"His Royal Slyness" is the second of the new two-reelers and is more expensively mounted. The persistent book agent is persuaded to impersonate a young Prince of a Royal family and visit a tabloid kingdom in Europe.

His escapades there among the Lords and Dukes is side splitting enough but the drama and romance also forms a prominent part in the proceedings. It is light and airy and real clean comedy, but all this is augmented and fortified by a well-produced story around a neatly developed plot. This is very lavishly mounted and costumed. And the hero becomes President through the revolutionists and marries the charming young Princess.

The Harold Lloyd new two-reel special comedies should capitivate and thoroughly entertain any audience anywhere.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to June 1, 1919.

"THE HOUSE OF INTRIGUE"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Will Entertain Many and Is Different

A LIGHT society-crook drama with Manhattan locale. There is no particular star role and the cast is well balanced. The story depicts a headstrong young heiress determined to see some real life and who gets into difficulties by coming in contact with two male crooks and one female grafter.

The love element develops between her wealthy young guardian and a young would-be actress who innocently becomes one of the crook group and is finally rescued by the young guardian. This will entertain many and is a little different. It is not a heavy picture and is fairly well directed.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and generally pleasing; Labor, good puller and quite pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 21.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A Haworth production with Mignon Anderson, Peggy May and Donald McDonald will appear for ——— days at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Robertson-Cole Company which is piloting this screen attraction through Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation pronounce it as one of the most unique of their recent offerings.

A young girl is evicted by her landlady in Manhattan for non-paymant of her room rent. She has come from a small town and is unable to secure a position on the stage.

Three crooks, two men and a woman, determine to use the girl as a "chicken stall" to innocently cover their thievery around a bath house at Long Beach. It is at this point that another young girl enters the story. She is a head-strong litle heiress determined to have her own way in spite of her young male guardian. The little heiress is a born flirt and at Long Beach she becomes enraptured while gazing in admiration at one of the life guards. This fellow chances to be one of the three crooks.

Events then happen fast and furious. The young guardian to protect his breezy young ward comes across the innocent "chicken stall" whom he finds is apparently hand in hand with the crooks.

But he has fallen in love with her at first sight and determines to test her and find out if she is really bad at heart. The test takes place at the New York residence of the heiress and the crooks choose this particular moment to rob the house.

Their little innocent country girl manages to thwart them and also opens the eyes of the little heiress as to the true status of her life guard friend.

And of course the guardian is thoroughly convinced that he has chosen wisely in his first and only affair of the heart.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you might advertise it as a Haworth Production with an all star cast. This is not a very original line but it is about the only billing you can give it as there is no particular star role in the picture. There are said to be an attractive display of posters, photographs and electros on this attraction and a good spread is always advisable.

Mention that this is from an original story by Arthur W. Stringer and that Haworth is also the well known producers of the Sessue Hayakawa productions. For a float to be carted about town on a wagon or automobile you can at small expense have a sign painter rig up a muslin "house" with dark curtained windows painted on it and a banner anouncing "The House of Intrigue" at the ——— theatre.

A tense moment from the Robertson-Cole feature, "The House of Intrigue," released through Exhibitors Mutual

PROGRAM READER

She was broke and the landlady put her out cold on the streets of New York for non-payment of rent.

No stage manager was willing to give this pretty little country girl a chance.

There were three crooks however who determined to use her as a "chicken stall."

They relied upon her innocence to suitably cover their robberies.

Some blocks away lived a contrary little heiress who wanted to live her life in her own way. And she escaped from her guardian and is party of the first part in a very promising flirtation with a life guard at Long Beach.

And the life guard was one of the crook group and it was this far reaching series of rapidly moving events that brought her guardian and the little "chicken stall" together.

For she was innocently traveling in bad company. But here is where the real romance actually starts.

An all star cast appears in "The House of Intrigue," a Haworth production which appears at this theatre next week. And the charming story is then told in all its entertaining details.

CATCH LINES

One little country maid finds herself penniless on the streets of Manhattan.

An innocent girl unknowingly becomes the "chicken stall" for a band of crooks.

In one house a faked robbery becomes entangled in a real burglary.

Where one girl was taught to shun the ocean and beware of the life guards.

Give a headstrong little heiress her way for a minute and you invite chaos.

"THE THIRD KISS"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Should Pleasantly Entertain the Majority

THIS is the best story that Vivian Martin has had in a long time and she registers excellently. A very good cast is in support and the suspense is sufficient to hold the interest all the way through.

A neat little love element is developed from some very complicated situations and the romance should pleasantly entertain the majority of audiences. A touch of pathos and near tragedy is introduced in the role of a mother who had lost her daughter in a factory fire. She becomes almost demented and her later action causes the necessary thrill for the climax.

Direction, continuity and photography are up to par. A very good Vivian Martin picture.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and generally pleasing: Family, good puller and very pleasing: Labor, good puller and wholly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 14.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Third Kiss" is due at the ——— theatre for ———days beginning ———. This is a Paramount-Artcraft Special starring winsome Vivian Martin.

A red haired factory girl becomes a settlement worker and soon finds herself the third part of the eternal triangle. For the head of the settlement house is a married man who had persuaded his wealthy wife to accompany him in his rescue work.

When the little red haired factory girl takes such a keen interest in all the settlement house undertakings the young husband soon loses his heart and just as quickly he temporarily loses his head also.

A scandal would have resulted but the girl repulsed his advances and awakened the true loyal spirit of manhood in him. In fact, the little factory girl brought him back to actual realities. And he was a better man afterwards to his own beautiful wife.

In order to avert the prospective scandal a young wealthy friend of the young husband consents to sacrifice himself by marrying the factory girl. And he then finds that the little red haired girl was the real owner of the big factory.

This young couple lived together ostensibly as man and wife as they were legally married. But they apparently hated one another and were man and wife in name only.

Although at that, the newly made young husband did kiss her on two different occasions. And when she strenuously objected he threatened her by cautioning her to beware of the third kiss.

This might have went on forever and they may have never discovered that they loved each other dearly if it had not been for a half-crazed old woman who felt that she owed a grude against the young red haired wife as the owner of a factory that had once caused her great anguish by burning.

Before any harm came to the little factory owner her husband made a heroic rescue and it was then that they learned of their mutual love. And they learned it through "The Third Kiss."

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture your best bet is to state in all your advertising and publicity that this is a Paramount-Artcraft Special. The reason is obvious. This is a well advertised brand. And as Vivian Martin has been a star for quite a long time she undoubtedly has a following and the name of the star should also be prominently mentioned at every opportunity.

If you are fond of special lobby displays, this will afford you an opportunity of framing your lobby like a settlement house with the cards displayed advertising the ice cream social, gymnasium, authors' night, etc., etc. But your lobby can be made very effective outside of this if you secure photographs of the various scenes and display them prominently. For a stunt you can invite all red haired girls to attend free of charge upon payment of a war tax on their red hair (based on the ticket war tax, of course). The heroine is red headed.

Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss," Paramount-Artcraft

PROGRAM READER

She was only a little red haired factory girl but she did take a keen and active interest in the task of the young settlement worker.

But this same young settlement worker was a married man and really should not have fallen in love with little Red Hair.

And little Red Hair told him so in terms so unmistakable that he could not fail to understand.

To avert this prospective scandal, which would have been very painful, as the young man was wealthy and respected, a friend of his volunteered to "sacrifice" himself by marrying the factory girl.

And lo and behold the little factory girl turned out to be the real owner of the factory, and this explained her eager interest in the settlement work.

She was not to blame because an over zealous settlement worker tried in vain to make love to her. But the newspapers had the scandal story and of course when his friend married the girl, the story about a married settlement worker falling in love with a factory girl was no scandal at all.

It is the couple, married in name only, around which this story then centers.

And it is told very effectively in the Paramount-Artcraft Special coming to this theatre next week. Vivian Martin is the star and the title is "The Third Kiss."

CATCH LINES

Where a red headed girl gets "The Third Kiss."

The first and second osculation don't always count, girls, but look out for "The Third Kiss."

It was three times and out for the kissing bug when he perfected "The Third Kiss."

Scandal, fire, love and thrills preceded "The Third Kiss."

The first shocked her and the second frightened her, but "The Third Kiss" won her.

"FOR A WOMAN'S HONOR"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

This May Satisfy Most Warner Fans

ENGLISH and Hindu atmosphere, with the hero estranged from his sweetheart and going back to India, where he is a physician in the British Medical Corps. A scheming woman told him that she was the mother of a child by his financee's dead father and he bought her off to spare his sweetheart pain.

His fiancee and her mother believe that he has had an affair with the woman himself and condemn him while he remains silent. All the principals are finally gathered together in India and after several are stricken with fever the truth is revealed and the lovers are reunited. This is not so good as the former Warner features, but may satisfy those who care for slow moving dramas with Oriental settings.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, good puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing; Labor, ordinary puller and not very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 14.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Capt. Clyde Mannering.....H. B. Warner

Dick Rutherford.....John Gilbert
Valeska De Marsay.....Carmen Phillips
Rajput Nath.....Hector V. Sarno
Produced by Jesse D. Hampton.
Story by George Elwood Jenks.
Directed by Park Frame.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Warner comes to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ——— in his latest screen attraction, "For A Woman's Honor."

This is described as a dramatic story of England and India and the star appears in the role of Capt. Clyde Mannering of the British India Medical Corps.

He has returned to England to wed his sweetheart but her father has just passed away and the nuptials are to be postponed. A handsome young woman accompanied by a child appears at the house and the young Captain talks to her. She claims that the father of his fiancee is the father of her child and that he had been living a double life.

Just then the mother steps into the hall and see her prospective son-in-law giving the young woman a huge sum of money and advising her to go away out of the country. She suspicions a scandal and will not permit her daughter to marry the captain.

And to save pain to the old lady and his fiancee he does not tell them that it was to save disgrace falling upon the memory of the late husband and father that impelled him to refrain from defending himself. It was for a woman's honor.

It developed afterwards that the woman in the case was a blackmailer and that the father who had passed away did not even know her. So the young captain's sacrifice was in vain. It is in India that all this is unravelled amidst many very dramatic situations.

The young girl visits India in behalf of her younger brother and the hero manages to save this wild young man from himself. And then the same blackmailing woman makes an appearance in far away India.

When the real truth is made known the young lovers find comfort in each other's arms with assurances of future happiness.

CATCH LINES

He kept silent and for a woman's honor he accepted all the condemnation.

Rather than cause pain and disgrace for the one he loved he sacrificed his own desires.

Love linked them across many oceans and finally brought great happiness.

Misunderstandings have caused great unhappiness in this world, but he was eventually able to win through silence.

What one man did for a woman's honor brought him great happiness at the eleventh hour.

The measure of a man is what he is willing to undergo for a woman's honor.

H. B. Warner is star in the Robertson-Cole production, "For a Woman's Honor"

PROGRAM READER

He had come from far away India to the home of his English fiancee only to find her father on his death bed and the prospective wedding indefinitely postponed.

Just then a strange and beautiful young woman accompanied by a child put in an appearance.

She told the young lover that the father of his fiancee had been leading a double life and that she always thought that she was his only wife.

To save giving pain to his prospective mother-in-law and grief to his fiancee he gives this woman a huge sum of money on condition that she would disappear. The mother heard part of the conversation and witnessed the giving of the hush money.

Naturally she surmised that the young man had a skeleton in his closet and forbade her daughter to ever marry him. Then the young man resolved to say nothing and he therefore offered no defense. He withstood all for a woman's honor.

And "For A Woman's Honor" is the title of a photoplay coming to this theatre next week.

H. B. Warner is the star and the action soon changes to India where many tense dramatic situations arise before the young lovers are finally united.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have this picture booked you should concentrate particularly upon the star. Show as many photographs and halftone cuts as possible with the star in regular clothes instead of displaying the India scenes. Many of his followers may tire of seeing him in oriental or other foreign atmospheres. So it behooves every exhibitor to be careful about his display of posters, photographs and electros.

Mention some of his previous pictures like "The Man Who Turned White," "The Pagan God," etc., also the fact that he recently left a big Broadway show where he had the star part, to again appear in notable screen attractions.

"WITNESS FOR THE DEFENSE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Will Undoubtedly Please Ferguson Following

THIS drama is laid in England and India, with lover and sweetheart parted by their parents, who selfishly crave better financial matrimonial alliances for their offspring.

While the lover remains in England his fiancee journeys to India and in desperation she finally yields to her father's pleadings and marries a wealthy Englishman, who afterwards proves to be a brutal drunkard. In the jungle during a struggle she accidently kills him, but is freed by the court after a persistent suitor testifies in her behalf. Finally she is reunited with her first love.

Not a very entertaining story, but the star is supported by a capable cast and the picture will undoubtedly satisfy the Ferguson following.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing; Labor, ordinary puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 14.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Elsie Ferguson in her latest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Witness for the Defense," is coming to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

The story was written by the noted English playwright and novelist, A. E. W. Mason, and Ouida Bergere wrote the scenario. Under the direction of George Fitzmaurice the following well-known screen players appear in support of the star: Warner Oland, Wyndham Standing, Cora Williams, George Fitzgerald, J. H. Gilmore, Amelia Summervile, Blanche Standing, Capt. Charles Charles, Mrs. Bryant, E. Giradot, Leslie King and Henry Warwick.

Dick and Stella love each other, but their parents are selfishly ambitious and plot against the marriage in the hopes that each will make a better match financially. Stella goes to India at her father's behest and is practically forced to mary a wealthy man named Ballantyne, who afterwards turns out to be a brutal and drunken sot.

Finally when they are struggling in a jungle tent the husband is acidentally shot and when the wife is accused of his murder she offers no defense. But a repulsed suitor is the witness for the defense and manages to have suspicion fixed upon some Hindu enemies.

When the girl returns to England the family of her former lover still plot to keep the two sweethearts apart. In the meantime her fiance has arisen to a position of power and still wants her for his own.

When the actual truth finally becomes known through the witness for the defense the relatives and their busybody friends are properly quenched and subdued and true love runs smooth again.

There are said to be several very dramatic situations in this offering and an appealing role for the star.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you will of course mention in all your advertising and publicity that the star is Elsie Ferguson and that this is a Paramount-Artcraft Special. The following of the star and the well advertised brand are no small factors as box office pullers and should be utilized to the utmost.

Do not try any stunt advertising on this one. It calls for no special lobby display or stage sets. Any special explotation of this kind would cheapen the picture. Have all your advertising classy and of high grade as this feature will draw best and please best the elite. The invitation announcement through the mails to a society list should be effective.

Elsie Ferguson in her lastest Paramount-Artcraft, "The Witness for the Defense"

PROGRAM READER

From her cozy home in England to the jungles of India.

And her folks practically tore her from the arms of the one she loved.

She was forced to marry a wealthy Englishman in India.

After marriage she found that he was a brute, a secret drunkard.

During the last of many quarrels he is shot accidentally during a struggle with his beautiful but unhappy wife.

A former rejected suitor was the witness for the defense when she was acused of killing her husband.

Did she reward the witness for the defense or did she return to her former love?

Many tensely dramatic situations are encompassed in the Paramount-Artcraft Special that comes to this theatre next week.

Elsie Ferguson is the star and she is supported by a most excellent cast.

See "The Witnes for the Defense."

CATCH LINES

Instead of obeying the voice of love she prefered to be obedient to her misled father.

She found that her father's choice for a husband turned out to be a drunkard and a brute.

A beautiful English girl is accused of murdering her husband in the jungles of India. And she offers no defense.

Did "The Witness for the Defense" get his expected reward?

One girl finds that the cry of the heart should be answered, regardless.

"OVER THE GARDEN WALL"
(VITAGRAPH)

Simple Story Exudes Charm and Sentiment

AN appealing little story of love and sentiment in Bessie Love's newest Vitagraph release—appealing because it unfolds a plethora of human touches which are recorded in an old-fashioned way. Keeping apace with its title, the substance of the piece is exceedingly light and airy—and sparkling and fragrant—so much so that these qualities suffice to give it good entertainment value. There are no plot complications to worry you, nor, on the other hand, is there any single-track truckling to sugary sentiment.

The idea is woven around a girl who makes the best of her misfortunes whether they tug at the heart or the family purse-strings. Quite a few dramatic details are worked out in her search for love and happiness. Indeed, the story takes care of itself admirably without offering any pretensions. It conquers because of its simplicity and charm.

Director Smith has embellished the piece with exquisite settings and photography. And he has enriched it with occasional sprays of humor. The human note is found not only in the plot and characterization, but in the subtitles. It is dainty enough to please those who do not ask for a great deal and it is vital enough to keep the case-hardened spectators at attention.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Over the Garden Wall," a Vitagraph production, with Bessie Love as the star, will be the main attraction at the ——— on ——— of ——— week. This is a delightfully romantic story of a girl who goes after life with her sleeves rolled up. She is a resourceful young lady, is Peggy Gordon, since she is able to confront melancholy situations and make the most of them. Peggy simply bubbles over with energy. And she has her likes and dislikes. Her father is a bookworm, a dreamer. It happens that the family has to move out of its fine dwelling to take up more modest quarters in a cottage over the garden wall. But while Peggy's sister caters after pink teas and other social gaities, our heroine rolls up her sleeves and engages in garden trucking.

She has will power, has Peggy, and so she finds her way out of defeat at the hands of the social set. She survives the disappointment of finding that her fiance is a weakling. She overcomes the disaster that portends for her family through the loss of the fortune. And she shapes her destiny so that true love and a real man come to her. He is a rich neighbor, but she believes him to be a chauffeur. So they meet atop the garden wall. And when her sister would elope with a man of little character, Peggy comes to the rescue and saves her from disgrace She is nearly compromised herself through her rash act but the chap she has grown to admire and love saves her from disaster.

The story is crowded with plenty of action and a strong note of sentiment. The characters are real, everyday people. There are quaint bits of humor and pretty love scenes. Vitagraph has provided a cast of unusual excellence to assume the leading roles.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another title you can play interestingly in your advertising. It suggests all sorts of catchy features. There is an old song—"Over the Garden Wall" which you can print the words and distribute in the shape of teasers. This will invite the patronage of the people who have outlived their romantic days. And they will come and renew their youth. Have your artist draw some striking posters suggestive of the title. Feature the sentiment, the charming love story and the girl who goes after life with her sleeves rolled up.

Tell in all your arguments that the picture is remarkably human—that its characters are real. Emphasize that it is a romance of a delectable girl—who might be your own sweetheart, your sister, your daughter.

Bessie Love is presented by Vitagraph in "Over the Garden Wall"

PROGRAM READER

She was a mighty resourceful girl was Peggy, and when misfortune visited her family she rolled up her sleeves and went to work. Not much like her sister was she? Frances was shocked to find Peggy in the corn fields. She only liked to indulge in pink teas and flirtations. Now if Frances had only gone to work, too, she might have found a fine fellow like Peggy did—a fellow who lived the other side of the garden wall. Peggy thought him a chauffeur, but he was really a society man—a society man who was not afraid to tackle work with his sleeves rolled up.

And Peggy fell in love. They met at the top of the garden wall. And the fortune returned to the family in the most unexpected way. And he became her chauffeur for life and sailed away with her to the tune of ninety miles an hour. This is a charming love story which simply bubbles over with fine sentiment and humor. It presents Bessie Love. See "Over the Garden Wall" at this theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

When misfortune visited her family she rolled up her sleeves and went to work. And when her work was over she climbed over the garden wall and found—See Bessie Love in "Over the Garden Wall."

She knew how to climb the garden wall, and so did the chap on the other side. They met at the top. She thought him a chauffeur and he thought her a scullery maid. See "Over the Garden Wall."

Did you ever see a girl go after life with her sleeves rolled up? Well Bessie Love is that kind of a girl. Although her family lost a fortune, she found a way to keep the wolf from the door. What was it? See "Over the Garden Wall."

"HIS MAJESTY THE AMERICAN"
(UNITED ARTISTS)

Will Register Heavily with Fairbanks Fans

A TYPICAL Fairbanks role of the virile young American develops an offering with more real activity and stunts than any of his former pictures. A love element during the last few reels is light and airy and romantic enough to appeal to all.

The fast moving story carries the hero from lively sessions with Manhattan's fire department, down through Mexico for a skirmish with the bandits, and then over to an European tabloid kingdom, where he foils the plotters against the king and becomes king himself by right of birth, as it is discovered that his own mother is a member of the Royal family.

The athletic star rapidly performs one stunt after another and there is not a foot of superfluous padding. It is exciting and entertaining and besides a good cast there is an army of extra people. Wonderful sets and good photography augment a picture that has been exceptionally well directed. Will register heavily with all Fairbanks fans.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities will be the same everywhere. It should pull exceptionally strong and please immensely.—Length, 8 reels.—Released September 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Douglas Fairbanks is coming with his first United Artists attraction. The organization is a combination of Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, D. W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks and the initial production is the Fairbanks production coming to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

"His Majesty, The American," is the title and it is heralded as by far the best motion picture that Mr. Fairbanks has ever made. The athletic star is said to be particularly active in this picture with innumerable new stunts and it is the regular Fairbanks type of adventure and romance.

In the role of William Brooks, he appears as a restless young man of Manhattan always on the lookout for excitement. He runs around with the fire department and even has a fire alarm installed in his apartment.

When activity palls he goes to Mexico and mixes it up with the bandits south of the Rio Grande. The mystery surrounding his life promises to be solved when he is urged by a cablegram to go to a small kingdom in Europe. He believes that he will find his family tree there and who knows but that he may discover that he has a mother in the land of the living.

The little kingdom is in turmoil when the young man arrives and he plunges right into the midst of it. Of course the charming young maiden is there and he locates her in one of the most beautiful gardens imaginable. And he leads an army of loyal soldiers against the plotters and their crowd of would-be revolutionists.

Besides an army of extra people the cast in support of the star is declared to be particularly notable. The director has prepared massive sets to properly present this attraction in a big way.

As the first release of the "Big Four," Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, The American," is said to blaze a stirring trail.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture there are several strong points to emphasize beside the fact that the star is Douglas Fairbanks and the title is "His Majesty, The American." Make prominent mention that this is the trail blazer for Mary Pickford, Charley Chaplin, D. W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks in their recently organized United Artists Corporation.

This is your strongest bet as the "Big Four" collectively have undoubtedly a tremendous drawing power. And the initial offering of this combination would naturally be considered well worth seeing. There are innumerable angles that will immediately occur to the exhibitor for additional exploitation but none is needed outside the facts just mentioned. Concentrate in securing the widest publicity for those few facts alone and do not divide your efforts on other angles.

Douglas Fairbanks in his latest United Artists' feature, "His Majesty, the American"

PROGRAM READER

It was Hip, Hip and Hurrah, all the time. He was just naturally full of zip and pep.

Living in Manhattan is supposed to be exciting enough in itself. But even when he attached himself as a voluntary appendix to the New York Fire Department the activity soon began to pall.

Finally he journeyed to Mexico and mixed it with the bandits. But even there he found the going too easy.

His big opportunity came when he received an urgent invitation to visit a little tabloid kingdom in Europe. This little nationette was even a mite smaller than Graustark but it had an army and plotters and revolutionists and castles and pretty girls—one in particular.

Our hero is none other than Douglas Fairbanks, portraying the role of William Brooks in "His Majesty, The American," which comes to this theatre next week.

This is the first release of the recently organized United Artists which consists of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, D. W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks.

It is heralded as the best by far of any of the previous Fairbanks productions and is the trail blazer for the attractions of these four screen notables.

CATCH LINES

He cites the cite in excitement and acts the act in activity,—Douglas Fairbanks.

From a fire alarm in New York to a kingdom in Europe via Mexico was merely a short step for,—Douglas Fairbanks.

One long mad whirl of furious activities looked like the quiet simple life to,—Douglas Fairbanks.

"THE VIRTUOUS MODEL"
(PATHE)

Slow Moving Picture Is Fairly Diverting

"THE VIRTUOUS MODEL" may be summed up as fairly interesting entertainment despite its hoary theme, its slow moving action, and the heroic attitudes that are struck off by the principal players. We say fairly interesting because any story based upon a quadrangle which concerns an artist and his model is sure to have its values. Its chief fault is its slow development, but this could be overlooked if the plot and characters were not so carefully planted at the start, thus depriving it of any suspensive interest.

Mr. Capellani shows evidences here of his "Red Lantern" skill in the way he has sounded the dramatic possibilities. He has woven the threads together with the proper ingredients. But his work is largely counteracted by his two leading players, Miss Cassinelli and Mr. Serrano, who have not shown the utmost appreciation for their roles. The latter is inclined toward heroics, which robs the character of naturalness.

There is no false sentiment, though this element gets considerably "sticky" at times, which is only natural when one considers the lachrymose character of the theme. Mr. Capellani could dispense with his death bed scene. Dying gasps of patients fighting hard for life have become antiquated. The technicalities are well arranged. Franklyn Farnum and Marie Chambers walk off with the acting honors.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Denise Fleury.....Dolores Cassinelli
Her Mother.....Helen Lowell
Suzanne Carton, an outcast...May Hopkins
Paul Brehant, an idealist...Vincent Serrano
Edward Dorin, his friend..Franklyn Farnum
Countess Olga Vosloff.....Marie Chambers
Jacques Le Sage, a poet.....Paul Doucet
By Pierre Wolff.
Scenario by Albert Capellani.
Directed by Albert Capellani.
Photographed by Lucien Andriot.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Albert Capellani's newest production is "The Virtuous Model," an adaptation of Pierre Wolff's play, "The Gutter," which met with great success upon the Parisian stage. It will appear at the ——— theatre beginning ——— with Dolores Cassinelli as the star. She appears as Denise Fleury, a product of the Paris slums. At a cabaret one night, whither she had gone to escape the sordid atmosphere of her environment, she is rescued from a certain moral leper by the artist and sculptor, Paul Brehant. After her mother dies she accepts his proffer of assistance and becomes his model.

Inspired by his new-found love he turns out a masterpiece and they go to the country to enjoy their honeymoon. Paul has a friend, Edward Dorin, who is also solicitous of Denise's happiness. And there is another woman in his life, the Countess Olga Vosloff, who is piqued over his matrimonial venture. She hastens to the country to sow seeds of distrust in the hearts of the honeymooners. "Why must you keep this man from his art?" she tells Denise. "If you love Paul you will return to the gutter where you belong!" are the stinging words which drive Denise to Dorin. But Paul, appreciating the character of his wife and the inspiration she has been to him, follows to find that Dorin is truly his friend. Thus husband and wife are united in happiness.

Albert Capellani has given the story a fine production. He has successfully brought out the dramatic intensity, the pulsating pathos, and the triumph of virtue over obstacles. Miss Cassinelli contributes a performance marked by sincerity and feeling. Vincent Serrano, Marie Chambers, Franklyn Farnum render good assistance.

PROGRAM READER

Paul Brehant, the famous sculptor, was an idealist. He thought he had found the ideal woman in Olga, then one day he learned otherwise. Into his life came Denise, a typical child of Montmartre, but as yet untouched by its temptations. And so she became his inspiration, his model. And she posed for the statue of Venus. But the other woman would not be satisfied. She would trespass on forbidden ground. Was Paul disillusioned? Did he find in Denise only a temporary infatuation? Did she return to the gutter from which she came? And the other woman? Did she pick up the threads of an old romance? And what of the other man? Was he honorable?

These questions are answered in the Albert Capellani production, "The Virtuous Model," an adaptation of Pierre Wolff's play, "The Gutter." It is a rare treat. It shows the temptations and pleasures of Parisian life. You will have an opportunity of seeing the picture next ——— at this theatre.

"The Virtuous Model" is a Pathe release

SUGGESTIONS

Make a big spread on the director's name for your exploitation. Albert Capellani is a big figure in the screen world and you should capitalize on the fact that he is the sponsor of "The Red Lantern." Mention this. And the star should be played up in every possible way. Run stills of her and stories in your local press. She is a new star and patrons always like to see new faces on the screen. Mention that the play is adapted from a play by Pierre Wolff, one of the best playwrights of the Paris stage.

Feature it as a story of temptations and pleasures of studio life in Paris. Bring out its message of faith—emphasize its notes of pathos, and heart interest. Use circular letters here and get in touch with people who are not steady picturegoers. The name of the director should warrant this plan being used. Treat it in a dignified way.

There are any number of angles to feature it if you go in for atmosphere. You can spend money for an artistic stage setting suggestive of an artist's studio. And make a bid for the women. Tell them that it is a woman's play. Bring out the human interest quality in your copy. And cash in on the advertising value of the title.

CATCH LINES

He met her in a cabaret and she became his virtuous model. And his inspiration. Her lovely form was immortalized in marble. Then came disillusion and despair until—See "The Virtuous Model."

See "The Virtuous Model," a picture of Parisian life and its temptations and pleasures. See how a girl from the slums inspires a man to the heights. And then—What follows will be told next ——— at this theatre. Don't miss it.

"THE LAST OF THE DUANES"
(FOX)

Farnum Is His Virile Self in Vivid Western

THE combination of Zane Grey and William Farnum is here again sounding its drawing power. Their names have been tried and not found wanting—and since both are synonymous with vigor and vitality, one may rest assured that red-blooded entertainment will be offered. Yet it strikes us that this story is not Grey at his best or else it has suffered in translation. It has not the compelling grip of his Mormon tales in which Farnum appeared nor does it have the depth of plot and characterization of its forerunners. Its sympathetic trend and its adventurous line of action, however, are sufficient to tide it over as good pictorial fare.

The heroic Farnum is persecuted again in the familiar Farnum way, though this time he is an outlaw. He gives the spectator episode after episode of rousing action, before the finale introduces him a respected citizen. This conclusion may be an arbitrary arrangement of the director or it may not. Anyway sentimental scenes are eliminated by a subtitle which states that "Duane married, settled down and had a lot of husky children," or words to that effect. Which gives the lie to the main title, doesn't it?

Mr. Edwards has spared us, at least, the usual scene of the happy couple riding into the dying sunset. Giving breadth to other figures are Lemar Johnstone, Charles Clary, G. Raymond Nye and Louise Lovely. A word for the scenery: It forms a fitting background for the thrills.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Oct. 12.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest Wiliam Farnum production, a splendid picturization of the Zane Grey novel, "The Last of the Duanes," which comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— is a stirring drama of Texas border days. The star and the author have cooperated before and this cooperation has meant a great deal for pictures. Mr. Grey is an author who draws life as he sees it. His characters are virile, fighting men, the kind of men that fit the star as if they were conceived with him in view. It is a tale of border outlawry that is unfolded here and Mr. Farnum has never been seen to better advantage in a western character role than in his portrayal of Buck Duane, son of a feudist.

The Duanes have always been noted for their ability to handle a gun. Buck is inclined to forget the traditions of his family and live a peaceful life but he is forced to fight and kill a man in self-defence. So he is forced to flee for his life. He becomes a hunted man—an outlaw. He rescues a girl from a bandit chief—a man who is evading the law like himself. And after she is recaptured from him she escapes again and reaches his mother's home. Later Buck is involved in a murder which he never committed. A price is on his head. And so he goes to give himself up. And he is given his freedom if he will catch the real murderers. Which he does. But only after a series of hair-raising situations which he experiences.

It is an exciting photoplay—one calculated to hold the spectators spellbound from start to finish. It unfolds intense dramatic situations that follow one another in rapid succession. It is western to the core and typically Grey—typically Farnum. The star gives a masterly performance.

SUGGESTIONS

A Farnum picture is always certain of attracting patronage. So you don't need to go in for extraordinary exploitation. You can bank upon his drawing power and the name of the author. Everyone knows when he sees a Zane Grey story enacted upon the screen that he is in for sixty minutes of tense drama of the West. So you can feature the author's name and give it all the publicity it can stand. And don't neglect the star. Although he is well known, nevertheless people like to read about him.

A tense moment from the Fox production, "The Last of the Duanes," starring William Farnum

PROGRAM READER

That stirring story of Texas border days, "The Last of the Duanes," by that master of realism, Zane Grey, with William Farnum in the stellar role, will come to the ——— theatre in the near future. The star has appeared in Mr. Grey's stories before. And he has given them life. You remember "The Lone Star Ranger." You will remember "The Last of the Duanes." As Buck Duane, Mr. Farnum offers a characterization extraordinary in its vigor and vitality. And about him revolves a most attractive love story.

How he is forced to flee to evade the law, how he joins a group of outlaws, how a price is put upon his head for a crime he doesn't commit, how he gives himself up knowing that his rash act may cost him his life, how he earns his freedom and hunts the desperadoes who were lately his friends, how happiness comes to him at last are events that compose a most vivid and compelling drama—a drama that abounds in thrills and action. It is a big picture—it has to be to fit William Farnum's personality and talent. Don't miss it if you enjoy a redblooded star and a redblooded play.

CATCH LINES

See William Farnum in Zane Grey's great story of Texas border days, "The Last of the Duanes." You will find rapid-fire action, fascinating romance, a virile star and a superb production.

$5000 Reward was offered for the capture of Buck Duane; Dead or Alive. And he gave himself up because he was innocent. He might swing for it, since he lived in Texas and they don't wait to argue down there. What came of his rash act? See "The Last of the Duanes."

"DANGEROUS WATERS"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Fantastic Story Has Shallow Depths

ALMOST peculiar composition is William Desmond's latest picture. While it offers nothing new in plot and characterization, there being the familiar conflict of rejected hero endeavoring to win back his sweetheart when she is infatuated with a moral leper, still in its introductory scenes it gives promise of unfolding a note of originality. The setting for the conflict is fantastic since it conducts the spectator to a banquet where the figures of the drama appear in mythical disguise.

Here is Mr. Desmond portraying Vulcan, the god of thunder. And a husky iron moulder he makes! This fantastical trend is surefire for a time, but it soon grows monotonous. The author, to emphasize this novel twist, has forgotten to add variety. The result is shallow depths are sounded. Comes the climax with the heroine reaching the great decision. She has chosen the rotter. It is in the fifth reel and the thought arises how can it be finished on time since the drama soars with melodramatic situations. The scene is her boudoir. and Vulcan is dying on the floor, with Adonis as his assassin. A scandal upon the house of Venus sure enough.

But the author to get out of his predicament utilizes the dream situation. The heroine awakes to a proper realization of things. Mr. Desmond, by sheer force of personality, lifts the story above the mediocre level, and his support is entirely adequate. The picture is splendidly staged.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Supervised by Jesse D. Hampton.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Desmond will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "Dangerous Waters." This is a sort of depatrture for the star as it takes him out of the boundless West and sets him down in the idle rich society of New York. "Dangerous Waters" is from the pen of George Elwood Jenks, while the production has been taken care of under the supervision of Jesse D. Hampton. Mr. Desmond is supported by a brilliant supporting cast that includes such competent players as Marguerita De La Motte, who is appearing opposite the star these days, Arthur Carew, Beatrice La Plante, Ida Lewis and Walter Perry.

The picture is a tale of love and self-indulgence in the metropolis. Jimmie Moulton, the character played by Mr. Desmond, has returned to New York after a lengthy sojourn in the West. He belongs to society's inner circle and it is his object to marry Cora Burton, if he can. But she doesn't appreciate Jimmie's fine character because she is temporarily infatuated with Victor De Lara. Her sweetheart had warned her but the chains of dissipation and self-indulgence had made ber considerably fickle of heart. After a certain party she decides to make the great decision which is in favor of De Lara.

Cora is distinctly shocked when she finds him in the room and as she struggles her old sweetheart, Jimmie, comes to her rescue although he is mortally wounded in his act. Her lover opens his eyes and with his dying breath he confesses that he is in the wrong. Why? Because her reputation is at stake. Then she awakes It is all a dream. She turns to the window to see Jimmie and the sybarite fighting. Yes Jimmie is alive and fighting for her. And so she appreciates him at last.

PROGRAM READER

He belonged to one of the first families of New York but because society spelled idleness he went out West to make good. Yes he left his sweetheart behind and thought she would be cured of her infatuation for a certain society butterfly. But when he returned East he found that she was completely under the spell of the love-lizard. She was bored and wanted a new thrill. And it came at "The Feast of the Gods," a Bohemian party. The man from the West was attired as Vulcan, the god of thunder, while the sybarite appeared as Adonis.

Well Adonis didn't look much like masculine perfection when Vulcan finished with him. Still the punishment had no effect upon the girl. Indeed Adonis was piloting her into the free-love channels or dangerous waters, when the Westerner woke up. And she opened her eyes at the same time. A snappy satire on the high-jinks of smart society with a healthy hero, a delectable heroine, and plenty of rousing action. That is 'Dangerous Waters" which comes to this theatre next ——— with William Desmond.

CATCH LINES

You've seen Bill Desmond in most every kind of character but you never saw him attired as Vulcan, the god of thunder. He attends a banquet of the gods and—See "Dangerous Waters."

He had grown tired of society's idle ways so he journeyed West to make a man of himself. Perhaps she would appreciate him then. But when he returned he found her sailing on dangerous waters. What came of it? See "Dangerous Waters."

Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see the popular Bill Desmond in a highly original role. He appears as Vulcan, the god of thunder. And what do you suppose he does? Why he licks the everlasting tar out of Adonis. Humor and pathos are vital fatcors here.

She was young and naturally she hadn't learned how to discriminate between men. She had dismissed Bill Desmond and taken up a sybarite. But Bill came through and—See "Dangerous Waters."

A society girl of blood and beauty, she had reached the age of indiscretion. She couldn't make up her mind whether to accept her old sweetheart or the sybarite. Then she dreamed and her eyes were opened eventually to the truth. See "Dangerous Waters."

"A TEMPERAMENTAL WIFE" (FIRST NATIONAL)

Constance Talmadge Stars in Sparkling Comedy

"A TEMPERAMENTAL WIFE" may be safely put down as one of the most satisfying comedies of the season. It is made to order for Constance Talmadge, with the result she is never out of character. Like her previous pieces based upon matrimonial mix-ups, the authors have followed this pattern because it is the only logical thing to do where this spirited actress is concerned. She stands alone in the part of a temperamental wife, a runaway bride, a hoydenish girl or what you will. Her parts are all alike in personality, just as Charles Ray's are alike. So she has mellowed them into perfect representations of their kind.

She wins a bashful husband here only to lose him because she wants to. A perfectly feminine and temperamental thing to do. And she pouts because of his indifference and a certain stenographer. And the situations always discernible, but bright and sparkling withal, leap forward with spontaneous action and bubbling mirth. Only at rare intervals does the story falter. And it catches its zip with subtitles at these weak points.

A frail thing if you want to be analytical, but given life because of imagination, direction and interpretation. The picture is charming of atmosphere. The star is brilliantly supported by Wyndham Standing as the husband. A finished actor, his naturalness draws you into intimate contact. Armand Kalisz is good as an international lounge lizard.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Billie Billings.....Constance Talmadge
Senator Newton.....Wyndham Standing
Dr. Wise.....Ben Hendricks
Smith.....E. Jensen
The Count.....Armand Kaliz
By John Emerson and Anita Loos.
Scenario by John Emerson and Anita Loos.
Directed by John Emerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest John Emerson-Anita Loos production, "A Temperamental Wife," comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———. This should interest picturegoers not only because of the talented sponsors who have never failed to write and direct entertaining stories for the screen, but because it presents Constance Talmadge in a typical Constance Talmadge role—a role which brings out all her feminine graces, all her distinctiveness and individuality.

Miss Talmadge portrays the role of Billie Billings, a capricious, temperamental young woman who is determined to catch the bashful bachelor, Senator Newton of Nevada. He is just her kind of a man, since he has a reputation of neither speaking to nor looking at any woman. So she cleverly plays her game and entraps him with matrimony. Now the Senator has a secretary by the name of Smith. He has never told Billie that Smith is a woman. But when the honeymoon is over Billie finds out that her spouse has never told her the truth. Hence a quarrel ensues. A quarrel which leads almost to an estrangement. Billie demands that the secretary be discharged and the Senator is just as determined that Smith will remain in his employment

"You choose between Smith and me!" demands the enraged Billie. And the Senator chooses his secretary. So Billie shuts herself in her room and finds communion of spirit with an international lounge lizard, Count Tosoff de Zoolac. She even runs away with him to the Hicksville Inn and registers under his name. So the Senator hastens with his secretary to spoil his wife's pretty game. And Billie establishes her innocence and is downright sorry when she learns that her husband is not interested in Smith beyond a secretarial way. So they depart on a second honeymoon. A splendid cast assists the star.

PROGRAM READER

The scene was a country hotel at midnight. Wifey had arrived with Count Tosoff de Zoolac and registered under his name. She would show her husband, Senator Newton, tbat her heart was not to be tampered with! And hubby arrived, not to make a scene, but to be disillusioned. He thought his wife had reached the age of discretion. But he didn't know that he had married a temperamental maiden. But he forgave her when he found that she had remained truthful with him. And she learned not to distrust stenographers. Just because this one worked for another woman's husband was no reason that she couldn't have a man of her own. Thus Billie learned how to govern her jealous fancies.

This is the climax of that zippy, delectable, delightful comedy of a temperamental wife, her bashful husband, and a certain stenographer. It is written by those celebrated co-authors, John Emerson and Anita Loos. And you know what that means—an hour of hilarious fun. And besides you have the inimitable Constance Talmadge. See her in "A Temperamental Wife" next ———. You will vote it the best comedy of the season.

Constance Talmadge in her initial First National offering "A Temperamental Wife"

SUGGESTIONS

What excellent exploitation you have in "A Temperamental Wife!" First you have the name of the star, Constance Talmadge, who everyone likes to read about.. Feature her in every argument, every newspaper story. Then there are the authors, John Emerson and Anita Loos, who have turned out story after story for a number of screen stars. They are the leaders in their field—the field of comedy drama. There is a treat in every subtitle—every situation. Play them up big because your patrons know what to expect. You don't need to go in for sensational exploitation here. But you can use a good amount of newspaper space, teasers, stills, catch lines, and circular letters.

It would be well to mail out invitations for this picture—it is so high class. Tell that it is swift moving, peppy comedy-drama of matrimony—of a bold little minx for a wife and an extremely bashful husband. Have your paper run an article about the star every day. And see to it that the picture is publicized far in advance. Catch lines looks like the proper angle to concentrate upon. And you can write a lot of clever copy around the title and the plot. The catch lines we have written would fit excellently in your advertising scheme. The chance is here to clean up. Go to it.

"LOOT"
(UNIVERSAL)

Crook Melodrama Has Its Serial Moments

FROM the pages of the Saturday Evening Post has come the latest Universal release, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche. Which is not to say that because of its former connection it is only entitled to words of the highest praise. Interesting stories may suffer in translation. By this we do not mean to infer that there is anything the matter with the scenario.

What appears to be mostly at fault is the direction. True, Mr. Dowlan has taken advantage of its important elements—action and suspense—and he has incorporated a note of mystery to intrigue the mind. Yet there are bald spots in the continuity which make the picture look like a haphazard arrangement of serial episodes. A gang of crooks plot to steal a valuable necklace from a certain emissary. But they are foiled at every turn.

It is a puzzle to us why they are not caught before the final scenes what with a telephone in their underground den, and the way they "Shush-h-h-h" in groups of three during their travels. There is not much imagination put into the work and it strains credulity because of its movieish attitudes. Ora Carew is the woman in the case and a pretty one. The other players are adequate.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

He had come to America to take back a valuable necklace. No thought of danger had entered his mind, not even when he was accosted at the wharf by friendly strangers. Had he known that a band of international crooks were dogging his footsteps he might have valued his life more highly. But a girl warned him of his danger. But the warning came too late. They captured him, but didn't find the necklace. So the crooks robbed the jewelry store in broad daylight, for the necklace was hidden in the vaults.

How they were eventually caught, how the Englishman recovered the jewel, how he reciprocated the girl's affection are events wbich bring a climax to a fascinating crook story—a story of mystery, action and suspense. A picture which will make your hearts beat faster—a picture of love, adventure and intrigue. That is "Loot," written by Arthur Somers Roche. Perhaps you remember reading the story in the Saturday Evening Post. Come to this theatre next ——— and see it on the screen.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Loot" is the feature that holds the place of honor on the ——— theatre's program for ——— of ——— week. This is a new Universal offering taken from Arthur Somers Roche's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name. It is a tale of the underworld, which is sufficient reason why it should please picturegoers. It is seldom that this type of subject is measured with such action and suspense as are incorporated here. The author has skillfully drawn his plot which concerns the scheme to steal a valuable necklace.

An emissary of a rich Englishman comes to America to take the jewel back witb him. But he no sooner steps off the boat than he becomes a marked man. The head of the robber band travels under the name of "The Shadow" and it is this master criminal who engineers the plan of robbing the jewelry store where the necklace is deposited. Hildreth, the emissary, is conducted from the paths of danger by Morn Light, a girl who is more or less in the clutches of the Shadow. Yet good fortune doesn't follow him, for he is caught and held prisoner. The jewelry store is robbed in broad daylight by the criminals and they make their escape on the Shadow's yacht. Detective Tyron, knowing that they have no means of escape except by the water route, follows in a revenue cutter and the thieves are successfully rounded up.

The picture unfolds a rich assortment of melodramatic thrills and the suspense is cleverly worked out. It was scenarioized by Violet Clark and produced under the direction of William C. Dowlan. There is no star, but the cast is a well balanced one and contains such capable players as Ora Carew, Joe Girard, Darrell Foss and Helen Gibson.

"THE MERRY GO ROUND"
(FOX)

Peggy Hyland Stars in a Gypsy Role

THE kidnapped child idea is the piece de resistance of Peggy Hyland's newest release, "The Merry Go-Round." It is a tale of circus life with the star appearing as a gypsy ticket seller when the action opens. And because she is a member of the picturesque nomads one knows that her true identity must be established in due time. If the circus cannot be made to pay—well, it can be sold to a convenient young spendthrift. And when he proceeds to fall in love, lo and behold, gypsy "mother," in a fit of conscience, informs daughter that she is the child of the rich Pomeroys.

The action is arbitrary throughout. The parents welcome her back and duly lock her in her room. But she escapes through a window (windows are never locked for disobedient daughters), and comes back at the stroke of twelve, because she is eighteen years old at that hour. And so she has her romance without parental interruption.

The fault of this piece is its lack of continuity. Conveniences and coincidences are everywhere. And it soars to fantastic, and often ridiculous heights in its irresponsible journey. In its favor are its circus atmosphere, colorful detail, and the portrayals of the players. The faults exceed the virtues and the notes of heart interest and sympathy never find expression because of them.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 21.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Peggy Hyland, the dainty Fox star, will appear at the ——— theatre next ——— in her latest comedy-drama entitled, "The Merry-Go-Round." This is an adaptation of Richard Washburn Child's story and is a sentimental subject of a girl who is reared as a gypsy and, who, when the picture opens, is a ticket seller in Crump's Colossal Combined Carnival Shows. The circus is not much of a success despite the alluring charms of Gypsy, and Jerry Crump finds it a task to make both ends meet. However, an opportunity presents itself to dispose of the show to Jack Hamilton, a young spendthrift.

One day it happens to strike the town where Gypsy was kidnapped years before. Inasmuch as Jack has fallen in love with the girl, her gypsy "mother" has a fit of conscience and confesses that the charming ticket seller is not her daughter, but was stolen in infancy from Andrew Pomeroy, the town's wealthiest citizen. Consequently Jack hastens to impart the glad news to the parents.. So Pomeroy journeys to the circus and the girl's identity is established by a photograph.

So she leaves the show and we next find her duly installed in the Pomeroy home as Susie Alice Pomeroy. Her parents are considerably shocked to find that their daughter is lacking in deportment and she further piques them because of her affection for Hamilton. They lock her in her room, but she escapes and finds shelter in Jack's car. When the clock strikes twelve they journey back to the Pomeroys, for it is her birthday and she is of age. So Andrew Pomeroy is compelled to marry the youngsters, he being a justice of the peace. Miss Hyland is thoroughly charming in the stellar role and receives excellent support.

SUGGESTIONS

Your exploitation on this picture should be based entirely with the star and the character of her story. It is a tale of circus life, of a gypsy girl who becomes a ticket seller though she is in reality a child of wealthy parents stolen in infancy. Bring out in your copy the atmosphere of the tale and use catch lines and teasers along this angle. This is a picture which should be exploited in a circus way to get across. So have the picture announced from the stage by a barker. You might have him attired like the genuine article. Have your ticket seller attired as a gypsy. The picture must stand all the advertising it can get.

As far as newspaper copy goes you might feature it as a romance of the big tents—a romance of the open life.

Peggy Hyland's latest Fox effort

PROGRAM READER

She didn t know that she was a Pomeroy. She only thought herself a lowly gypsy. So she was perfectly happy selling tickets for Crumps Combined Colossal Carnival Shows. However, the show did not make a great deal of money for its owner and when he saw the opportunity to sell it he took advantage of it. Now the new owner was Jack Hamilton, a wealthy young man, and Gypsy fascinated him so that he soon found himself in love. Then her fortune-telling "mother" confessed that the girl was stolen in infancy. Luckily the show arrived one day in Gypsy's old home town and it wasn't long before she was reunited with her parents.

How she shocked them, how she escaped from the rigid atmosphere of the house, how she came back when she found herself of age and compelled her father to marry her, are events that are interestingly told in a compelling climax. The picture is "The Merry-Go-Round," and dainty Peggy Hyland is the star. Don't fail to see this charming comedy-drama when it comes to this theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

She was a ticket seller in a circus and a young, rich man was so fascinated by her charming manner that he bought the show and made her general manager. Then one day—See "The Merry-Go-Round" with dainty Peggy Hyland.

A romantic photoplay of circus life—that is "The Merry-Go-Round." It affords you an intimate view of circus people off parade and on the open road. Don't miss it.

She was brought up a gypsy and compelled to sell tickets in a circus. She longed to run away, yet the sawdust of the ring, the atmosphere of the show, drew her.

IN AND OUT OF THE WEST COAST STUDIOS

the Baroness de Meyer. The cast includes Sam deGrasse, Clyde Fillmore, Una Trevelyn, Maude George and Mae Busch.

With Frank Mayo heading the cast, Director William Dowland soon will begin work on "The Peddler," a Saturday Evening Post story by Henry C. Rowland, picturized by Phillip Hurn.

At the Ince Plant

TWO special productions are in process of completion at the Ince studio, while three others have just been begun. In addition, the special picture by C. Gardner Sullivan, "Americanism vs. Bolshevism" is nearing completion under the direction of Fred Niblo.

Director Irvin Willatt has the supervision of the cutting and editing of "Behind the Door," a story by Gouverneur Morris in which Hobart Bosworth, supported by Jane Novak, is featured.

Charles Ray is completing his work on the so-far untitled story by Agnes C. Johnston, in which Ray portrays a youth who stutters.

First scenes have been made of "Mary's Ankle" in which Douglas MacLean and Doris May are being co-starred in the third of their series for Ince studio. Lloyd Ingraham is directing with Bert Cann in charge of photography.

The cast has been chosen, and first scenes are being made for the next Dorothy Dalton picture, being made in the East under the direction of Charles Giblyn. The story is being filmed of "Black is White," from the book by George Barr McCutcheon, of which E. Magnus Ingleton made the screen adaptation. The cast includes Holmes Herbert, Jack Crosby, Lillian Lawrence, Joseph Ranby and Claire Messereau.

Enid Bennet, who has been enjoying a long vacation, is returning to work under the direction of Fred Niblo, upon the completion by that director of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism." Her new story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Woman in the Suit Case."

Gladys Leslie in the latest Vitagraph production, "The Gray Towers Mystery"

Charles Ray's forthcoming picture is to be from a story written by Julien Josephson, with direction by Jerome Storm.

Script for the next Louise Glaum's special, made by J. Parker Read, Jr. Productions, is nearing completion and first scenes will be taken in a few weeks. Mr. Read is withholding the announcement of the title and the author of the story, but he declares it to be one of the most unusual fitted to his star's talents. Mr. Read has just finished supervision of the Louise Glaum subject, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," and is preparing for a brief vacation in the mountains.

Here and There

KING BAGGOT, with Rhea Mitchell playing opposite him, has begun work in the leading role of the seventh episode of "The Hawk's Trail," being filmed under the direction of William Van Dyke at the Burston Studio. Included in Baggot's support are Harry Lorraine, Stanton Heck and Fred Wyndemere. The story for the serial was written in collaboration by Louis Burston and Nan Blair.

Preparations for the next serial in which Francis Ford will star are being made at his studio in Hollywood, while Ford, following the completion of "The Mystery of 13," is enjoying a brief vacation.

Los Angeles film men are receiving invitations for a pre-view the latter part of September, of "Out of the Dust," the eight-reel drama of early Western life, recently completed by McCarthy Picture Productions. The picture is said to be one of the most attractive offerings of pioneer subjects which have been filmed, and as a result of the success of its director, John P. McCarthy, it is said arrangements are being made by the distributing organizations for future releases.

Hank Mann has completed work on his latest comedy being produced under the supervision of Morris R. Schlank. The comedian has an energetic role as the victim of an amateur dentist who administers laughing gas. Bathing girls and other beauties form an effective combination for the comedy.

Production has been begun of the next big Geraldine Farrar vehicle, her third and last before she resumes concert work for the coming season. Her story, which is being directed by Reginald Barker, is an adaptation from a widely-known Spanish novel made by J. G. Hawks, and is said to abound in color, movement and sensation with Lou Tellegen playing opposite her. Selection of the cast after weeks of study included the following support: Mme. Rose Dione, the French actress who made her screen debut with Miss Farrar in "The World and Its Woman," Macey Harlan, also in "The World and Its Woman," Bertram Grassby, Dorothy Cummings and Milton Ross. Percy Hilburn, who has photographed Miss Farrar's other productions, again will be at the camera.

Al Jennings has begun work on the second of his series of two-reel featurettes, dramatizing the incidents in his association with Sidney Porter, better known as O. Henry, the noted fiction writer. The picture is under the direction of H. W. Bergman and Vivian Gane plays the leading feminine role opposite the former bandit. So far no name has been chosen.

First of the new series of Helen Gibson Railroad Stories soon will be in course of production, President S. L. Barnhard at present being engaged with H. M. Owens, general manager, in engaging a director and a supporting cast.

Under the direction of Alvin J. Neitz, Neal Hart, star of dramas of Western type, this week, was on location in the production of a forthcoming two-reel Western drama of modern life, the name of which so far has not been chosen.

Mel St. Clair, former director with Mack Sennett, and more recently producer of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, has been engaged by the Capital Film Company to direct a series of two-reel comedies soon to be produced at that studio. Director St. Clair and General Manager Owens at present are casting the first of the productions.

Three attractive scenes from Mary MacLaren's production, "The Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," giving a glimpse of rural Scotland. The story is from that of Henry C. Rowland, and is presented by Universal

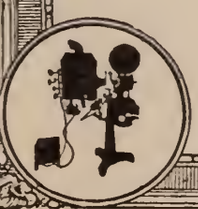
Simplex

WHY DO NATIONALLY KNOWN ARCHITECTS SPECIFY SIMPLEX?



Realizing that regardless of architectural beauty—decorations—or conveniences, NO THEATRE CAN BE ANY MORE SUCCESSFUL THAN ITS PROJECTION WILL ALLOW IT TO BE, the architects whose names are connected with the finest theatre buildings erected or contemplated now work hand in hand with the Simplex builders.

This preference for Simplex by nationally known theatre specialists should furnish food for thought to exhibitors and projectionists alike.

But by including Simplex in the theatres which they have already erected and those that they are building, these architects are only following the lead of progressive projectionists and the leading producers, managers, directors and successful men in the industry.

These men realize that while some projectors are gradually being built to resemble the Simplex, there is only one quality which makes the Simplex pre-eminent—and that is Simplex quality.

The leaders of the industry experiment no longer. That is why they specify Simplex whenever perfect projection is required

The laboratory is a very important link in the chain which pulls moving picture results.

Our laboratory is at least as good as we say it is. We invite your inspection and profit by comparison.

If your "picture" is as good as you think it is, it is your duty to secure prints which properly reflect full values.

Our clients will tell you that our "quality plus service" is more than a mere selling phrase.

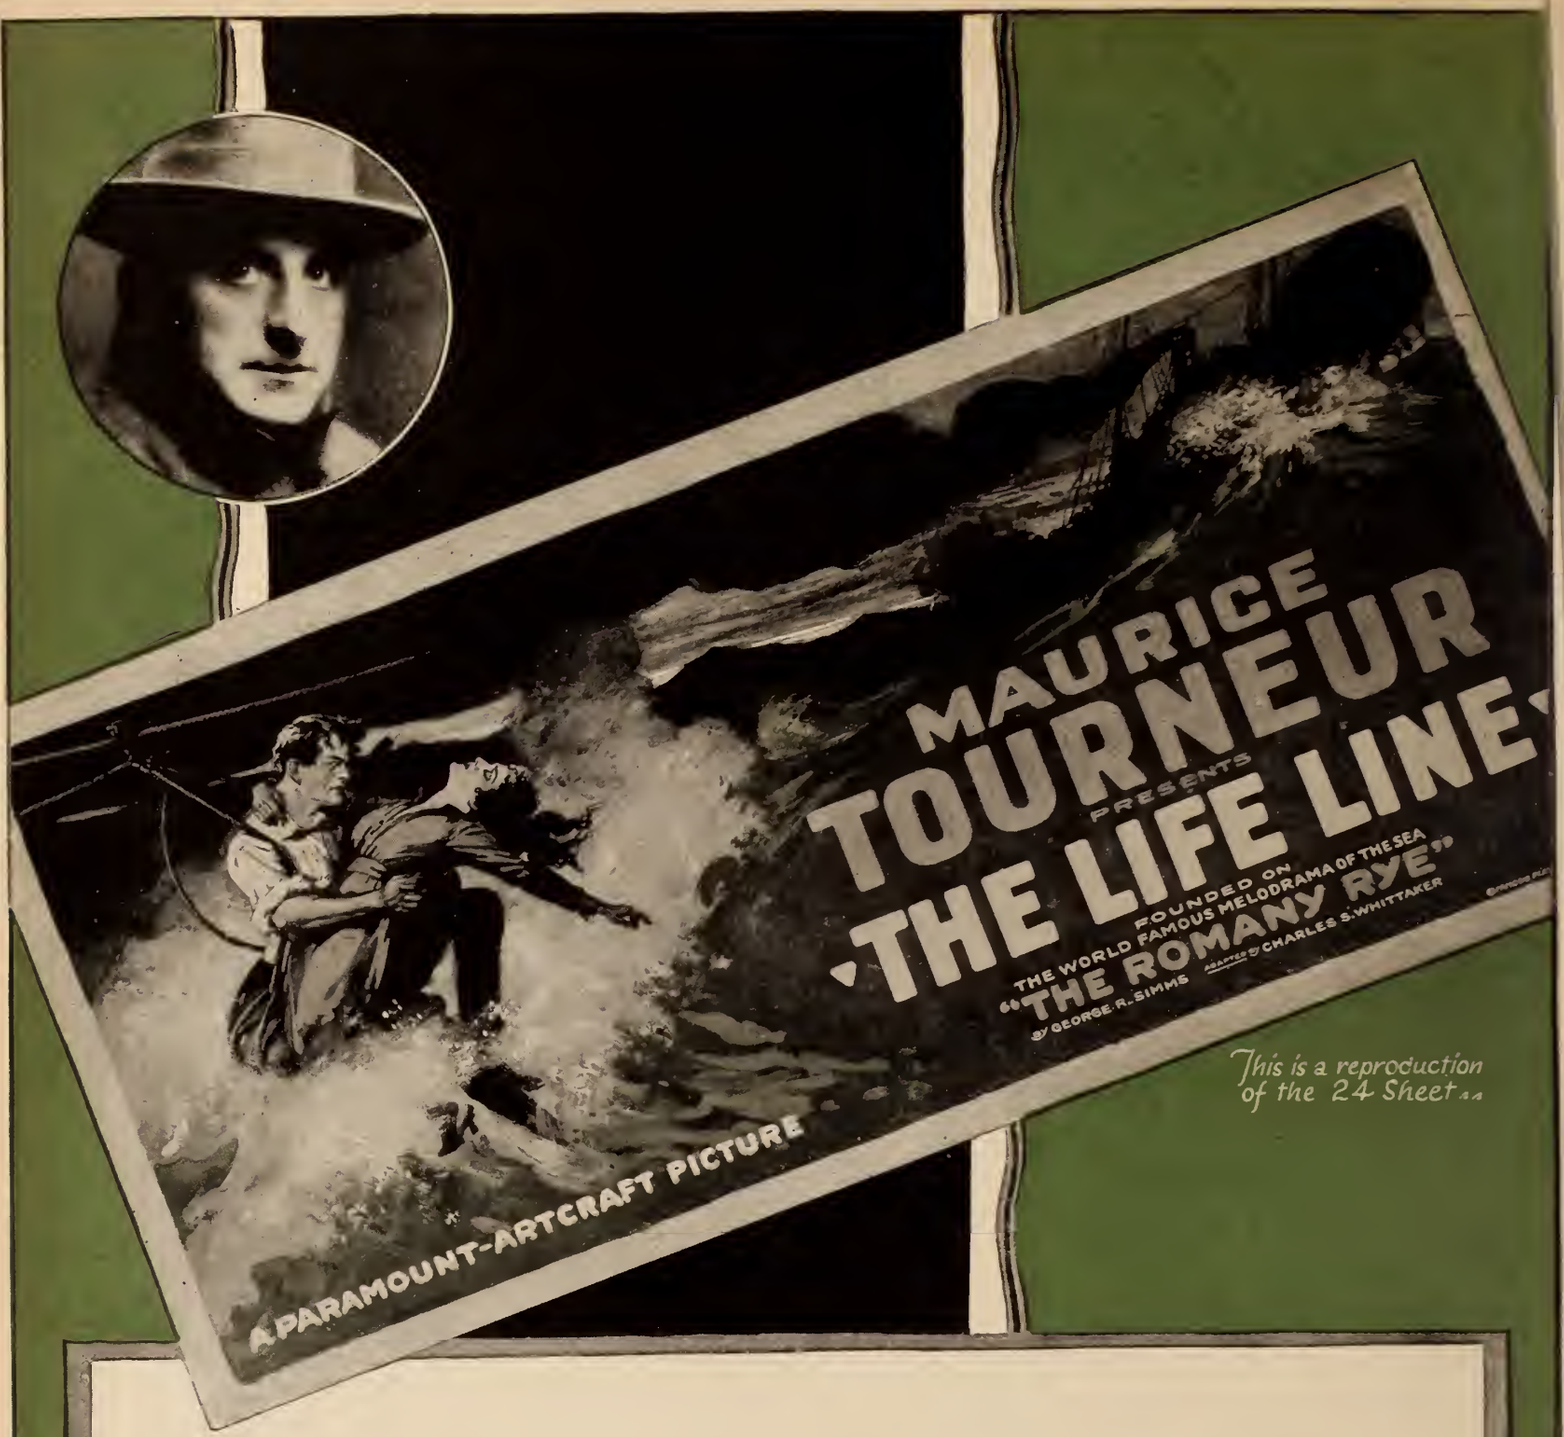
OCEANS OF WATER IN INTERIOR SCENES



BESIDES the great spectacle of the terrifying storm at sea and the wonderful exterior scenes showing the use of the life line and breeches buoy, there are interior scenes in this picture never before attempted, showing the rush of tons and tons of water down the great stair-cases of the ocean liner, through the cabins, filling the passage ways and great halls where Jack Holt actually risks his life to get Pauline Starke off the sinking ship.

Entertainment seekers will crowd to see "The Life Line."

THERE'S A REASON FOR EVERY THRILL

"THE LIFE LINE" is not a picture built up around one thrill-scene. It is a complete, vastly entertaining, humanly appealing story of unusual heart interest, filled with suspense, real drama and a great emotional climax.

The extraordinary scenes of the sea-storm, the wreck of the ocean liner and the use of the breeches buoy, the underworld scenes, the big theater scenes, are all part and parcel of a great, human, love-story.

"The Life Line" has been produced with all the attention to detail and the wonderful artistry that marks the very best of Maurice Tourneur's work.

The cast includes Jack Holt, Lew Cody, Pauline Starke, Seena Owen, Tully Marshal and Wallace Beery among a score of other artists.

THE FOLKS FROM PIKE COUNTY MISSOURI ARE THE FOLKS YOU ALL KNOW WELL

There's Jim Radburn, who educated his sweetheart over his head. There's Kate, who thought her schooling was a bar to her real love for Jim. There's Travers, the city chap who plans an elopement that ends in a shooting. There's Sam Fowler, jailed as a thief and innocent as a lamb. There's Joe Vernon, with a heart that's as true as the daughter he loves. There's Lizbeth and Dave and Emily and Bill all mixed up in this romance that made Augustus Thomas famous. It's the sort of picture-story that real folks always love.

It's human, exciting, romantic and heart warming. See it at your exchange.

Guilty! We Admit It

WE SHOULDER the responsibility. We ARE the sponsors (and for five years the sole exponents) of National Motion Picture Advertising.

Month after month, year after year, we have carried practically the whole burden.

But in that time we have sold the Motion Picture to the great American Public, to the classes as well as the masses.

Our dignified, wisely worded presentation of the case of the motion picture has aided materially in its elevation to its present high standing, and—

At the same time has ineffaceably established the words PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT as household words.

Altogether we have expended over $3,000,000 in this stimulation of interest in, and patronage to the motion picture theatre.

Thereby we have benefited everyone in any way identified with or interested in the success of this industry.

That we have profited substantially by this policy is but logical because we have painstakingly linked in close association the words PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT and QUALITY MOTION PICTURES.

And the Public today, the great Public which reads the Saturday Evening Post and other National periodicals—

Subconsciously thinks PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT when it thinks QUALITY MOTION PICTURES.

We are ranked among the great National Advertisers, and because we have backed up our advertising with pictures of a consistently high quality—

The name PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT now represents a tremendous asset to any theatre.

Are there any dissenting voices? There are not!

CARL LAEMMLE ANSWERS STROHEIM'S PROTEST

My dear Mr. Stroheim:

I have read your "protest to the trade" in which you object because I changed the title of your picture from "The Pinnacle" to "Blind Husbands."

If you wrote this protest merely to advertise the picture (and incidentally Mr. Stroheim), it was very clever. But if you wrote it in good faith, you could have saved yourself the cost of a page advertisement by sticking a stamp on it and mailing it to me.

Assuming that you wrote it in good faith, I will answer you in good faith:

The most serious charge you make against me is that this change of title is, to quote your own words, "the essence of commercialism." In your effort to shy a brick at me, you really missed fire and hit me with a bouquet instead.

I plead guilty to the charge of getting a title that will be commercially successful and helpful to the man who buys my goods—the exhibitor. You are not the only author or director who has objected to a change of title. Nor are you the only one who has sought to fortify himself behind what you call art.

Art is a glorious thing in pictures, but when it comes to the title, commercialism must come first; otherwise there would not be enough money in it to pay for the art!

The true test of a title is the impression it makes on the people before they see the picture, not afterward. For example, there are two theatres side by side. One advertises a picture called "The Pinnacle"—a cold, impersonal, unattractive, lifeless thing. The other advertises "Blind Husbands," which conjures up life, people, red-blooded, living, breathing folks!

Which title will create a desire on the part of the people to go into the theatre? Your title fits the picture well enough, but who cares about a pinnacle? In fact I've even heard it accented pee-nokkle in a joking manner, a thing which would kill your picture deader than a salt mackerel.

Most authors are careless about titles—careless and short sighted. They forget that they owe something to the people who are going to market their product. The Universal owes every possible help to the exhibitors. That's why we help them with a masterly selling title like "Blind Husbands." And in doing it we have not only not hurt your production, but have helped it immeasurably.

So I say, here and now, to you and to authors and directors in general that I propose to change titles every time I find a poor one. You evidently consider the changing of titles an evil of the business, but let me tell you that, far from being an evil, it is only another evidence of the care and thought that are so absolutely necessary to the artistic as well as commercial conduct of the business.

Pride of opinion is a poor thing to judge by. That is one of the great lessons this business has taught me. I am never satisfied with my own opinion. I will listen to anybody and everybody, exhibitors, authors, directors or office boys. If any one of them has an opinion that is better than mine, I immediately acknowledge it. I recommend this plan to you.

The title "Blind Husbands" was selected from over 400 that were suggested in a contest. After it was suggested, it was submitted to dozens of smart exhibitors and unanimously approved.

Have you the hardihood to set your opinion up against that! I'm mighty sure that I haven't.

You've made a master-picture, Mr. Stroheim. Don't let it create any enlargement above your shoulders. Go on making great pictures. Leave the title and the rest of it to a few thousand other men on the Universal payroll, and they will attend to all the sordid routine which seems to distress you so severely.

CARL LAEMMLE.

"Damn the Torpedoes!" Deliver the Pictures.

Farragut passed the Vicksburg forts without caring three whoops what was in the channel.

In five months, or since April 1, the Hodkinson organization has run through a mined channel, has not cared three whoops about what any other firm's policies or "politics" were, has ignored the red tape and intrigues of the picture business—and delivered the pictures.

We have delivered to the exhibitors of the United States:

Benj. B. Hampton & Eltinge F. Warner's first Zane Grey Picture, "Desert Gold."

Benj. B. Hampton's Great Authors' - Stewart Edward White Picture, "The Westerners."

J. Parker Read Jr's. Louise Glaum-Allan Dwan production, "Sahara."

Artco Productions starring Leah Baird in "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano."

Robert Brunton's production starring J. Warren Kerrigan in "A White Man's Chance."

National's production starring Billie Rhodes in "The Blue Bonnet."

Each and every one of these productions, according to its class and the price schedule adjusted to its rating, has made convincing profits for exhibitors.

And there are more to come.

What do other people's miscellaneous policies, red tape and intrigues matter to an organization that delivers the pictures?

THE absorbing human interest story of a home-loving girl who loses courage for a moment in the great battle of life—who sins, but in her own heart only—who rises triumphant at last over the temptations of the easiest way.

Just say "SINNERS" to any Realart branch manager!

THE PUBLIC IS CLAMORING FOR HIGH CLASS MYSTERY — WAITING FOR

"The MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM"

THIS is a mystery year. The public has suddenly turned to mystery stories and the newspapers, magazines and book publishers have been smart enough to meet the demand. If you will get behind a high class mystery special right now, you will find you have a house-filler. Emile Chautard noticed the fuss the public was making over mystery stories and wisely picked as his first Mayflower special. He produced it from the startling book by Gaston Leroux, of which a special photoplay edition issues simultaneously with the release of the photonovel. And we defy anyone who is unacquainted with the book to say at the end of the fifth reel who Mathilde Stangerson's mysterious enemy is!

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room"

Announcing

Harold Lloyd in a series

Something like four years ago Pathe introduced a one reel comedy with an unknown young man as the star.

"Just Nuts" made an instant and spontaneous hit. It was the first of a long line of one reel comedies of a new and original kind.

They have found their way into the best houses of the country and into the hearts of the multitudes who see them.

They are the best one reel comedies that have ever been made.

Harold Lloyd need not fear comparison with any screen comedian of the day. Scores of exhibitors tell us he is the greatest of them all.

Putting the Cards on the Table

We are producers, not Exhibitors, but inasmuch as various producers are seeking to secure exclusive representation for their productions in certain cities by combining with exhibitors even to the point of buying a substantial interest in their theatres, we ourselves may be compelled to build theatres in those cities to protect both the public and ourselves.

But we wish to make it clear to our friend, the exhibitor, that we will never build, acquire, or lease a theatre from choice, but only from necessity!

We are cooperating with the exhibitor, not competing with him, and we have no intention of encroaching upon his activities, but we should be unworthy of our great reputation as Producers if we were to throw up our hands whenever monopoly throws down the challenge!

Sparkling, womanly, refined and greater than all these — different, is Alice Joyce in "The Winchester Woman" which Albert E. Smith presents. The title sounds great as you say it. It is suggestive of just what the production contains—romance, intrigue, the unusual and unexpected. It is the story of how a strong, honorable woman cleared the clouds from her own name and stood ready to sacrifice everything to save a young girl from the threatening blight of dishonor. It is a Vitagraph feature.

Dear friend Nine:

For some time past I have been wanting to write you regarding the manner in which the Larry Seamon Comedies are going over at the Newman Theater.

If you will remember, when I looked at the first one we used, there was considerable doubt in my mind and I hesitated in booking a slapstick comedy. After screening "HIS SIMPLE LIFE" for the second time, I decided to give it a trial. The result you know. We have used every Larry Seamon Comedy since and have contracted for the entire series.

I can truthfully state that no other brand of comedies shown in this theater have the entertainment values and the ability to please that the Larry Seamons' have. They are genuine comedies in every sense of the word, -- well acted, well staged, well directed and founded on good stories with as much attention to detail and continuity as the biggest features; best of all they please the Newman audiences which I believe to be the most critical in the city.

Assuring you that it is my pleasure to heartily recommend the Larry Seamon Comedies to my many exhibitor friends in this territory, I beg to remain

Cordially yours,

Milton H. Feld

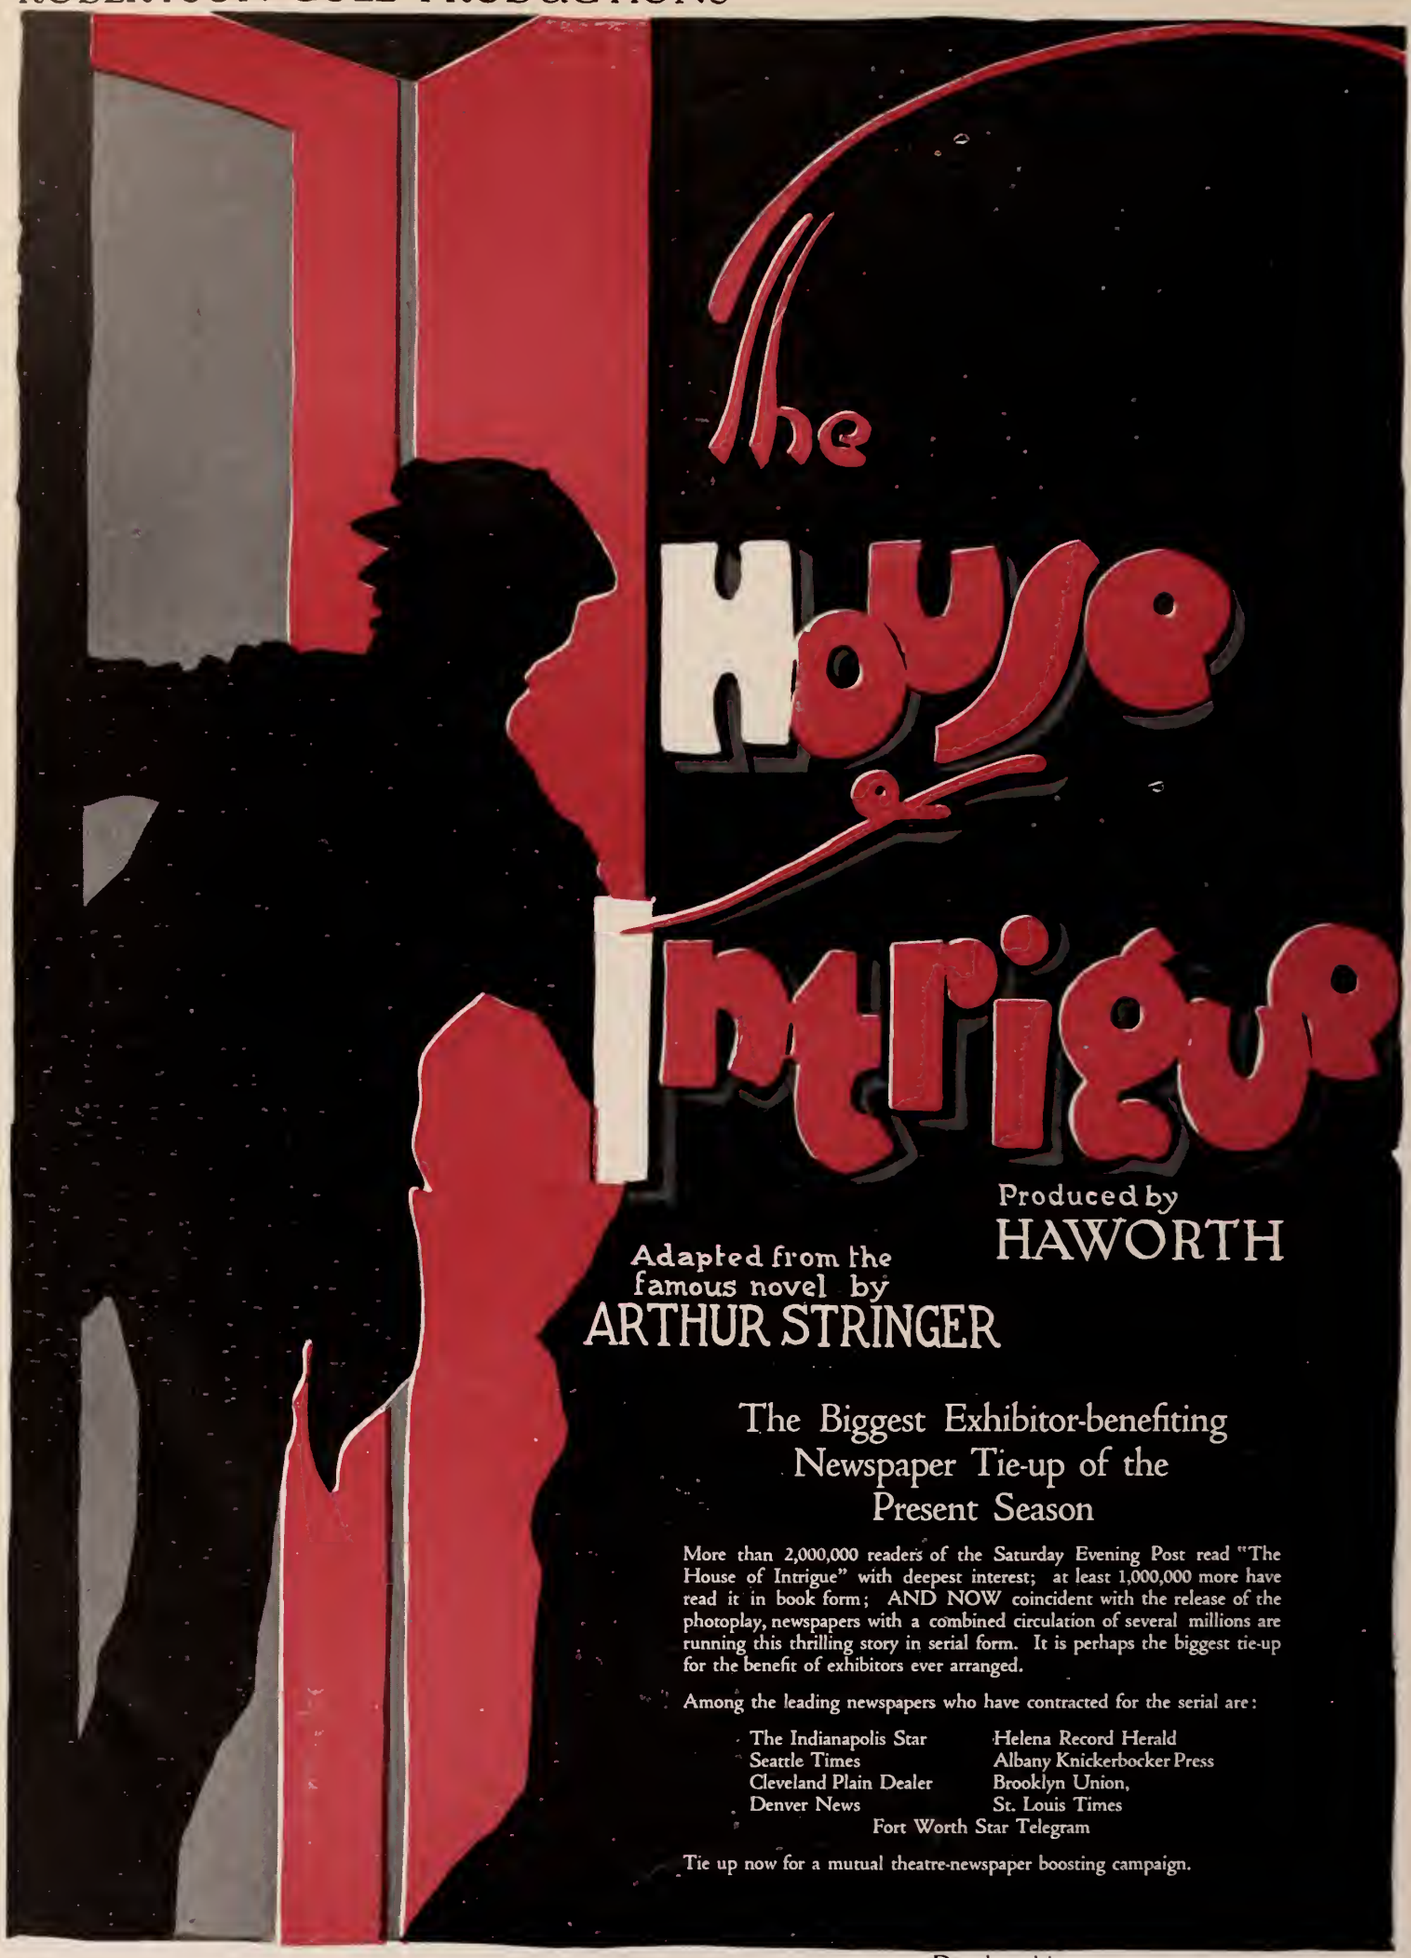
Hayakawa

SUPERIOR PICTURE

THE splendor and beauty of this picture would make it a great production even if it were without a big dramatic theme and an unusual actor supported by a fine cast.

But it does not have to rely on the sheer beauty of its background. It has the merit of a tension building theme that is absolutely absorbing.



And in addition to that it has Sessue Hayakawa. Mere words cannot add a single iota to what you know of Hayakawa, so let us be simple and tell you that in five thousand theatres in the United States the patrons eagerly await each new release.

The Biggest Exhibitor-benefiting Newspaper Tie-up of the Present Season

More than 2,000,000 readers of the Saturday Evening Post read "The House of Intrigue" with deepest interest; at least 1,000,000 more have read it in book form; AND NOW coincident with the release of the photoplay, newspapers with a combined circulation of several millions are running this thrilling story in serial form. It is perhaps the biggest tie-up for the benefit of exhibitors ever arranged.

Among the leading newspapers who have contracted for the serial are:

The Indianapolis Star
Seattle Times
Cleveland Plain Dealer
Denver News
Helena Record Herald
Albany Knickerbocker Press
Brooklyn Union,
St. Louis Times
Fort Worth Star Telegram

Tie up now for a mutual theatre-newspaper boosting campaign.

The Jelly-fish Picture

What is the "Jelly-fish Picture"?

The "Jelly-fish Picture" is the production that is neither fish nor flesh; neither good nor bad; neither a "Special" nor a "Flivver"; neither a knock-out nor a "frost."

The "Jellyfish Picture" is the production whose star is pretty well known and fairly popular; whose story is still better known and must be popular, since it is used so often; whose direction must be good because it lives up to all the rules and regulations and stays resolutely within the $40,000 mark—including all overhead.

The "Jellyfish Picture" is the production of which the reviewer says, "Presents Percival Pert in his familiar role, and should appeal strongly to followers of that handsome delineator of manly characters, since it abounds in the tried and true situations which they like so well."

The "Jellyfish Picture" is the one concerning which the exhibitor writes on his Motion Picture News Box Office Report card, "Drew well, account of star, but disappointed." And as he drops the card in the mail box he soliloquizes, "Wonder how often I can disappoint them before they get sore?"

The "Jellyfish Picture" is summed up in the daily newspaper critic's opinion as, "Good acting and staging wasted on the usual movie clap-trap."

The "Jellyfish Picture" isn't the modest "average" picture. There's a place for the latter in the scheme of things. But the "Jellyfish Picture" is the hypocrite of films; hiding under the name of its big star or other claim to fame it seeks notice as a "Better Picture."

The "Jellyfish Picture" is here to-day and gone to-morrow. False hope or shady business frequently heralds its approach with resounding adjectives. Its demise brings neither a tear nor a curse.

A jellyfish is a jellyfish—first to last.

But, with all its neutrality; with all its lack of soul and substance—is the "Jellyfish Picture" a factor in the business to be neglected?

No—for the "Jellyfish Picture" is the one big handicap faced to-day by the exhibitor struggling with the problem of increasing admission prices.

No exhibitor fears the prospect of raising admission prices if he can count on a fifty-two week schedule of "The Miracle Man," "The Brat," "The Right to Happiness," "Daddy Long legs" and such productions.

But every exhibitor quails at the increased admission prospect when he reckons the number of weeks out of the fifty-two that will be snatched by the "Jellyfish Pictures."

And he can't stop them. The "Jellyfish Pictures" will reach his screen—by hook or crook. The manufacturer will declare them "Specials"; the salesman, hypnotized by his superdriving "boss," will extract a "Special" rental; the exhibitor, having paid the price, will ballyhoo them as "Specials."

And the public—only his patrons will know them at first sight for what they are—"Jellyfish Pictures."

The public knows the "Jellyfish Picture." The public remembers a "Jellyfish Picture." And the house in which it was shown.

And when admission prices have been pushed over the twenty-five cent mark many an exhibitor will pass troubled nights dreaming nightmares in which his house and his patronage have been devoured by the "Jellyfish Pictures."

The industry has declared for "fewer pictures, better pictures, and longer runs."

We are getting better pictures—and more of them.

We are getting longer runs—and more of them.

Are we getting "fewer pictures?"

We are not. And until we do, we'll continue to get more "Jellyfish Pictures." So, let's declare ourselves now for:

Fewer "Jellyfish Pictures."

Fewer pictures that are "good" because they live up to traditions and down to the mythical masses.

Speaking Editorially

"Times Do Move"

IT'S about time the magazine critics of the motion picture forgot their cynical references to custard-pie comedy. The pie has long since passed from view. Who, indeed, would toss a custard pie onto a screen crowded with bathing beauties?

The styles have changed. The custard pie that brought down condemnation because of its "brutalizing" effect on the young has given place to the more refined humor of simpering nudity.

* * * * *

Try This on Your Man

"BESIDES running slides and distributing petitions," writes an exhibitor, "what else can I do to help along the fight for the repeal of the admission tax?"

We know of one little stunt that should be possible of adoption from other political fields to the picture arena. Here it is:

Write your local Representative along these lines: "The two thousand five hundred patrons who attend the Palatial theatre each night have been conducting an interesting discussion on war taxes, particularly the tax which they pay on admissions. Next week, on our slides, we wish to quote the opinions of prominent local men, headed by yourself. Do you believe the admission tax should be repealed? Or retained? And why? May we, in the event that we do not hear from you in time for the preparation of a slide, state, 'Congressman Smith, your own Representative, is not interested in the admission tax which you pay every night and does not care to tell you his views.'"

Try it on your man. With modifications it used to work in the newspaper game. And what newspaper, boasting of its 'steen thousand readers, can compare with the picture theatre—reaching down into the heart of a politician's constituency?.

* * * * *

What's the Answer?

AN exhibitor who came into the office the other day touched on one phase of the higher rentals question.

"What gets me particularly mad," he declares, "is to have the glib salesman sit down with pencil and paper and say, 'I know this rental is far more than you ever paid before but I'll show you just how you can pay it and make money.'

"Then he goes through a mess of calculations based primarily on my doubling the admission price.

"Ye gods! I know as well as the salesman that I can advertise big, double my price and make money. But I also know that if I take that much money out of my town for one picture I am going to starve for a week or more. And when I get through starving the theoretical profit that the big special gave me will have disappeared.

"I know the financial limitations of this town and its people. On the whole their entertainment is a carefully planned item in their living expense. You can't make raids on them, willy-nilly."

Has your town "got its limitations?" Do your patrons stay away a night or two to recover from the shock of a doubled admission price?

Let's hear about them.

* * * * *

Facts and Figures

THE statistical survey of motion picture theatres and attendance which MOTION PICTURE NEWS is conducting, as told in last week's main editorial continues to show some interesting results.

Late reports, for example, would indicate that the average admission price is going still higher than the 17 cents stated last week. Likewise they indicate a greater gross revenue each day than $2,500,000—which, by the way, should have been given last week instead of the stated $1,000,000. This would bring the gross annual box office income to the neighborhood of $900,000,000.

However, the hastily compiled figures given last week, and the estimates given here, are all a bit premature. When the survey is completed MOTION PICTURE NEWS will place on record an accurate and complete analysis of the figures.

The Hope of the Industry

"YOU can't give the independent producer too much prais for the good things he does," declared J. D. Williams t us once. "If you want the picture art to grow, and you want it to have freedom in its growth—you must encourage th individual producer who does big things."

The screen itself offers the best commentary on Mr. William words. Marshall Neilan, George Loane Tucker, Allen Holuba these are the product of the right encouragement to individu genius. The productions which mark milestones in the art's progres are their response for the opportunity given them to work wit free hands and untrammeled imaginations.

"Sometimes," we have been told, "it seems as though the trad papers hesitate to break loose in super-enthusiastic praise—eve when a producer really deserves it. You seem to fear the othe fellow's jealousy. Or else you want to maintain dignity. That isn right. Go the limit when a fellow does a good job—and you hav helped the whole industry in just the proportion that you hav encouraged him on his next undertaking."

We listened to the words humbly. We have taken them to hear and promised to abide by them.

What Is the Percentage?

UP till recent months it was considered fairly safe figurin to estimate that in the majority of cases rentals average one-third of a theatre's gross income.

We were wondering, the other day, just what changes have com over these figures. With rental prices steadily increasing, woul the percentage of gross income be nearer one-half than one-third Or have admission prices and gross receipts kept pace with rentals

We can hear a loud denial of the latter statement from ou exhibitor readers. Well—we'd like to hear more. What percentag of your gross income do you consider a fair amount to pay for film service? What percentage does overhead play in your genera calculations—depreciation, etc.? What percentage of gross incom is a reasonable profit?

We don't expect anyone to answer these questions with thei books and an audit. But we would like to hear opinions. It sounds like an interesting discussion. Come on—join in.

RUMORED DUPONTS AIM AT CONTROL OF COUNTRY'S PICTURE HOUSES

THE DuPont Powder Company is reported to have made attempts to purchase several of the leading motion picture houses in Salt Lake. It has developed, says the rumor, that the company is to attempt a consolidation to control motion picture exhibiting in the United States.

Recently a meeting is said to have been held in Colorado Springs behind closed doors in an exclusive hotel of the directors of the First National Exhibitors circuit, including two prominent Salt Lake exhibitors. This is believed to have been a preliminary conference to discuss the move of the Dupont interests. Twenty directors, owners and operators of the largest circuits of motion picture houses in the United States are members of the First National.

The initial sum which the DuPont people are claimed to have placed ready for use is reported as $100,000,000. Each circuit and the houses it composes has been allotted a portion of the initial outlay of the DuPont interests as a sale price, the story goes.

Decision is said to hinge on a meeting to be held in New York on October 6.

Eight More Tried Men and True!

Additional Live Wire Exhibitors Who Form the Backbone of the Motion Picture Industry—They Help Make the Business a Success

FRANK L. NEWMAN'S name is known wherever pictures are a subject of discussion in all probability. His string of theatres includes the Newman, Royal, Regent in Kansas City and the Butterfly, Milwaukee, Wisconsin and Fourth Street in Moberly, Missouri.

"The best that money can buy for our theatres," is the rule that Mr. Newman goes on. A slide daily with the weather forecast, and in summer, distribution of ice water to all patrons are features of service found in the Newman houses. A children's play room, nursery with attendants and every other possible convenience is to be found in his houses.

"The NEWS is far superior to all other trade journals," is the verdict of this experienced showman.

JOHN T. BROGAN, of the Elite theatre, West Point, Miss., has been an exhibitor "ever since pictures first started" as he puts it himself.

He does not claim to have scored a financial success, for being a moving picture fan he first backed several ventures in his town, all of which failed, and then started a show himself. The mixed population of West Point—half of the 5,000 are negroes—makes a very difficult audience to cater to Mr. Brogan has found. In addition to other troubles he finds himself in hot water with the exchanges, and declares he has never "had one return any money for their mistakes."

"The increase in film rentals will help kill the small exhibitor" Mr. Brogan concludes.

THE Throop theatre, Brooklyn, is one of the houses of which Victor D. Stamatis is manager. His brother, Gus Stamatis is president and general manager of all houses of the concern.

The biggest features of Goldwyn, Paramount-Artcraft, First National and other specials are run, the Throop catering to the finest class of patronage. Mr. Stamatis has been among the exhibitor class since 1914.

He is a booster of the NEWS, believing it one of the greatest assets an exhibitor can have and suggests that "An exhibitor without the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is like a soldier in battle without his gun."

WALTER J. RUSSELL manages the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, which he claims to have been the first house in the country to play the initial United Artists production, Fairbanks in "His Majesty the American," which opened there August 30.

The Woodlawn has a seating capacity of 1,600 on the main floor. There is no balcony. First run pictures are the rule and the S.R.O. sign is often to be seen, though the house runs continuously from two to twelve o'clock.

Mr. Russell was formerly treasurer of a big time vaudeville house, and came on from Brooklyn to take charge of the Woodlawn theatre. He has been an exhibitor six years.

B. W. BICKERT as manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, watches out for the Majestic, Strand and Empress theatres at Boise, Idaho; the Majestic and Orpheum theatres at Nampa, and the Empress at Meridian—which is quite a grown man's task.

Though only thirty-three, he has been in the theatre business for fifteen years, in positions ranging from stage hand to advance man and manager.

The Majestic Company is now building a new theatre in Ontario, Oregon, and planning another $275,000 house in Boise to seat 1,800. New houses in Caldwell and Payette, Idaho, are also now in prospect, and the company is looking for more houses in the territory.

THE Dixie theatre, Senath, Missouri, is in the hands of H. H. James. Against religious opposition which prevails in the town toward entertainment of any and all kinds, Mr. James has responded with the biggest productions of Universal, Paramount, Select and Goldwyn.

Again, as a cotton community, the farmers have money available only during the season, which is short. Against these handicaps Mr. James is still keeping his house above water.

H. B. McFARLING controls the destinies of the Tokio Theatre. Morehouse, Mo., and also has a half interest in the Circle theatre, Jackson, Mo. His headquarters are at Morehouse.

He finds Westerns, and big spectacular productions appealing to his clientele, rather than the society drama. a half reeler giving flashes in a forthcoming release or a full reel, exploiting a serial, as worthy the producers' thought.

F. P. MAYLARD runs the Rex theatre, Seward, Nebraska, a town of about 2,000 population. Despite the size of the town he runs the best class of pictures, in the last two years having used practically all big stars and films with such results that he is giving all productions a two-days' run.

Now, however, Mr. Maylard has adopted the policy of showing the biggest pictures for three days, commencing with Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs"—and this in a town of 2,000.

On the top of it all, he predicts a record-breaking season for the coming year. He is another exhibitor who believes the NEWS is the best trade paper.

Continuing the Press Sheet Discussion

Southwest Exhibitor Suggests Sending Out Small Town Exhibitors to Do Missionary Work Among "Exploiters"

MANY small town theatres are earning only bare living expenses for their owners or managers, with numerous natural advantages available for their development into really profitable enterprises lying dormant and unrecognized, because the exhibitors will not read or use press sheets, or quicken to the pace of progress set by the cooperative efforts of the service departments maintained by producers and distributors.

This is a condition which applies in almost equal proportion to exhibitors of all brands of productions, and represents the substance of information from a number of exchange managers and salesmen who realize that before the smaller towns can give additional rental revenue there must be a local effort to first put that revenue into the box offices of the theatres.

"This territory should produce $7,500 a week more in rentals to all exchanges than it does now," declares an exchange manager in the middle west. "There are at least two hundred and fifty theatres in the territory which, with proper exploitation work by the managers, could easily afford to pay an average increase per house of $30 a week. But the exhibitors in many of the smaller towns never look at a press sheet. They resent every attempt to aid them only as a subterfuge by the exchange man or salesman to hold them up for more money. They are convinced that $7.50 a day is top money for their shows."

By C. L. Yearsley

Manager Advertising and Publicity, First National Exhibitors' Circuit

"Exhibitors Who Take Motion Out of Promotion" are the subject of a preface to the second instalment of the several hundred exhibitor opinions on the question, "When Is a Press Sheet?" for which Motion Picture News has obtained exclusive publication privileges from C. L. Yearsley, manager of publicity for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

A salesman in the Michigan territory describes an experience with an exhibitor in a town of two thousand inhabitants as indicative of what the service departments can do for theatres, if they have the chance.

"The manager refused to pay more than $10 a day for a big special feature attraction which was literally coining money for exhibitors throughout the territory. It had played a record engagement in Detroit, and in several of the medium sized cities. This did not impress him. I quoted him $25 a day, for a two days' booking. He was furious. I showed him a press sheet, with good promotion suggestions; he looked over samples of the paper and lobby display; he read mimeographed copies of letters from other exhibitors who told of their success with the attraction. 'Nope,' he concluded, 'that doesn't mean anything here. My town's different. All this ad copy and story stuff is no good here. I'll give you $10 for one day.'

"I refused the offer and went on to the next town, six miles west. It, too, is a 'one-man-town.' But the exhibitor there is a young fellow, who, at that time, had been managing the house less than a month. He was formerly a jockey, and knew but little about pictures. I quoted him $25 a day, for two days, plus a percentage above a certain gross. He signed. The press sheet was a revelation to him. He had never seen one before. He decided to exploit the production heavily, and spent about $50 in advertising. The final accounting gave the exchange exactly $79 in rentals. The ex-jockey had done more business in two days, by profiting from the work of the distributors service department, than he had grossed in any one week of the four that he had managed the house. And he drew several hundred patrons from the town six miles away, where the exhibitor had declared that $10 a day, for one day, was top money, because the town 'was different.'"

There are many instances of this kind which have come to light in an investigation of conditions in all territories.

Real significance is found in the suggestion of a manager in the Southwest.

"I would be very willing," he writes, "to pay a part of the expense for sending out successful small town exhibitors to talk to the fellows who do not know how to exploit attractions. It would be excellent missionary work, and the distributors would benefit a hundred fold."

The Exhibitors Speak

Some Good in all of Them

By Lester Matt, Manager.
Strand Theatre, Flint, Mich.

I WOULD not care to express a preferenee for any one producer's press sheet. I find some good in all of them.

There is just one recommendation that I would like to make and that is that the companies that send out the press sheets to assist the exhibitors in drawing the people to their theatres would do a real favor by refraining from boosting pictures as the best when they are not the best.

The exhibitor cannot profitably keep on telling the public all the time that every big feature picture is "the best" if such is not the case.

I like to tell the public as nearly as I can just what kind of a picture they are going to see. If a picture is not "the best" that the star has ever been seen in, then I try to find something about it that is liable to make a good selling argument.

If the press sheets would devote more space in stories devised to give interesting stories about the star or about the production, instead of long strings of adjectives all tending to show that the picture is "the best" the particular star has ever been seen in, then they will come somewhere near to hitting the mark of being real first aids to salesmanship. The motion picture exhibitor today has to remember that he is a merchant offering amusement goods to the public. He has to be honest with the public, and not try to tell them that everything is the best he has ever had to offer them. Instead, he must have his selling arguments so worded that the public, having seen the picture, will not feel that they have been "sold" but rather feel satisfied.

Don't Forget the Small Town

By George A. Bleich
Manager, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky.

I WONDER if those who prepare the press sheets and the advertising aids for the picture houses of the country ever realize that there is such a factor in the picture business as the "small town exhibitor."

By that I do not mean a village exhibitor or the chap at a cross roads. I mean the exhibitor in a town of about 20,000 inhabitants. I mean the exhibitor who represents more of the motion picture patrons of the United States than any other for the exhibitors who will come under the classification of the 20,000 towns and those towns of varying population but with similar conditions will, I am certain, be found the most numerous class of exhibitors.

Yet the men who sit in the big cities, or with the big city influence on them, and prepare the press sheets and advertising guides do not seem to me to consider the small town exhibitor.

If they did they would prepare advertising suggestions that would be in line with this exhibitor's facilities. They would realize that he cannot command the resources of a metropolitan exhibitor in getting up his ads. He can't command the services of engravers, artists and newspapers with all styles of type. Elaborate advertising suggestions for the most part are wasted on him. He simply can't make use of them.

What should be provided him are advertisements that will call for the use of such type as a small town printing office will have. These advertisements should be examples of effective type grouping.

They should be written to bring out the selling points of a picture and should be arranged with the typographical skill that makes the type talk their loudest. They should be in good taste but forceful.

Some producing companies are wasting fearful quantities of advertising matter. I get envelope after envelope of gush that doesn't do me any good at all.

If this was cut out as far as the small town exhibitor is concerned, and the ability and money expended concentrated on giving the small town exhibitor material that he can really use, it would be far better for the picture business.

To do this a study should be made of the small town exhibitors and their needs. I believe conditions will be found similiar throughout the country so it would be easy to prepare material that would serve generally.

The producers have been working on the theory that they can deliver a broadside of press and advertising material that will hit the whole country. This can't be done. They should direct their aim effectively. Let them group exhibitors according to the populations they serve, big cities, small towns, etc., and furnish them with press matter accordingly.

I don't think the exhibitor should be charged for mats. These mats should be furnished him and I advocate scene mats above all others. The exchanges should ask the exhibitors what mats they can use and furnish them.

"Stills" Serve a Big Purpose

By Jack Greenbaum
Manager of The Alhambra Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

THE greatest service to be rendered exhibitors these days is the furnishing of stills suitable for snappy advertising.

Too many stills are merely photos of the star. The costume may be different from that of the stills accompaying the previous picture, but both sets of stills are essentially the same thing—merely portraits of the star.

Again the average still has such a wealth and profusion of detail that when reduced to the usual size of a one or a two column cut, it consists of a blurred hodge-podge.

In both cases the purpose of the still has been lost. The still as I see it, should lend attractiveness to the ad, be striking enough to attract the immediate attention of a reader, and at the same time convey a definite idea of what the picture is about.

This matter is one that is worthy of considerable attention today. Newspaper advertising is of course the most important exploitation medium of the manager who depends upon drawing his patronage from a wide area of the city and not from the immediate neighborhood of the theatre.

In Cleveland, all the daily newspapers group their photoplay advertising on one page under some such title as "Photoplay Directory!" That means that your ad is surrounded on all sides by other ads. Merely increasing the size of your ad won't turn the trick. Large ads are the rule rather than the exception in Cleveland.

Hence it is the quality of the ad that must be looked into. Therefore, furnishing good stills is an important service to be rendered.

In fact, all matter for the making up of ads is of great importance. I do not think that a press book can contain too many samples of ads. These are of the greatest help to the exhibitor.

Press books ought also to always obtain a series of "mystery" or "teaser" ads. It has been our experience that whenever a snappy set of these is to be run the week before the picture is shown, their cost is quickly made up in increased attendance.

Every advertising man knows the value of playing upon the curiosity of the public. Hence I think samples of teaser ads should always be contained in press books. Of course, these must be well thought out because nothing more quickly disgusts the public than the attempted teaser ads that doesn't tease, but on the other hand insults intelligence.

The next important service to be rendered exhibitors, I think, is in the matter of cutouts. The big exhibitor no longer plasters the front of his house with posters. Posters have a definite and exceedingly high value as advertising matter in store windows and on bill boards. But the manager who desires to draw a high class crowd finds it inadvisable to plaster his theatre with one-sheet posters after the manner of many neighborhood houses.

However, this does not mean that he can afford to get along without an attractive lobby. The most natural solution to this problem is the cutout. It is attractive; it catches one's eye and it is neat.

It has been our experience that the making of a good cutout from the average one-sheet poster, is usually a very difficult matter. It seems as though the poster was gotten up without the idea ever occuring to the maker that it might be used in this way. And the services of a local artist are usually called in before the cutout is finished. This means expense.

I believe that at least one one-sheet poster gotten out with every picture ought to be made so that it could be used for a cutout. This ought to be called to the exhibitor's attention in the press book. The press book ought to show just how the finished cutout should look. The press book ought to call attention to other possibilities for cutouts made from larger posters and how the various cutout can be grouped for effective lobby displays.

The press books ought also to obtain a large amount of snappy epigramatical matter that can be used on window cards, lantern slides and handbills.

With service along these lines, I think the average exhibitor would feel that the film concern was giving him the maximum of exploitation service and help.

Should be Grateful for Them

By Henry Green

Manager, Lake Amusement Co., Minneapolis, Operating The New Lake, East Lake, Lake and Hamlin Theatres

ON the whole I think that the press sheets, heralds, posters, lobby photos and prepared ads furnished by the distributing companies are very good and that this service is one for which the men in the field may be grateful.

If there is any one suggestion more than another that I would prefer to make it is that the press sheets give us a greater abundance of original ideas on how to exploit our pictures with a minimum of advertising cost.

I am speaking from the standpoint of the independent neighborhood exhibitor. We can hardly be expected to compete with the big downtown houses which can afford to buy valuable advertising space and so, consequently, we are looking for suggestions of publicity stunts that will not tax us too hard. Frequently some good suggestion is made through the press sheets of some novel and inexpensive publicity stunt, but still more frequently the exhibitor is compelled to rely upon his own ingenuity.

To my way of thinking the press stories and the advertising matter appearing in the average press sheet of today are good stuff. There are usually plenty of short ones, long ones, a fine variety to suit the needs of the individual exhibitor and the newspaper. I am strong for the way Paramount is getting out its press sheets and advertising material. I also like the Universal and First National press sheets.

There are generally plenty of good ideas contained in this matter, and it is a credit to the advertising and publicity departments of these corporations for the evident pains they have taken to be of service. I am not an advertising man or a newspaper man and thus I do not feel that I can make any criticism of the work that is being done along that line in the moving picture industry. Their output looks good to me and would look even better if they could tack on a few extra tips on inexpensive exploitation for the benefit of the suburban house exhibitor. I realize, however, that in getting out press sheets, etc., the advertising departments are planning their work with a view to serving all classes of exhibitors in the industry, that they cannot concentrate their efforts to assist any one class in preference to another, and just so long as the class to which I belong get equal consideration with the others I have no cause to complain.

I feel that the men in New York who are planning all this advertising and publicity for the benefit of the exhibitors are doing a great work. It is a fine thing to see this eager desire to be of assistance to the man who is in an entirely different branch of the industry and it can only make one thing—the advancement of the general interests of the screen. I also feel that it is hardly fair for an outsider to cast any odium upon the work of these men, for they have been studying the moving picture game for years, know its every side, appreciate its needs and are constantly looking for constructive rather than destructive criticism. I am convinced that these men in New York, who have been selected as the brainiest in their profession, know their business and far be it from me to tell them how to do it.

I, like many other exhibitors, can perhaps occasionally come across with some feeble suggestion and in the end these views obtained from all corners of the continent will in the aggregate be helpful to all concerned.

Barnum was generally recognized as the greatest showman that the world ever produced. He set the pace in advertising and today there is never a circus slated to come to town but what every one in the community knows about it in advance. Advertising was the secret of all Barnum's success. The show business, whether it be the movies, the legitimate stage, or the circus, is the same today as it ever was. Consequently the exhibitor must 'circus' his attraction in order to make it a success. But owing to the fact that the needs of the downtown exhibitor, the neighborhood theatre owner and the small town exhibitor are different each must be treated in a different way. It is a big problem for the advertising men of the distributing companies to meet, but they are meeting it and hardly a day passes but what some improvement is shown.

I can find little fault in the average posters, slides, heralds and lobby photos that are gotten out today, but of course there is always room for improvement. I have much use for this class of material and find that it is of great importance. Occasionally I get something that is not up to snuff, but these occasions are fast becoming rare and I hope and expect that some day they will become as extinct as the Dodo bird.

Posters Showing Star of Film

By E. C. Ebel, Manager

Penn Square Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio

MORE posters showing merely the star of the picture ought to be gotten out. The manager who wishes to depend chiefly upon posters for his display and at the same time maintain a quiet, dignified front for his theatre is up against it.

Too many posters show murders, stranglings, convicts and the like. Get four or five posters of this sort out in front and your house looks like a dime museum. It certainly doesn't look like a place into which mothers want to bring their children.

Furthermore, posters often don't correspond with the picture. Apparently they're made from scenes afterward eliminated. This ought to be guarded against.

In my opinion a bright colorful poster showing the star in the costume worn in the picture is the very best sort that could be got out.

To turn to the matter of press sheets these should contain samples of ads, small write-ups that can be placed with neighborhood papers and used in house programs—and snappy lines that can be used on handbills.

Of course these should always have a central idea that can be carried out through the entire exploitation campaign.

Looks for "Snap" in Press Sheet

By A. Dessauer, Manager.

Plaza Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

SNAP, snap and more snap. That's what an exhibitor looks for in press sheets.

The exhibitor must have a snappy ad. He expects the press sheet to furnish him with these lines.

I find that the press sheets of Metro and First National are good in this respect.

Samples of ads are also good.

In the matter of posters, I think film companies ought to spend more time on their one sheet posters and less on the larger ones. Large posters don't lend themselves to attractive display in the average picture house. They're unwieldy and hard to handle. A greater variety of one-sheet posters would be better.

One of the greatest difficulties exhibitors have to contend with is posters made from scenes subsequently cut out of the picture.

I lost many a patron through them until I learned to watch out for them. People would come to me and say that they wanted to see the picture because of a scene advertised on the poster and then when they got into the theatre the scene was never in the picture. They regarded the matter as though they had been lured into the theatre under false pretenses.

This matter cannot be emphasized too greatly.

An occasional attractive cut-out ought also to be furnished. These make a pleasing variation in lobby displays.

Prosperity is With Us!

Cleveland Exhibitor Glad Because Pictures Become Better as the Prices Go Up

THE question came up the other day, as to why motion pictures are so prosperous these days. The discussion arose following the statement of an exhibitor, Frank Losee, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Akron, that his house had more than doubled its receipts last month over last year at the same time.

The answer was the same from several exchange managers whom he consulted. Business went up when the standard of the motion picture went up. It kept up when the intelligent public learned that the screen was both instructive and entertaining, at a comparatively low expenditure of money. And it keeps going up because it is right in step with the times.

In the first place, money seems to have lost its value. After all, spending is a habit, and when the habit is once contracted, it is no longer a serious operation to part with the coins of the realm. Every thing costs a lot of money these days. Nobody can expect to get any change back. So it was a simple thing to boost the prices of the movies, and get away with it without any friction.

But, the producers and the exhibitors were wise. They boosted their merchandise when they boosted their prices. That's more than many merchants can say. And the public appreciates the value received and is willing to support the industry as never before. There are more motion picture theatres here than ever before. They all show better pictures than ever before. And a point to be considered with great care, is that they all advertise much more extensively than ever before.

Formerly the movie house was unattractive, if not unsanitary. Now, in Cleveland, the motion picture theatres far surpass the legitimate theatres in beauty of surroundings. Formerly, the movie was for the laboring class. The pictures reflect the change of clientele, and the cash box reflects the broadening out of the industry to reach a bigger field, to appeal to a vast majority instead of a minority.

W. E. Lusk, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, speaking of the tremendous success of the picture industry this season, says that the advance is particularly noticeable in the small towns. There, where one motion picture house reigns supreme, and where everybody knows everybody else, the movie man was supreme. There was no competition. So he just ran any old films that he could get cheap on the basis that the folks couldn't go any where else any how, and he might just as well save his money. In these days, the pillars of society were not among those present at the movie entertainments. Movies were neither dignified nor intellectual enough for them.

But how is it now? Mr. Lusk has just returned from an automobile trip through the state, and he says it was astonishing to see the change in the small one-theatre towns. The houses were all modern to the extreme. Everything was of the latest: equipment, furnishings, features. Music of the better grade was prevalent everywhere. The tin piano has gone by the wayside with the dump theatre. And Mr. Lusk says that the banker and the financier and the merchant were all out in full force to see the latest pictures.

The upward trend of the times has been an intellectual as well as a financial one. And as it has advanced, it has broadened out so as to include a larger percentage of the population, and so has swelled the coffers of the exhibitors correspondingly.

C. A. Thompson, local World Film exchange manager, also had some interesting views to express anent the booming conditions of the film business in Ohio.

"Never has the exhibitor had so much to offer to the public as at the present time," said Mr. Thompson. "Why, just look at what the patron gets for his money these days, at a movie house, compared to what he gets at a legitimate theatre for ten times the price. He gets a seven-reel feature photoplay. He gets a news reel, and he gets a comedy. At the legitimate theatre he pays approximately three dollars for a seat, and sees a play that wouldn't take over an hour to show on the screen."

Why do the exhibitors give so much for the money? This question was presented to Mr. Thompson. And he had the answer ready. "After all, the movie is primarily the entertainment for the masses. And the masses measure value by quantity, rather than quality. There would undoubtedly be a certain percentage of patronage who would be contented to see a feature photoplay and then go home. But the masses want a lot of variety for their money, or they are dissatisfied. That's why the exhibitor has grown into the habit of showing comedies and news reel and novelty films all on one program."

"There is another disadvantage of showing the feature alone. It is over in an hour and a half at the latest. A show beginning at 7:30 would be over at 9 o'clock. And then what to do? The evening is broken up. It's too late to go anywhere else, and there is not enough to comprise an evening's entertainment. And so, to appease the intellectual entertainment seekers, and to satisfy the masses, quality has had to combine with quantity, and the results have been so satisfactory that every house in the territory reports the biggest business of its career."

What Makes High Rentals

Carl Laemmle of Universal Claims Lack of Stars Is Cause for Them

THAT film rental prices are high because there are not a sufficient number of screen stars, that the exhibitor makes a star instead of the producer, and that star-stealing has caused the high cost of film rentals is a part of a startling statement made this week by Carl Laemmle, Universal's president.

Perhaps as startling is the statement made by Mr. Laemmle in which he said he intended, through Universal, with the cooperation of the exhibitors of the country, of creating more stars than there is a demand for.

"The only reason why exhibitors have to pay such enormous rental prices for productions," Mr. Laemmle said, "is because there are not enough stars to supply the public's demand. The demand is greater than the supply. The exhibitors have made the stars, not the producer. Through their advertising and exploitation they have made the favorites even more popular. I believe there should be more stars—and when there are more the price of films will come down. With the help of the exhibitors I can make more stars, and I do not differ from any other producer. They all could make more stars."

"One of the reasons why rentals are so high is that the producers steal stars from each other. Star stealing has cost the exhibitor more money than any other two elements in the business. Every time a star has been stolen a higher salary has been the means of accomplishing the theft. And every time one has been stolen the exhibitor has paid the bill. First they make the star and then they pay more to run the picture he or she appears in. I don't know that many exhibitors know this, but I can say, that Universal, since its inception, has been the champion of the exhibitor and the real friend of the exhibitor. I may be letting out what is supposed to be confidential but I do it because the exhibitor makes my business and my success depends upon his."

"I know that exhibitors are complaining of the high prices charged for film rentals. I do not know any other way of lowering this price except through the method I have suggested, but I do know that the plan I have outlined is bound to succeed.

"I hope the exhibitors of the country," Mr. Laemmle said, "will think over this proposition. It is to their interest—and I hope the trade publications will cooperate in this matter. Common sense should tell every exhibitor that a star is his drawing power. And there is no reason on earth that there are not more stars except that the producers have not assigned more actors to leading parts. There are in this country today hundreds of actors capable of being made into star material if they are given the chance. That is what Universal intends to do. If the exhibitors of the country will watch Universal productions from now on they will see a number of heretofore supporting players cast as stars of the productions. Don't think for a moment they won't be capable—I wouldn't risk it if they were not. They simply have never been given leading roles before and now I intend to make them real stars."

"I'm asking the cooperation of the exhibitors in this matter. This is an ailment of the industry. If the exhibitor will assist us in making this new material into star material he will be benefited by the lowering of the cost of film rentals. When the exhibitor makes a star he is entitled to participate in the value of the star. They are entitled to get the star's pictures at a reasonable rate."

Taking All the Joy Out of Life

W. F. Dagon of Springfield Runs Up Against Old Story That's Ever New

BILL JONES (fictitious name), was approached in his private office by Motion Picture News' correspondent and asked the most puzzling question that could be thought of: "What is the biggest obstacle a motion picture exhibitor has to contend with, the thing that takes all the joy out of life and puts wrinkles in his brow?"

And Springfield's leading exhibitor replied: "There are several things and since you ask I will tell them to you. The first one, I believe, is the greatest of all. It is the big money that exhibitors pay out for mediocre pictures, pictures that are run with a loss because of poor production, unpopular stars and unwanted subjects."

"But why do exhibitors book such pictures," was the next question.

Jones smiled. "Because the exhibitor is powerless to prevent it. For instance, I know of a man who contracted for a certain program, booked its star series and all the bunk that went with it. Some of the pictures were absolutely not good enough to be run off in a second or third class house, yet this man had to take them all and run them, or not run them and pay for them just the same. This same fellow, by the way, has at this time a picture he will have to run or pay out $500 rental and put it on the shelf. He doesn't want to show it, and says he won't show it, but the film company is going to make him come through with the $500. They will not accept a cancellation on it. And the exhibitor is going to put the picture on the shelf and play a substitute rather than offer this mediocre production to his patrons. Can you imagine any other business doing business like that, or any business man having to lose $500 in such a manner?"

The correspondent had no answer.

"Then," Jones continued, "I know of an exhibitor who lost money on two 'stars' all last season. Each of these so-called 'stars' made eight pictures, sixteen in all, and the playing dates on them totalled over fifty days. All fifty days were bad business days at this theatre, and he knew they would be when he took the pictures, but he had to take them in order to get a few good ones. Figure the ordinary losing days caused by bad weather, sickness, counter attractions and the like, and you will see it was very difficult for this exhibitor to make any money last year."

"But hasn't there been a change made in the booking plans for the new season, the season of 1919-1920?" was the next question.

Jonesie laughed. "I haven't noticed any," he replied. "We are still doing business in the same old way, the way that the exhibitor I was telling you about 'lost his neck' on poor pictures. All the 'selective booking' stuff seems to have vanished. At least nothing has come of it as far as I am able to determine. This too, in spite of the great amount of advertising the idea was given."

"What other 'ailments' are exhibitors subjected to?" came next.

Jones hesitated a moment. Then he replied: "I think the music tax is next in line. This is a subject that gets me mad all over just to think of it. Imagine having to pay a tax on music that is used by our orchestra when it is making that music popular and salable. It's ridiculous. Why, every day our director receives a batch of new music by mail. There is nothing on it to indicate that it is taxable music. Song pluggers visit the theatre and try and put over their songs. They take the orchestra out to lunch, fill them up with copies of their newest stuff, and urge them to play it. Then we have to pay a tax on it. Yes, we are paying ten cents a seat to make music popular at the music counters. But we are only paying it as a protective measure, and we have instructed our musical director not to play any of the taxable music only when absolutely necessary."

"Is there anything else that the motion picture exhibitor has to put up with that seems unfair?" followed.

"Yes, there is," Jones replied. "That is the practice of some of the film companies of sending films C. O. D. when our checks fail to get in on time—through no fault of ours—even when we have deposits up aggregating several thousand dollars. It's humiliating and unjust to have to pay the express company the price of the film rental simply because the mail was slow or some employe in the shipping room wasn't notified that Henry Smith's check was in O. K. Companies are doing this that we have paid out thousands of dollars to. And these same companies are the hardest people in the world to get a nickel out of. It's almost impossible to collect from them, or receive credit when they are short paper or photos and slides, and it sometimes takes weeks to get straightened out. It simply exhausts a man's patience, uses up much of his valuable time, and not a little postage."

"What more can you think of, Mr. Jones?"

"Well," replied the exhibitor, "I might mention the loss of business caused by delayed film shipments, days when we are kept closed because the pictures did not arrive, due to an error in bookkeeping or something at the exchange. Also the poor paper and photos some companies are sending out, and the failure of the exchanges to answer our letters and telegrams. All these things put wrinkles in the exhibitors brow and makes his life not the joy it seems. And it takes mighty good business to iron out the little creases that other fellows put into our brows."

Just as we were leaving, Jones was notified the box-office girl had quit and that the operator had split a finger doing a rewind. And one of those fine, drizzly rains was setting in which promised to stay for a week.

——Knocks on Press Sheets are Few and Far Between——

He Banks Heavily on "Paper"

By N. V. Darley,
Manager Savoy and Alpha Theatres, Atlanta, Ga.

CATERING to the serial and second run trade, I bank heavily on paper. Many a show is a good one for me or is useless as an attraction because of good or indifferent posters. Taking it by and large, I should say that 50 per cent. of my drawing power lies in my front, and this means almost exclusively poster work.

Good paper to me means plenty of action. My patrons must have snappy stuff to make them hesitate, then stop, then fish out the dime.

A great many features don't carry action in their posters. They run almost to dress and society stuff. This is all right in its way, but it must not exclude the action.

My public, as well as every other theatre's patronage, is made up of all sorts of people. There are women who are attracted by drawing room scenes and stunning gowns. There are men who would not look a second time if they saw only this kind of thing. Therefore, I say that every picture should have both.

Portraits of stars are well enough, if the star is a real drawing card. If he or she is not, it is a waste of space to post the paper on which they are the whole show. I do not advertise a star for the sake of the producer. I advertise a picture to draw people into my house to see the picture of the day.

I have no kick on the average poster color work. It attracts my crowds. The colors are bright and snappy. If they have the right sort of subject under them, they are beyond criticism. The slides and stills are also satisfactory when they show the proper action.

As to press sheets, I think that few of them are written by newspaper men. If they were, they would contain stories that would not need so much blue penciling by the editors. My press agent has to do all kinds of amputation and piecing together in order to get a short, concise story from a sheet. What on earth some stories are written for, I can't see. Surely they could not possibly do me or my show any good. I want a short story that tells in a few words what the plot is about, who the star is, who the director is. I don't want three paragraphs on the camera man, the chief scissors wielder, the office boy, the pack mule that took the traps up to location, and all that sort of junk. Picture, story, star and the name of my theatre. That is the story I must have, and the only one I can use.

Give Us Snappy Teasers

By A. K. Trakas,
Manager of the Savoy Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

OUR greatest need is snappy teaser ads! The press sheet that contains a number of ads which will tend to arouse the curiosity of the theatre goer and make him anxious to know what the picture is all about are the things we want.

For example something like this: Suppose the picture hinges on a bank robbery, etc., ending with the line, "Apply at the Savoy Theatre for further details," is the sort of thing we want.

No press sheet in my opinion can contain too much stuff of this sort. Newspaper notices giving critical reports of the picture and little items about the stars are valuable for use in neighborhood papers. These papers, of course, do not have photoplay editors like the big dailies. They depend upon us to furnish them with the photoplay news ready to print.

There is also considerable demand for one-column cuts which can either be used in an ad or given to these papers for their news columns.

Expedition Off for British East Africa

Famous Players-Lasky in Conjunction with the American Museum of Natural History Sends Group for Scientific-Photographic End

A PHOTOGRAPHIC and scientific expedition, designed to be one of the largest of its kind, has been sent out by Famous Players-Lasky to British East Africa and Uganda. It will have the co-operation of the American Museum of Natural History and will be known as the Vandenbergh-Paramount Expedition.

The party started from New York on Sept. 24, headed by Rev. Leonard John Vandenbergh, noted explorer and writer on Africa and its peoples. George Burbank Shattuck, scientist, and James W. Morse, chemist and photographer, were other members of the group.

In addition to its photographic aspect, important results from an ethnological and anthropological research from the research conducted by the Museum of Natural History are expected.

Tribes to Be Studied

The motion pictures which will be taken will serve primarily to set forth the characteristics and customs of the various tribes and the contrasts, one to another, which they present. Particular study will be made of the development of civilization among the tribes under British influence, the upbuilding of trade and the establishing of laws according to European and American standards. No biological or zoological research will be attempted and no picture along that line will be taken, except for such pictures of hunts and animal herds as will be necessary in describing the manner of hunting of the tribes and the sources of food supply offered by the surroundings.

Dr. Vandenbergh, who will be in charge of the party, is a priest of the Roman Catholic church and for nine years has been a missionary among the natives of British East Africa and Uganda. He is therefore thoroughly familiar with the country and the habits and customs of its inhabitants.

Dr. Shattuck, who goes as the chief cinematographer and scientist of the expedition, is a recognized authority in various branches of science, and resigned the position of professor of geology at Vassar College to go on this expedition. Formerly he was associate professor of geology at Johns Hopkins University. He has been the head of expeditions on his own account and has taken pictures in Alaska, the Yellowstone, etc.

Mr. Morris, who will be the chemist of the party and will assist in the photography, has had wide experience, starting fourtcen years ago as a newspaper photographer and having visited Cuba, Panama, Mexico, Hawaii and the South Sea Islands. In 1914 he was chosen as a member of the Stefansson relief expedition.

The Vandenbergh-Paramount expedition will go direct to Naples and from there will proceed via Suez, the Red Sea and Aden, to Mombas, British East Africa. From there the party will go to Uganda where headquarters will be established.

Announcement of the African expedition comes close upon that of the departure of a party of scientists and photographers for Alberta, Canada, to study and photograph the flora and fauna of that wild region for the educational department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and it is further intimated that other similar expeditions will in the near future penetrate other distant parts of the world under the same auspices.

LOEW STOCK ON CURB; MOSS ABANDONS FILMS

FOLLOWING late on the heels of an announcement that the stock of United Picture Production Corporation stock had made its appearance on the curb, it is learned that stock in the Marcus Loew enterprises will make its bow to bidders in the market. This is therefore the second picture stock to make its appearance on the curb since the introduction of Famous Players-Lasky stock some time ago.

Another late announcement of the week, and one received with a degree of surprise by many in the industry, is that all of the Moss theatres which had been turned over to pictures are to return to their vaudeville policy.

Warrior Son of Simone Earns Distinction

To lie in bed well-nigh helpless for more than thirteen months with two compound comminuted fractures of the right thigh and hip earned in the great Chateau Thierry battle on July 20, 1918, and then to win athletic games and be the chief funmaker at the Labor Day carnival held at the United States General Hospital, Fox Hills, Staten Island, such is the exploit of Sergeant Peter C. E. Simone, who is now spending a thirty-day furlough at his home in Albany, N. Y.

The young warrior, himself a film man of considerable experience and ability, is the eldest son of Charles Simone, one of the pioneers of the industry.

Position of Northwesterners

Exhibitors Circuit Explains Stand and Aims in Letter to Film Board of Trade

THE Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit clarified its position and ideals and endeavored to mend the existing differences between it and the Northwest Film Board of Trade in a letter sent September 4, and which in part follows:

"It is too bad that any misapprehension of the scope, motives and purposes of this circuit has arisen in your minds. We need not take time with discussing how this did or may have come about—we are, of course, looking to today and tomorrow as you are, and the thing now is to come to a real understanding which will enable harmonious, effective and mutually profitable relations.

First, let us emphasize that the scope of the circuit and its operations is limited to special feature films. We have nothing to do with regular service programs. Second, let us also emphasize that we are looking at your side of our business relations as well as ours, and it is our desire and purpose to facilitate your dealings with us in every practical way. To this end our film review committee is organized so as to meet as promptly and frequently as possible and at times which will be mutually convenient. We appreciate that, insomuch as the members of the circuit are not free to buy special features until these have been released by the committee, it is essential for both sides that the committee pass upon them and do any releasing just as frequently and promptly as possible. We have never had any other thought nor any other course of action, so far as it is possible to move promptly and smoothly at the very beginning of any enterprise.

"Third, another fundamental point with the circuit is to treat all film men alike, fairly, reasonably and of course, courteously. Anything that has been said or written concerning special films or the special film output of one or another film house was not intended to imply any possible criticism of or reflection upon any output, nor did it do so, we are clear.

"We shall assuredly notify the exchange no less promptly than our own members of the release of features.

"Understand that the foregoing does not evince any change of position or intention on our part, still less is it written in the slightest degree apologetically. It is written solely in a spirit of friendliness and fairness, and with a desire fully to cooperate. Our whole policy from the first has been and to the last will be 'live and let live' and play no favorites.

"We know that this letter will be received at its full face value, that we shall hear from you in kind, and that both sides will live up to their professions so far as is possible with human nature what it is. Of course the circuit must run its own business as you must run yours. We shall, nevertheless, welcome at any time, as we know you will, any kindly suggestions and will be glad to profit by them."

Showmen and Merchants Victims of Promoter

D. Filizola, proprietor of the Theaterette, Fort Scott, Kansas, reports that exhibitors in his section and local merchants have been victimized by a smooth tongued person working a "program game."

His method it is said is to approach theatre managers as representing the "Star Advertising Service" of St. Louis, for permission to furnish their weekly programs, he and his concern to get the revenue from advertisers. To merchants who would advertise in his ephemeral program for a stipulated time, he would close a deal giving a liberal discount for cash in advance. That would be the last heard of program or promoter.

The address given in St. Louis has been found to be false.

Warm Fight on Censor Bill in Alabama

The drastic censor bill before the Alabama legislature is being fought tooth and nail by the state exhibitors, headed by H. C. Farley of Montgomery, and other progressive representatives. The newspapers have taken up the matter at length and added their weight against the measure. So strong is the opposition that late reports indicate the exhibitors may be successful in killing the measure.

The bill is far reaching in its provisions, providing for appointment of a chief censor and two assistants, and aims at the censorship of every film designed to be shown in the state. Wide latitude is given the censors. So strick would the measure be, that it is probable war scenes would be prohibited.

The Montgomery Age-Herald in a lenthy editorial lately pointedly stated that censors were not needed in Alabama.

Morris Kohn, Treasurer of Realart Corp.

Announcement is made this week that Mr. Morris Kohn has become associated with Mr. Arthur S. Kane in Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Kohn's position is that of treasurer.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Kohn took the office of treasurer at the time of the incorporation of Realart, but on account of his being treasurer of Select Pictures Corporation at that time, it necessitated his devoting himself to his activities there for several months after Realart had started on June 9th. Mr. Kohn closed his affairs at Select last week, resigned his office there and is now giving his time exclusively to Realart.

While no announcement was made at the time of Mr. Kohn's coming with Realart in his important capacity, he has not been inactive. He has devoted several hours each day to getting under way the organization of that concern's financial and accounting departments, the latter of which is under the immediate direction of Mr. Dario L. Faralla, the comptroller.

Lima Theatre Opening

The Regent Theatre, Lima, Ohio, owned by the Shawnee Amusement Co., W. S. Butterfield president, opened Thursday, September 11th. The house cost in excess of $100,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,000 on one floor. It has been under construction since last March and is a metropolitan picture house in every detail. W. S. Butterfield and Edward Beatty, booking manager of the Butterfield circuit, were in attendance at the opening performance. F. J. Zanone is in charge of the house.

Black Planning a New Vermont Theatre

Alfred S. Black is extending his circuit of theatres with Barre, Vermont as the probable site of a new house An option has been secured on a site and according to the plans a theatre will be built seating at least 1200, and probably 1500.

WIRE BRIEFS FROM THE COAST

T. L. TALLY, proprietor of Tally's Broadway theatre, and vice-president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces the purchase of the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, for $650,000. In future the house will be an exclusive First National one. The Broadway will be retained under management of Tally's son.

Hiram Abrams, Oscar Price, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith have been in consultation with W. G. McAdoo, general counsel for United Artists, regarding forthcoming productions and distribution.

Col. W. N. Selig announced he will move his Chicago equipment to the Selig plant in Los Angeles, and make additions costing a half million, for studio facilities for Anita Stewart and Mrs. Chaplin, the Mayer stars.

Winfield R. Sheehan, Fox general manager, has arrived to arrange increased production.

M. S. Banks, Wyoming oil millionaire, is to head a new producing company, the details of which are still unsettled. A. H. MacKensie, W. L. Hooper, Frank Sellever are associated in the venture. Hamilton Smith and Harry Havens, screen writers, are also in the organization.

Operators' New Wage Scales

Figures Go Into Effect for Those in New York District; All in Agreement

THE new wage schedule for motion picture machine operators in New York and Brooklyn went into effect on September 22. Morris J. Rotker, Secretary of Local 30 has stated that the exhibitors to whom the new schedule has been presented have responded practically 100 per cent. in agreement. The formulating of the schedule has taken some months and its final form is due to the efforts of Messrs. Cohen, Bermann and O'Reilly representing the New York Motion Picture Exhibitors League, and Sam Kaplan, President of Local Union 306, aided by other executives of the local.

In order to make the various schedules comprehensive and easily understood, they have been neatly arranged in a booklet. Each house is classified according to its rate of admission and its seating capacity. Following this are given the weekly wages of the operators on each shift based on the hours during which the show is running. All wages are figured on the six-day week.

A specimen schedule is given below. The entire schedule will appear in the Projection Department in next week's issue of the NEWS. The following is Schedule No. 1-A, (at 83 cents per hour rate).

All moving picture theatres charging not more than 50c. admission and having less than 300 seating capacity:

From 9 a. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily; 2 shifts, each shift not to exceed 7 hours per day per man; each man to receive not less than $34.86 per week; $5.81 per day.

From 10 a. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily; two shifts, each shift not to exceed 6¾ hours per day per man; each man to receive not less than $32.40 per week; $5.40 per day.

From 11 a. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily; 2 shifts, each shift not to exceed 6 hours per day per man; each man to receive not less than $29.88 per week; $4.98 per day.

From 11 a. m. or later to 12 midnight (not later) daily; 2 shifts, each shift not to exceed 6¾ hours per day per man; each man to receive not less than $32.40 per week; $5.40 per day.

From 12 noon or later to 12 midnight (not later) daily; 2 shifts, each shift not to exceed 6 hours per day per man; each man to receive not less than $29.88 per week; $4.98 per day.

From 2 p. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily, with one hour for supper, not less than $39.84 per week; $6.64 per day.

From 5 p. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily, not less than $29.88 per week; $4.98 per day.

From 5 p. m. or later to 11 p. m. daily, with two matinees per week, with one hour for supper, not less than $35.88 per week; $4.98 per day.

Extra matinee, $3.00
Supper hour (first), $1.60.
Supper hour (second), 83c.

One day's work in schedule 1A, consisting of not less than 4 hours nor more than eight hours, shall receive pro rata at the rate of (6) six days per week.

Minimum salary in schedule No. 1A, $29.88 per week; $4.98 per day.

Elected To An Office

Col. Fred Levy, president of First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, has been elected president of the National Association of Retail Clothing Dealers.

World Film officials celebrate the appointment of Norman Moray as manager of the New York branch

S. Rankin Drew Post of American Legion

Men of all lines of the amusement business, including their associates from the newspaper world, who served in either branch of the service during the war have organized with fine success a typically Broadway post of the American Legion. The membership is now nearly one hundred and includes men in every line who were in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The post has been named in honor of Lieutenant S. Rankin Drew, who was the first American actor killed in the war. He was a son of the late Sidney Drew, making the selection of his name most appropriate as well as giving the new organization a historic name in theatricals. Mrs. Sidney Drew was notified of the naming of the post, and in a telegram expressed her sincere gratitude for the honor to the memory of her husband's son.

To Thoroughly Cover Territory by Auto

R. C. Cropper, president of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company is experimenting with a unique method of "Railroading" his salesmen over their respective territories.

Heretofore salesmen have at times experienced great difficulty in making some towns on account of poorly arranged railroad schedules, at times being unable to cover more than one town a day. When Bee Hive entered the feature field, it was decided that another means of transportation was necessary, so the idea of "Fordizing" it was considered.

D. O. Reese, who covers Illinois, is the first one to try out the experiment, and leaves September 15th to cover the towns heretofore missed.

PROFANITY? FILMS NOT WORST OFFENDER

WILLIAM H. SWANSON, managing director of the American and Strand theatres in Salt Lake, has ventured the prediction that film swearing will become nil in the celluloid world in the near future. He has taken exception to the recently published dispatches in which T. P. O'Connor, chief British film censor, has declared that the great majority of film plays shown in Great Britain are American and that there has been a too frequent use of "cuss" words and lip readers are shocked.

Mr. Swanson is not prudish by any means but he is always working on the better picture policy. He declares that photoplays are not as bad as the stage as regards profanity.

"Who has not noticed," he said the great increase in profanity in the spoken drama on the American stage during the last dozen years.

"There are vaudeville theatres today in which 'damn' is forbidden on the stage, but in the more pretentious theatres, devoted to the drama, what does one not hear?"

Biggest British Concern Is Organized

By the formation of the Alliance Film Company, with a capital of £1,000,000, the largest company in the history of the British film industry is established. Its directors include Sir Walter De Freece, Charles F. Higham, M. P., Arthur C. Hunter, until recently technical manager of one of the largest American film corporations; A. E. Matthews, managing director of the British Actors' Film Company, and Walter Hutchinson, a well-known publisher.

A consultative literary committee includes Sir Arthur Pinero, George R. Sims, Edward Knobloch, and R. C. Carton. Three of America's chief producers have been engaged.

It is stated that the company is buying Harrow Weald Park, near Hendon, fifty-four acres, where it will erect the largest film studios in the world, capable of producing six films simultaneously. The present program is to produce twenty-six five-reel film plays and five superproductions every year. The output of the company is already sold for five years to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of America for the United States and Canada.

New Capitol Theatre to Have Two Screens

The screen installation at the new Capitol theatre—in many ways as unique as the huge institution itself—is now under way. To insure scientifically correct projection Managing Director Edward Bowes has provided for special equipment that will be of more than pasing interest to the "movie fan." Two screens will be employed at the Capitol. One, for topical features, news reels, short comedies, etc., located 159 feet from the operating room, is eighteen feet high and fourteen feet wide.

Twenty-two feet to the rear is the main screen for dramatic subjects, involving a "throw" of 181 feet—almost a city block. This screen is 21 feet high and 16 feet wide. Both screens are of a specially chemically prepared satin and are stretched in their frames in a new and novel manner, much as a drum head is tightened.

No Price Increase in Fox's Denver Houses

The prices of admissions for the William Fox Rivoli and the William Fox Isis, two of the Fox circuit in Denver, Colo., under the direction of Edward L. Hyman, have not been advanced for many weeks.

In the opinion of Manager Hyman it is not advisable to increase prices at present, since it is not absolutely necessary. The William Fox theatres in Denver do not find they have any choice in the matter of paying more for films than formerly; it is a case of having to do it or going without pictures.

However, according to Mr. Hyman, the William Fox theatres will not raise their admission prices, taking the stand that if they cannot afford to show a picture at their regular prices they will not attempt to show it at all.

Independent Get Together

New Orleans Exhibitors Organize to "Prevent Unjust, Abusive Practices"

INDEPENDENT motion picture exhibitors of New Orleans have formed an organization, with S. Peritz, owner of the Fern theatre, president; P. Bohrer, of the Victory theatre, secretary, and J. C. Buisson, of the Esplanade theatre, treasurer. All are successful exhibitors, who established suburban houses and have made them profitable. The organization has been incorporated as the Independent Exhibitors' Association of New Orleans, and President Peritz issued the following statement regarding the objects of the new society:

"For a long time, the independent motion picture exhibitor in the New Orleans field has had a hard time, as the victim of the various 'policies' that have been devised by various firms and individuals, all promising to aid him, and he has been compelled to adapt himself and his business to the ever-varying whims of the distributors. Notwithstanding this, the exhibitor has prospered reasonably, not because anybody has put his shoulder to the wheel to help him, but because he has pleased his public and made good on all promises, even though these promises were made by men who forgot it as quick as they made it, and no matter what the keeping of that promise cost him. The neighborhood or suburban theatre in New Orleans has risen from a negligible position to an institution that must be reckoned with, and the independent exhibitor is the man who has so raised it.

"In an effort to remedy some of the handicaps under which they have been laboring and to band themselves together so that their influence may be the better felt, the Independent Exhibitors' Association has been formed, not for any deep scheme to control any branch of the business, but to prevent unjust and burdensome practices which some of these exhibitors have suffered from in the past."

Mastbaum Buys Two Houses

Two of Largest Theatres in Jersey City Added to His Playhouse String

JULES E. MASTBAUM, president of the Stanley Company of America, announced yesterday that this corporation had acquired the Towers and Broadway, two of Camden's, N. J., leading theatres, and beginning on Monday, September 29th, both houses would begin their careers under Stanley Company direction.

Both the Towers and Broadway are operated by M. W. Taylor, who is well known in the theatrical world. He is general manager of the Keystone, Orpheum and other theatres in Philadelphia. Mr. Taylor was desirous of devoting all his time to these various enterprises, and therefore entered into negotiations looking to the Stanley Company taking over both Camden houses, and the deal was consummated yesterday.

The Towers has been a resort for lovers of vaudeville, while the Broadway housed road shows of a popular character. Mr. Mastbaum when questioned concerning the future policy of the Stanley Company regarding both, stated that it is the intention to continue vaudeville at the former and road shows at the Broadway.

It was pointed out that by acquiring the Towers and Broadway theatres, with the Grand, Colonial and Princess, motion picture theatres just recently taken over, the Stanley Company was in a position to provide residents of Camden and its surburbs with practically all forms of theatrical and motion picture entertainment.

Theatre Opening

The Academy of Music in Fall River, which heretofore has produced high class vaudeville and stock has changed its policy to moving pictures, having opened a season on September 8. Manager Boas will show the Paramount and Artcraft features with changes twice weekly.

Denver Exhibitor Pays New York a Visit

H. E. Ellison, one of the most prominent exhibitors in the West and who with John Greaves conducts the Rialto and Princess theatres in Denver, Colo., has taken a brief vacation from his enterprises in order to pay New York a visit. Mr. Ellison has been associated with amusements for a good many years—long enough to be called a member of the old school.

It was during his residence in Abelina, Kan., that he established the Bonebreak Opera House and played such stars as Sol Smith Russell and Minnie Maddern. He severed his connection with this enterprise to launch the Abilena mineral water upon the market. Keeping abreast with the times Mr. Ellison saw his opportunity eight years ago to enter the motion picture industry as an exhibitor.

He has been associated with Mr. Greaves the past two years in the management of their two theatres. The seating capacity of each house is 1,200 and a uniform price is charged. Paramount attractions are the rule with this firm and they are run for the entire week. Mr. Ellison has just contracted with Famous Players-Lasky for its pictures the ensuing year.

Material for Thriller in Film Theft Chase

A deep and dark mystery, a chase by sleuths over fences and fire-escapes and roofs, a thrilling night pursuit in a trailing taxicab through Central Park at 50 miles an hour—these are a few of the features in the latest instalment of the serial the Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is staging in its campaign against those who toil perversely in the attempt to mulct motion picture producers and distributors of photoplays on the reel.

From 1.45 P. M. Saturday, September 13, to 11.30 on the night of the following day, Special Representative W. C. Hawkins, of the Film Theft Committee, and Officer Brady, of the Forty-seventh street station, made five arrests, recovered a considerable amount of purloined film, slept one hour and called it a day.

Orient Has Chance to "See America First"

That natives of twenty-eight Chinese cities may "see America first", a number of American industries including the Ford Motor Co., the Western Electric Co. and the Hoover Vacuum Sweeper Co. have united in preparing 60,000 feet of educational film. This is now on its way to Shanghai. There are two copies of each reel, and they will be used for Chinese lecture courses directed by Prof. C. H. Robertson, Y. M. C. A. educational director in the Orient. The cities in which the pictures will be screened are among the largest in China, running in population from 225,000 to over 1,000,000. The course in each place will continue several days.

New Orleans

LEON A. HARSH, formerly on the editorial staff of The Item, has joined the Saenger Amusement company staff as press representative.

Jack Auslett has been promotd to be special feature representative of Pathe in the larger cities of this territory; James S. Bagnetto succeeds Mr. Auslett as salesman in Louisiana and Texas, and Frank Jene is advanced from assistant booker to chief booker.

Ben Piazza, manager of the Palace theatre, gave a dinner one evening in September to 42 employes of the house, in commemoration of the second anniversary of the opening of the house.

Clarence Greenblatt, formerly at Alexandria for the Saenger Amusement company, which controls 55 motion picture houses in the South, is now making the circuit in preparation for season of legitimate attractions to be put in at several of the houses owned by this company in conection with the regular run of films.

Dominick Olister, who has been right-hand-man to Foster Olroyd, at the Strand theatre for some time, is now manager of the Globe.

Several changes have been made in the New Orleans staff of the Southern Triangle Pictures' Company, which has changed its name to the Enterprise Exhibitors' Corporation. John R. Simpson, local manager, has been transferred to Atlanta, and has been succded by C. E. Stewart, while Robert A. Kelly has been mad assistant manager. Bernard Hyam, special representative of the corporation, has been in New Orleans several days supervising the changes.

Unprecedented development of the rich oil fields around Shreveport, La., has made that city an amusement center, and Charles Gordon, an experienced and aggressive exhibitor has purchased a corner in the business section of Shreveport, on which he is erecting a $200,000 motion picture theatre.

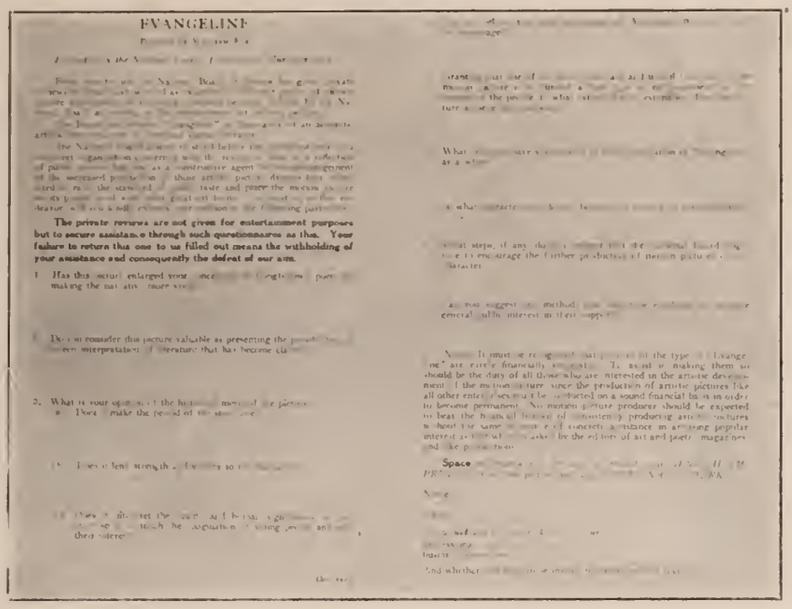
Cleveland

THE Regent theatre, Lima, the first thoroughly modern motion picture theatre of any size, in the town, opened its doors to the public last Sunday.

October 12th is the date set for the release of "The Birth of a Race" in Ohio. This picture is handled in the state by the Ohio Film Classic, 318 Sloan Bldg., Cleveland, under the management of Fred Schram.

Lew Thompson moved his goods and chattels from the Universal office this week to bis new quarters, 510 Sloan building, where he will direct the destinies of the Equity Pictures Corporation of Ohio in the capacity of exchange manager.

"The Unpardonable Sin" is now being released in the entire state of Ohio through Herman Garfield, 310 Sloan bldg., Mr. J. Frank Hatch's personal representative in this territory.



It used to be common parlance to say, when a thing was good that "It's a Bear." That's all changed now out here in Cleveland and instead they are saying, by way of compliment of a production, "It's a Fox."

Fox pictures absorbed five first-run motion picture screens in Cleveland last week.

Plain Dealer Weekly Magazine is now being distributed throughout Ohio by the Masterpiece Film Attractions. The Argus Company of Cleveland continues to take and develop the films, but it has entirely withdrawn from the distributing end of the business.

Cincinnati

A DEAL is said to be pending among exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory which will bring them 100 per cent strong into the C. C. Hite Attractions' Company as stockholders. Considerable correspondence on the subject has been in progress between the company and the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' Company, an organization of prominent exhibitors, and some interesting annuncements are expected shortly. The deal will increase the capital stock of the C. C. Hite Attractions' Company to 500,000.

Wm. Shofer has been appointed Manager of the Cleveland office of the C. C. Hite Attractions' Company.

I. W. McMahan, of McMahan and Jackson, was recentiy elected Vice-President of the Exchange Club of Cincinnati, an organization of prominent business men.

Motion picture exhibitors throughout the State of West Virginia are interested in the announcement of Mr. T. L. Kearse, of the Strand and Burleu theatres, Charlestown, West Va., that prices of admission for these two theatres in the future will be 25 and 35 cents, with 50 cents on special attractions, instead of 15 and 20 cents. The increase is the result of a contract just closed by Mr. Kearse with Manager Harris P. Wolfberg, of the Cincinnati Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for the exclusive first run privileges of all Artcraft and Paramount pictures this season.

The example of increasing admission prices thus set by the Strand and Burleu theatres will undoubtedly be followed by exhibitors throughout the State.

Canada

FOLLOWING a request that the Amusement Tax be abolished by the Manitoba Government, Hon. Edward Brown of Winnipeg, the Provincial Treasurer, announced that the tax was a permanent institution and would not be discontinued.

One of the first Canadian companies to employ moving pictures for the marketing of its product is the Four Wheel Drive Auto Company, Limited, of Kitchener, Ontario. J. D. Fletcher, a representative of the company, uses a single reeler for demonstating the ability of the truck to surmount obstacles, etc., showing the picture before prospective agents and buyers in various cities whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Simultaneously with the depurture of Jay J. Allen of Toronto, of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, on the Aquitania from New York for England where he is to investigate English film producing conditions, Ben Allen, president of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, arrived in Winnipeg to conduct further operations in the development of the company's undertakings in the Canadian West.

The Anglican Synod of Ontario, representing the Church of England in the Province of Ontario, recommended that women be added to the numerous Provincial boards of moving picture censors in Canada at its convention in Lauder Memorial Hall, Ottawa, on September 17. There was no criticism of the moving picture theatres, however.

The Province of Manitoba has arranged an extensive moving picture program for the forthcoming winter throughout the rural sections of the province. The Government authorities recently adopted the moving picture as an educative feature and the Department of Agriculture has arranged for "shows."

The Princess and Empress Theatre, Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, have been sold by Alderman F. L. Willis to J. Simon of Winnipeg, Manitoba, the alderman having decided to move from Portage la Prairie.

Buffalo

ARTHUR JAMES, director of publicity for the Fox Film corporation, visited Buffalo exhibitors and photoplay editors last week in company with Clayton Sheehan, district manager.

William L. Sherry was also in town last week renewing acquaintances.

Operators in Buffalo's downtown houses have received a voluntary increase of 20 per cent, according to an announcement by Dewitt Martin, business agent for the Buffalo Motion Picture Operators' union. Operators in the neighborhood district will also get a boost soon, it is said.

Exhibitors have offered their theatres to the local Four Minute Men who are conducting a campaign against the spread of radical propaganda.

Charles Luntz, formerly conected with First National in San Francisco has joined the local office as salesman.

Eddie Weinberg has re-introduced Community Singing at the Elmwood. His patrons joined with enthusiasm.

Chief of Police James Higgins, City Commissioner of Charities M. Heald and a large number of patrolmen, were the guests of Samuel Carver, manager of the Family theatre at a special screening of "The Midnight Patrol."

Richard C. Fox, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has signed a bar contract with the Elmwood, Victoria and Regent theatres for the Paramount-Artcraft output.

The Regent theatre, Main and Utica, celebrated its fifth aniversary the week of September 22 with special music features and a double film program each night.

Samuel Carver, manager of the Family theatre, has been elected a member of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association.

Letters from Readers

Anent the Alleged Shortage of Managers

Motion Picture News,
New York City.
My dear Mr. Johnston:

In your edition of Aug. 9th under the heading of "Where are the men" you publish a letter from a small town exhibitor, who says he is all "riled up" because he can't get a job as manager in a big town house.

Says he graduated from high school with highest honors, also that he taught school for a while, however, I can't say much for the grammar he uses in his letter, considering his boastful education. He seems to think that because he is able to run his own picture machine, usher, sell tickets, keep his tax straight, be janitor and able to lock his house up for the night, that he has all the requirements necessary to manage a big house.

He also exclaims "God bless my soul" when he hears that the organist of a large house was put in charge as manager, as though a man, because he happened to be a musician was devoid of all other sense of reason, probably picturing him as a long-haired, soulful-eyed dreamer, inspired by ethereal mysticisms, brought to earth by the Almighty Creator, to live out his ecclesiastic life at the keyboard of an organ while the world looks in awe bewilderment wondering how he does it, as though anybody couldn't do the same thing by a little study and practice. He loses sight of the fact that a number of musicians are also endowed with a certain amount of brain matter besides their so-called heavenly inspired genius, and that a great majority of them (I include organists) are after all just as human as the rest of the floating population of this world. "God bless my soul" he says,—I'm with him.

In the first place there is as much difference in managing a small town theatre and a big town house, as there is in Newlywed biscuits and the kind mother used to make. A manager of a large house in a big city, considers janitor work, ticket selling, tax accounts, etc., only minor details, employing competent help to take care of those things for him. A successful manager in a big house, is the man who has the ability to surround himself with an organization of men, each trained in his particular line of work, thereby producing results which bring out a finished show.

Secondly,—a manager in a big town house must know his theatre, the class of people he caters to, and book his pictures and write his ads accordingly. He can do that only by having big town experience. He has the facilities of putting on his show, and invariably does, in a much more elaborate manner than the small town, small house manager could ever dream of doing. That also takes experience and a special study of each production which the small town man has not the opportunity of doing.

He seems to think the big town men have a grudge against the small town man. I wouldn't say that. If he wants to progress, let him move to the big city, get a position as Asst. Manager or even something less, doorman or organist for instance, until he learns the ways of a big city, and if he has initiative about him, he doesn't have to worry about the future. Remember the old saying, "faint heart ne'er won fair lady."

Respectively,
Julius K. Johnson.

Against the Social Disease Pictures

Motion Picture News,
New York City.
My dear Mr. Johnston:

Though I do not wish to appear in the light of an "uplifter" permit me to voice my hearty approval of your splendid editorial regarding the condemnation proceedings of the National Association toward social disease films. It strikes at the very keynote of the evil.

Social disease pictures breed censorship. They are usually exploited by men who have proved to themselves that they cannot meet the competition of the usually clean-minded men who handle and exploit clean pictures for the entire family, from the children to their grandparents. Hence they attach themselves to these germ ridden disease pictures, and by glaring and salacious advertising, endeavor to sell their wares under the guise that they have a great message to deliver to microbe endangered humanity.

The average exhibitor does not want these films. He knows that if he offends his audience with one of these pictures, he has forever lost a certain amount of his patronage. The average exhibitor has clean-minded people for his patrons and he must have clean pictures. The only exhibitors left to show the social disease films are those who, like the people who exploit them, cannot meet competition of the large calibred exhibitors, and who, by salacious publicity campaigns, endeavor to foster the picture on the public. The road has gradually been growing rougher for both the exhibitor, who shows this class of films, and those from whom he rents them.

During the past year, I have talked with a great many exhibitors throughout the country and I have failed to find one who approved of this form of entertainment. I was agreeably surprised at the manner in which they were universally condemned. This to me has been the greatest step, along the roadway of progress, taken by the exhibitor.

The day for the disease ridden film is already at an end. The parasites, who contaminate the neighborhood in the attempt to glorify the social disease as a text book of warning for men, women, and children alike, are on their last legs. They are the leaches of the industry.

Keep up your splendid campaign for clean pictures. It is of invaluable assistance to the great forces in the industry, who are constantly trying to improve the tone of films by both producing and exhibiting pictures that are clean.

Very gratefully yours,

Monte N. Katterjohn.

Poster Pirating Reacts Against Exhibitors

Poster-pirating is becoming a practice that is working a positive harm to the exhibitors who allow themselves to be lured into it. And unfortunately it is the smaller exhibitor who has slipped into this bad habit to the greatest extent; the very class of exhibitor who should be most careful in his showmanship and most scrupulous in giving his house a good name.

Poster-pirating is a product of the day; the effort of a few individuals or firms to profit from another's property. In a number of the larger cities will be found the "pirates." They conduct a "business" to rent used posters, photographs, etc. They either get for nothing or buy from some exhibitor the advertising material he secures from his exchange and they in turn rent it to other exhibitors who show the same picture later. Naturally, the second-hand posters are rented for less than the exchange can supply new posters.

This evil is doing more than any one thing to spoil the appearances of the fronts of smaller theatres. The exhibitor who uses second-hand posters is doing himself injury that cannot be estimated. While he is saving a few pennies, he is throwing away dollars in busines he loses, drives away. A theatre lobby decked with weather-worn, frayed, faded lithographs is not an inviting "show window." Second-hand advertising material unconsciously brings into the spectator's mind the thought of second-hand pictures being shown within the theatre. The day of just showing "a film" is gone; the live exhibitor goes after business. His theatre front is his show window. If he fills that show window with old, dilapitated posters he can't expect to have his theatre stand very high in his community's respect. The small house may not be able to devise elaborate lobby displays, as do the bigger theatres, but they can at least present a clean, sparkling appearance—an invitation to enter and see the NEW, snappy program —not a second-hand affair.

Poster-pirating is reacting against the exhibitor and he should know it and realize that he is practicing mighty poor showmanship when he decides to save five or ten cents by the use of mussy, soiled posters and photos in his lobby. He wouldn't have a barker stand in front of his theatre in patched, torn clothes to attract the public and cry out what a fine picture was inside. He'd at least have the barker dressed cleanly and neatly. Your posters are your barkers—only in a dignified, sincere way.

The problem of the neighborhood or smaller theatres is greater in this connection than even that of the downtown, first-run theatres. The neighborhood house must make itself an inviting place to its public to keep that public from drifting away. It is a mistake for a neighborhood house manager to think everybody in his community knows his theatre. He must "sell" his pictures even more intensively than do the larger houses. And one of his big selling talks is his poster display in the lobby and on the boards.

If poster-pirating were to become much more general than it now is, what would become of the supply of new posters? The

Letter to Sydney Cohen Contains an Appeal to Band for the Tax Repeal

A COMMUNICATION avowedly aimed to promte a closer relationship between exhibitors, has been sent Sidney Cohen by National Secretary Frank Rembusch of the M. P. E. L. A., and is here reproduced in part:

"Your favor of August 18th at hand, and I am very glad to know that New York State Exhibitors are well organized and working successfully. Our ever hope is to see all States organized to the very last exhibitors promoting the best interests of the exhibitor and the entire industry, and it is this wish that we desire to express in our reply now.

"Your letter states, "We must once and for all time build up a real representative organization." Every exhibitor will agree with this fact and we are urging that all assist in bringing this about, no matter what our personal feelings are. The National Organization is not wedded to any particular plan of organization. If the congressional plan of representation or any other plan should please the majority it will be adopted.

"Our constitution, by-laws and basis of representation can be changed at any time by the Executive Committee composed of one member from each State. We can vote on a question by mail or wire, when urgent.

"Therefore let me plead that we forget all differences and all personalities at this time and give our entire attention and energies to the one great problem before us, TAX REVISION.

"Let us not go before Congress in broken groups and each group with a different idea and angle of what should be done and all working at cross purposes as we have in the past. If we go before Congress in any way except as one National Body we may just as well stay at home and save our efforts.

"The very reason why we are burdened with more than our just share of taxes is because in the past we have always divided ourselves against ourselves.

"Therefore it seems to me there can be only one thing to do and that is to all work together as one body in the tax revision work at this time, and whatever else is to be done to adjust such difference as soon as possible afterwards.

"In closing let me reiterate again my appeal to you and all exhibitors to join in one effort to bring about tax revision. Let us do everything possible to the end that there may be one tax effort on the part of all exhibitors in one body, so we may be one in action, one in thought, and one in organization."

Fox's General Sales Manager

Increased Work Leads Sheehan to Name Herman Robbins to Important Position

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the main office of Fox Film Corporation of the appointment of Herman Robbins to the position of general sales manager of that organization. Mr. Robbins was formerly assistant general manager under Winfield R. Sheehan.

Due to the additional work undertaken by General Manager Sheehan in connection with further expansion of service in foreign countries and the exploitation of the great Fox News, the general manager felt that the position of general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation should be created and placed in the hands of an expert who could give to this vitally important branch of the service his undivided attention. It was because of this expansion that Herman Robbins was appointed to the important position just named.

Mr. Sheehan will confer, in a general way, with Mr. Robbins, but it is understood by the district managers and the managers of the Fox exchanges in the United States that Mr. Robbins will be responsible for the sale of Fox film in this country.

The appointment of Mr. Robbins to this important position, now publicly announced, was made by Mr. Sheehan shortly before his departure on a transcontinental trip which concerns not only advertising and exploitation methods, but also production and studio expansion.

The appointment of Mr. Robbins is in line with the policy of Fox Film Corporation to promote to the highest executive positions members of the organization who have demonstrated their ability and are well versed in the policies of the concern. Mr. Robbins has been with Fox Film Corporation since early in 1914.

Mexican Paper Fights Film Pirates

El Universal, the leading newspaper in Mexico City, has inaugurated a campaign against the film pirates who are harassing the legitimate film business transacted in Mexico. In a copy of an editorial announcement received by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the photoplay editor gives a brief history of the operations of film pirates and the part they have played in undermining the film industry in Mexico. He announces that El Universal proposes to defend the "honor of Mexico in the film markets of the world."

Polo-Universal Group Now in Montreal

Last minute news was received to the effect that the Eddie Polo-Universal serial expedition had arrived in Montreal, Canada, on Tuesday, September 23. The company will film a few scenes there and then proceed to Universal City instead of coming to New York City as was previously announced. The serial is titled "The Thirteenth Hour."

only reason an exchange can supply the splendid posters now provided at such low prices is that the lithographs are printed in great numbers. If exhibitors do not take advantage of this and the posters are printed in smaller quantities, then the price would have to go up. For instance, Famous Players-Lasky exchanges are providing exhibitors with 24 sheets of highest quality for $1, a price never before made in the history of the "show-business." This price is made possible only by quantity printing and the quality is regulated the same way.

In my opinion, an old, worn-out poster is expensive at any price. You cannot save money by using it. It is a certain business-killer. It not only doesn't advertise your picture or create a demand for tickets—it positively repels your prospective patron and sends him to another theatre that presents a more inviting front, a brighter promise of pleasing entertainment within.

Mgr. Cincinnati Exchange,
Famous Players-Lasky.

By Whom Is the Northwest Arraigned?

My inclination from a purely personal standpoint should be to assume an attitude of complete indifference toward the self-appointed judge of the Northwest who so brilliantly, capably and otherwise efficiently, expresses himself and so vividly pictures his "statistical records" as relates to the independent exchanges operating in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, in an article given space on page 1997 Motion Picture News of September 6, 1919. Knowing the facts as I do and the real motive that inspired the article, I am referring to, I can get a lot of good comedy out of it—in fact the comedy element in that article stands out more prominently than it does in some of the productions the author of it has sold world rights for (except the Northwest).

However, in the face of a possibility that some one might be misled by the crude and ridiculous assertion of this "statistician," to the possible detriment of the interests I represent, I cannot afford to pass the issue by unnoticed. And in replying I wish it understood that I am not doing so in the spirit of indignation.

I am not indignant. On the other hand I deeply sympathize with any business man so seriously lacking in tact, diplomacy and other business essentials as to be unable to conceal or camouflage his smallness of caliber to better advantage than the author of "Northwest arraigned as Backward" has done.

His motive is plain. His statements are erroneous and in most cases without even a foundation of anything resembling fact. His "seven tours" of data gathering—well let's hope he gathered more real facts in other territories than he did in the Northwest.

As a member of Greater Features Inc., of Seattle, the concern at which his statements were chiefly directed, I wish to give a few brief facts concerning ourselves only. Other independent distributors may speak for themselves if they so desire.

First I will say that Greater Features Inc. is a real state rights exchange, that we are both progressive and prosperous, that we have sufficient capital to conduct our business along sane lines and brains to direct us in the investment of said capital. We buy pictures that we believe suited to our territory and at prices that conditions will warrant.

However, I will admit that we buy conservatively and do not allow every fellow that comes along with "the biggest money maker ever produced" to sell it to us at a price to entirely satisfy his own highest ambition.

We are described by this "statistical expert" as "an exchange no longer acquiring state right attractions but merely handling the product of one organization." Here are the facts in this connection.

Our weekly film purchase averages nearly $2,000.00. On our list of regular releases ten producers are represented. Besides this volume of short productions we have bought eight features in lengths of five or more reels in the last six months. One of these is a big special and the others are good average features. We have two first class road salesmen working steady and we also have what I consider the most efficient exchange organization on "film row" regardless of any.

Why does this gentleman sit back in New York and try through the medium of the trade papers to lead other producers into the belief that there is not an independent distributing organization in the Northwest with money or brains enough to properly conduct their business? Does he hope to force sale of his pictures to one of the exchanges now existing in the Northwest? Does he calculate that his graphic picture of conditions here will induce other capital to rush into the territory to open independent exchanges? Or is he so fond of seeing his

ONE OF THE biggest pictures shown at the Grand in months was "Auction of Souls," which opened a six days' engagement on Sept. 8. Great crowds were in attendance the first day, and during the balance of the week the picture attracted thousands.

"HER INSPIRATION," featuring May Allison, was shown at the Liberty theatre, Sept. 10.

THE WEDNESDAY, Sept. 10, program at the Star consisted of a Triangle feature "A Place in the Sun," with Margaret Blanche and a Tom Mix western.

"SUSPENSE," was shown at the Dreamland on Sept. 10, and despite the fact that it was a second run picture, it drew fine houses.

HARRY MOREY appeared at the Family theatre on Sept. 9 and 10, in "Beauty Proof," a Vitagraph drama. The comedy part of the program was supplied in "Hungry Lions in a Hospital."

PETE MORRISON was featured at the Star theatre on Sept. 11 in "Kingdom Come."

ANITA KING came to the Dreamland theatre on Sept. 11, in "Petticoats and Politics," a delightful photoplay in five acts which did good business.

ANNA CASE was presented at the Family theatre on Sept. 11 and 12, in "The Hidden Truth." The picture was largely attended.

MARGARET BLANCHE and Tim Mix were the stars at the Little Star theater on Sept. 11, the former playing in "A Place in the Sun" and the latter in a western. The theatre was packed during the evening performances.

"ONE WEEK OF LIFE," Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn production came to the Princess theatre on Sept. 12 and 13.. Miss Frederick received a great deal of praise for her work.

A SPLENDID William Desmond play, "Hell's End," was shown at the Star theatre on Sept. 12.

SUCCESS SERIES pictures are going big at the Liberty theatre. On Sept. 12 Pauline Frederick was presented in "Zaza" and drew a notably large house.

"THE MAN FROM MEXICO" featuring John Barrymore, was the Sept. 13 program at the Grand. Average crowds turned out to see this picture.

"HOOP-LA," featuring Billie Rhodes, was shown at the Liberty on Sept. 14, and held the crowds outside during the evening shows.

"VIVE LA FRANCE" came to the Family on Sept. 14. Miss Dalton's work in this feature was declared by many Family patrons to be the best thing she has done in her screen career.

THE STAR theatre presented a Dustin Farnum picture for the first time on Sept. 14. The play was very well received.

THE LITTLE STAR had "The Patriot" for the Sept. 14 program. Hundreds of William Hart followers turned out to see this play.

GLADYS BROCKWELL appeared at the Princess Sept. 14, in "The Broken Commandment," her latest Fox Victory play.

EMMY WEHLEN appeared at the Dreamland theatre on Sept. 14 and 15, in "A Favor to a Friend."

ELSIE FERGUSON attracted numbers of photoplay fans to the Grand on Sept. 15 and 16, and she appeared there in "The Marriage Price."

VIOLET PALMER and Garreth Hughes appeared at the Liberty theatre on Tuesday, Sept. 16, in "Ginger," a spicy comedy drama. Average houses attended this play.

Rubens of Aurora Says Increased Film Charges is Problem

JULES J. RUBENS, manager of the Fox theatre, Aurora, takes issue with the theory that prohibition would increase the popularity of moving picture shows.

"It is claimed," he said in recent interview, "that prohibition aids the theatre business. That is not true, say for me."

Manager Rubens affirms that the great problem of theatre owners today is the increased film charges by producers. He says that increases range from 100 to 500 per cent, and furnishing the following data showings the former and present costs of films. The prices are for first runs:

Mary Pickford was $50. The last Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," shown at the Fox theatre cost $500. Douglas Fairbanks, once $35, is now $400. William S. Hart, once $35, is now $400. William Farnum, once $100, is now $200. Norma Talmadge, once $100, is now $300. Constance Talmadge, $50, is now $250.

"We recently showed a Constance Talmadge picture at the Strand which cost us $50," said Mr. Rubens. "Our receipts were $250. After taking out film cost, $50, the cost of orchestra, light, advertising and employes we had $50 left. On some pictures we lose money. With a charge of $250 for a Constance Talmadge picture, receipts of $250 would not pay expenses."

When asked what the theatre men would do, Mr. Rubens said he did not know.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

"AUCTION OF SOULS" established a new high record for box office receipts at the Bijou Sept. 15, 16 and 17. The picture was pronounced good and it went over in fine shape. It was grewsome but gripped the audience as few pictures have done. The house was packed at the matinees while at night it was impossible to take care of the crowds.

MANAGER Smith is booking Mutual and Universal Specials for Bijou patrons these days. "Turn in the Road," a Mutual, has been booked for Oct. 13, 14 and 15. "Better Times," another Mutual, for Oct. 30, 31 and Nov. 1. "Paid in Advance," a Universal Special, for Oct. 9, 10 and "A Little Brother of the Rich," for Oct. 20 and 21, while Mildred Harris Chaplin will be seen in "Home," Oct. 24 and 25.

THE IDEA did an excellent business, a good program running through the week ending Sept. 20. Manager Vollert has found no complaint whatever by reason of the fact that the theatre has been left without music on account of the failure to renew the contract with the union musicians. The program for the week included Emmy Wehlen in "The Belle of the Season," William Farnum in a "A Man Hunter," and Warren Kerrigan in "Three X Gordon."

BLANCH SWEET in "The Unpardonable Sin" was the offering at the Henry Boyle theatre for three days beginning Sept. 20.

J. STUART BLACTON'S "A House Divided," with Sylvia Braemer and Herbert Rawlinson, opened a successful three days' engagement at the Bijou, Sept. 18.

MANAGER AINSWORTH provided Orpheum patrons with an attractive program for the week beginning Sept. 15. The week oepned with Constance Talmadge, in "Romance and Arabelle." Tom Moore was seen in "One of the Finest," Mabel Normand in "When Doctors Disagree" and Charlie Chaplin in "Police."

THE SCENIC THEATRE, Waupun, included a number of strong attractions in its program for the week ending Sept. 18. Helen Chadwick and Franklyn Farnum were seen in "Go Get 'em Garringer," May Allison in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," Mabel Normand in "Her Romantic Job," E. K. Lincoln in "Fighting Through," Gladys Leslie in "A Stitch in Time," Gladys Brockwell in "The Forbidden Room," and Baby Marie Osborne in "The Sawdust Doll."

News of Springfield Theatres

VIVIAN MARTIN in "The Third Kiss" delighted big crowds at the Vaudette for four days, September 14-15-16 and 17. An Arbuckle comedy and Burton Holmes travelogue were on the same program. Enid Bennett came next in "Stepping Out," and in turn was succeeded by Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow," which was booked for a whole week.

MRS. ELLA DUER, proprietor of the Empress, expects to have a big picture to open her theatre when the new balcony has been installed. Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth" and "Fatty" Arbuckle in "A Desert Hero" were the attractions on September 14.

BEN ROVIN certainly likes to play Bill Hart pictures. The Amuse-U had "The Apostle of Vengeance" on September 13 and "Selfish Yates" on September 14. Result: two great days. William Farnum came Monday in "True Blue," a Fox production.

ED. KUNZ is feeling better after a sick spell.

THE LYRIC reports an excellent week with Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee in "Once to Every Man," "A Little Brother of the Rich," and Alice Brady in "Marie, Ltd."

THE THREE pictures coming to the Lyric for the week of September 14-20 were: Sunday and Monday, Harry Carey in "Riders of Vengeance"; Tuesday and Wednesday, Olive Tell in "The Trap," and Marion Davies in "Please Get Married," on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

THE SAVOY has started a new serial, "The Masked Rider," starring Ruth Stonehouse and Eddie Myers. The program for the week of September 14-20 at the Savoy ran as follows: Sunday, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," Peter Morrison in "The Fighting Sheriff" and a comedy; Monday, Mary Miles Minter in "The Intrusion of Isabelle"; Tuesday, Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den"; Wednesday, serial day, with a feature added; Thursday, George Larkin in "Zongar"; Friday, Neal Hart in "The Heart of the West"; Saturday, Rex Beach's "The Brand."

COMING attractions to be seen at the Princess are Henry B. Warner in "The Man Who Turned White" and Harold Lockwood in "A Man of Honor."

THE VAUDETTE has booked the Hank Mann comedies.

THE ROYAL has first-run Fox pictures in Springfield. Evelyn Nesbit in "The Fallen Idol" was the attraction on September 16.

HERE is the line-up for the week of September 14 at the Capitol: Sunday, Chaplin in "The Bank" and Jack Richardson in "The Range Rider"; Monday, Pauline Frederick in "One Week of Life"; Tuesday, Enid Bennett in "Naughty, Naughty"; Wednesday, William Desmond in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher"; Thursday, Victor Moore in "Chimmy Fadden"; Friday, Olive Thomas in "Love's Prisoner"; Saturday, Louis Bennison in "The Road Called Straight."

HARRY LOPER, manager of the Lyric theatre, accompanied by Mrs. Loper, has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Loper of Chicago. The Chicago Lopers are the owners of the beautiful Kimbark theatre on the south side.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS opened a run at the Gaiety on September 14 in "His Majesty, the American." While the story was not as good as some other pictures with the great star, the production and acting were so good that many thought it the best the smile comedian has ever done. Mrs. Charlie Chaplin followed for three days in "Home," a Universal-Jewel production. "THE MIRACLE MAN" comes to the Gaietly on September 21 for a week's stay.

DOROTHY DALTON played to a fine week's business at the Vaudette, September 7-13. "The Market of Souls" was voted one of the best pictures she has ever made.

MARY PICKFORD had five days of wonderful patronage at the Gaiety in "The Hoodlum." The picture could have run out the week, but Manager Thornton had Dorothy Phillips booked in "Paid in Advance" and had to run it. This last picture was next to "The Heart of Humanity," the best thing Miss Phillips has had, Springfield thinks.

"VIRTUOUS MEN" opened a week's stay at the Princess, Sunday, September 14. The title was a great business getter, and the picture pleased generally. Twenty-five cents admission was charged, which included the war tax.

Flashes of Flint News

PURSUING his "open booking" policy with avidity, Manager Charles Garfield of the Orpheum, has lined up for early showings a number of large productions, several of which he proposes to play for an entire week each.

BEGINNING September 22 his showings for three weeks in succession are "The Eyes of the World;" "The Brat" with Nazimova; and "Checkers." He also has contracted "The Gamblers," "The Third Degree," "Lombardi, Ltd.," Theda Bara in "La Belle Russe," "Fair and Warmer," "The Wolf," "The Man Who Stayed at Home," "Please Get Married," "The 13th Chair," "Paid in Advance" with Dorothy Phillips, besides an assortment of William Farnum, Anita Stewart and Tom Mix subjects.

IN connection with his "open booking" policy Manager Garfield makes it a practice not to show any picture which he has not seen screened. He also declares that he is "off" the idea of playing pictures because of the name of the star, and seeking productions instead.

EDDIE EBISH who until recently was organist at the Valentine theatre in Toledo is now furnishing the music at the Orpheum theatre here.

FOR the four days beginning September 21, Manager Frank H. Butterfield of the Palace theatre which ordinarily plays six acts of vaudeville and some one or two-reel comedy pictures and a current topics reel, changed entirely to pictures, the feature being Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."

Gathered in Green Bay

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG was screened in "The Better Wife," a Select picture, in the Grand theatre, Sept. 18-19-20-21.

"THE LADY OF RED BUTTE," a Paramount picture of western days, was shown Sept. 19-20 in the Colonial theatre.

LINA CAVALIERI was seen in the Paramount film, "Love's Conquest," the scenes of which are laid in the ancient days of Athens, at the Orpheum theatre, Sept. 18-19-20-21.

THE GOLDWYN picture, "Through the Wrong Door," with Madge Kennedy in the leading role, was presented in the Colonial theatre Sept. 17-18.

MARGARITA FISHER played in the American film, "Put Your Hands Up," in the new Bijou theatre Sept. 17-18.

ETHEL CLAYTON added to her following of friends when seen in the Paramount picture, "Men, Woman and Money" Sept. 15-16 in the Colonial theatre.

LOUIS BENNISON appeared in the Goldwyn release, "Speedy Meade" Sept. 15 in the New Bijou theatre. A Sunshine comedy, "Money Talks" was shown on the same program.

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL," the special picture from Thomas Dixon's Book "Comrades" drew large audiences to the Grand theatre Sept. 15-16-17.

"PRUDENCE ON BROADWAY," a Triangle film, featuring Olive Thomas, was shown in the Royal theatre Sept. 17-18.

BETTY COMPSON, who is new to the theatre patrons here, was presented in the New Bijou theatre Sept. 19-20 in the World picture, "The Devil's Trail."

"BAREFISTED GALLAGHER," a Mutual offering, with William Desmond in the leading role, was screened in the Royal theatre Sept. 20.

NEAL HART of the Hart studios, played in "When the Desert Smiled" Sept. 19 in the Royal theatre.

Flint Manager Exploits "Checkers" in Thomas Carrigan's Home Town

NEVER has a rural town been "papered" by a Flint theatre to advertise any coming attraction than Lapeer, twenty miles from here, is being lithographed by Charles Garfield, manager of the Orpheum theatre for the showing of "Checkers," which he will play soon.

The reason is that Lapeer is the boyhood home of Thomas J. Carrigan who takes one of the principal roles in the film. Mr. Garfield is using all the publicity power at his command to let Carrigan's home folks know that he will be at the Orpheum soon.

Carrigan is extremely popular in Lapeer where his family operates a hotel. His brother, George Carrigan, has been prominent in politics and was sheriff of Lapeer County two terms. It is expected that many Lapeer people who attended school with Carrigan will take the opportunity to witness the production of "Checkers" here.

In Lansing Picture Houses

MANAGER WM. O'DONNELL of the Vaudette theatre has booked the Tom Mix films. He starts the first of 15 of the second week in October.

PICTURES shared with vaudeville the first half of the week of Sept. 15 at the Bijou theatre and were the whole thing the final half of the week. Manager Brown offered a double bill the first half, supplementing five "vode" acts feature, "A Grain of Dust." The last half, the First National attraction, "A Temperamental Wife," starring Constance Talmadge, replaced vaudeville.

MANAGER CADY has worked the slogans, "Big Stars," "Good Stories," and "Clean Pictures" in his advertising name line. He gave a big advance play on Elsie Ferguson in "The Marriage Price," Sept. 22 and 23.

ETHEL CLAYTON in "Men, Women and Money" follows "Eyes of the World" at the Gladmer theatre Sept. 23 and 24.

EDDIE POLO in the cyclone Smith stories have been given a return booking by William O'Donnell of the Vaudette.

MANAGER WILLAM O'DONNELL has installed an Aeolin Duo-Art piano in his Vaudette. He has placed it near his projection booth at the front of the house. The sound attracts attention to his house from the street and furnishes music for his audience.

THE FIRST episode of "Smashing Barriers," a Vitagraph serial in 15 episodes, was shown at the Orpheum Oct. 19, by Manager Jarvis.

BILLING it the greatest production in the screen career of Theda Bara, Manager Hall of the Plaza made a big advance play on "Labelle Russe." He showed the picture on Sept. 22, 23 and 24.

"EYES OF THE WORLD" is making an attendance record at the Gladmer theatre. It was shown Sept. 20, 21 and 22.

Illinois Pictures To Show Throughout State

IT was announced from Springfield, Ill., this week that motion pictures made by one of the leading film companies for the Illinois department of public welfare will be exhibited in the principal cities of the state by Col. Frank D. Whipp, fiscal supervisor of the department. These pictures include those of the state house, the temple of justice, the Lincoln statue in front of the Capitol, both houses taken before the adjournment, and views taken in various state institutions showing what is being done by the department of welfare for the unfortunate wards of the state. The pictures have already been shown at Princeton at the Bureau county fair. Most of the exhibitions will be given under the auspices of members of the Illinois legislature.

Detroit Theatres Prosperous

DETROIT THEATRES have never been more prosperous than they are today. The leading houses are all competing with great advertising campaigns and everyone appears to be playing to capacity at each performance. Last Sunday week the openings included "hTe Eyes of the World" at the Broadway Strand, "The Hoodlum" at the Adams, "Checkers" at the Washington and "Her Kingdom of Dreams" at the Madison. "Sahara" also was at the Majestic for the last week of this house's picture policy. Each theatre had many added features and each performance was excellent.

They Say in Chicago That—

A. JAY ABRAMS, salesmanger of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has just returned from Paducah, Kentucky, after selling Manager L. Keil of the Arcade theatre, a Bartola. Mr. Abrams will leave immediately for Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Philadelphia, and New York, where he contemplates appointing a New York manager.

OTTO C. LINDENAU of the Ideal Theatre, Lemont, Illinois, has been in Chicago recently, looking over the feature market and reports that business in Lemont is in splendid shape, his house doing capacity business at all performances.

THOMAS R. GILLAM of the Bartola sales force, reports that Thomas, Jr., has arrived and that he will start training him immediately to sell the Bartola. Mr. Gillam and Dan Barton, the inventor of the instrument, will make a trip through Michigan and expect to close six contracts now pending.

J. W. MARTIN, well and favorably known in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, has added to his long string of interests by accepting an executive chair with the Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago.

H. R. PHILIPS, Chicago salesman for the Hyman Attractions, reports that their production, "Virtuous Men" is booked solid for September and October in Chicago with prospects that November and December will prove as strong. The work accomplished by Mr. Philips is highly commendable, owing to the fact that he is a new comer in Chicago's Film world with many obstacles to overcome—Keep right on, friend Philips, some one will sit up and take a whole lot of notice. Consistent salesmanship will tell.

MR. AND MRS. PHILLIP LEWIS are spending their honeymoon in the east. Mr. Lewis is owner of the Owl Feature Film Company of Chicago.

FLOYD BROWN, manager of the First National Exchange, at Indianapolis spent three days in Chicago this week on business.

ON MONDAY, September 22nd, Harry Weiss of the First National, leaves for a four weeks auto trip. This is the first trip in his new car, the old one having died of old age after a 62,000 mile journey in three years. The old car may have had gray hairs Harry, but you will never acquire them, as you indulge freely in the world renowned fountain of youth, vintage.

I. MAYNARD SCHWARTZ came to grief recently, out in the country while driving his flivver. Maynard forgot that when the engine stops, the lights go out and all the sales talk that he gave the policeman did not square things. It was a case of, "Good morning Judge," and the verdict was $6.30, which is less than the price of an oil lamp.

SOME of the recent visitors to Chicago include J. F. Schalbert, Avoy theatre, Moline, Illinois; Pop Woodyatt, wearing a brand new hat, from Bio theater, Moline, Illinois; Carl J. Miller, Spencer Square theatre, Rock Island, Illinois; W. H. Cadoret, Kankakee, Illinois; M. M. Ruebens, Joliet, Illinois; William Pearl, Highland Park, Illinois; Louis Landau, Washington theatre, Granite City, Illinois, and G. H. Hines, Auditorium, South Bend, Indiana.

CHARLES J. SCHAEFER, dean of Chicago exhibitors and owner of the Garfield theatre, announces that he has moved his offices a little closer to Mother Earth.. He is now located at room 600, Mallers building and says that the latch string is always out. Film salesmen or anyone else will not have to send in their card or sit on a bench to cool their heels for an hour before entering his office. Mr. Schaefer is a great believer in democracy.

GEORGE DEIHL has sold his Mirror theatre at Moline, Illinois, and is leaving for California on account of ill health. Mr. Deihl is one of the oldest picture theatre exhibitors in the state of Illinois, and the Mirror was one of the first theatres in Moline.

MARLOWE BROTHERS of Herrim, Illinois, announced the opening of their new theatre at Murphysboro, early in October. The new house will run all large productions.

GREGORY BROTHERS, who recently announced their intention of building a new theatre at Hammond, Indiana, also announced the erection of a new theatre at Chicago Heights, Illinois.

W. D. BURFORD of the Aurora Theatre Company, Aurora, Illinois, while on a recent trip proved himself some little fisherman, as proven by the hundred kodak pictures he has brought back—Friend Burford is a good fisher, even after special pictures, which the gentleman always manages to land for his Aurora clientele.

WILLIAM C. COOK, city salesman of the First National, celebrated his 27th birthday with a house warming, Saturday, September 20th. By special arrangement the police were not called—Evidently some joyful gathering.

MR. S. A. ROBERTS of the Lyric theatre, Casey, Illinois, was a Chicago writer.

W. P. WREATH, formerly of the Paramount Service at St. Louis has been made district manager of the First National offices in Des Moines, Kansas City and Omaha—Good luck, friend Wreath.

THE COLONIAL theatre at Danville, Illinois has been sold recently to some people from Attica, Indiana. O. L. Jorodski & Son were the owners of the Colonial. It is the oldest theatre in the state of Illinois, having been built in 1905 and its career has been most successful.

THOMAS P. RONAN, manager of the Palace theatre, Danville, Illionois, was a Chicago visitor this week, at which time the gentleman called on his many friends and looked over a number of feature pictures.

G. H. MYERS, manager of the Park theatre, Champaign, Illinois, has been in Chicago recently and reports that business is keeping right up with all their presentations.

LOUIS B. GOLDEN, Indiana salesman for the Celebrated Players Film Company, reports business great in Indiana.

Heard in Detroit

JOHN H. KUNSKY has purchased a Chaplin single reel, "Some Nerve," for Michigan distribution. The First National exchange will distribute it.

"OH BOY," which played the De Luxe for five days was put on with a number of local stunts. Manager A. J. Moeller had a jazz orchestra in the lobby each night for dancing, after the last performance, and six girls put on a dancing number during the showing of the film.

ARTHUR JAMES, general publicity director for William Fox, was a Detroit visitor last week, spending a day here on his trip west.

THE FULLER theatre, at Kalamazoo, after $30,000 had been spent in changes and decorations, opened last Sunday with "The Brat" to splendid business. Lew Barnes and his associates now control the house.

ALL its previous records for business, it is reported, have been broken by the Detroit Universal exchange.

A MICHIGAN exhibitor in the Thumb district was found guilty last week of bicycling a film from one house to another on one rental. Criminal prosecution is being instituted.

HENRY SANTREY and his Jazz band has proved the biggest attraction ever offered locally in a picture theatre with the exception of the Sennett bathing girls. Santrey has nine musicians who put up a lively musical program and then accompany Santrey in his songs. The company is now touring the state. House records at the Del The and Ferry Field theatres were broken when this attraction was booked.

HERMAN ROBBINS, assistant general manager of the Fox Film corporation and Clayton Sheehan, division manager, were local visitors during the week.

THREE downtown Detroit theatres have raised their prices. Orchestra seats in the Broadway Strand, Adams and Madison, are now 50 cents instead of 40. This includes the war tax.

A SPECIAL midnight performance of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and the Senneett girls was given by Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand to members of the Kiwanis club Friday night.

"MICKEY" claims to hold the record for any picture playing Detroit theatres having been shown for 176 days in this city.

A NEW serial is now playing at the Family theatre. It is "The Red Glove," produced by Universal and starring Marie Walcamp.

TOM MOORE appeared September 9-10 at the Colonial theatre in the Goldwyn picture, "The City of Comrades," in which the theme, "A man may be down, but he's never out," is exemplified.

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD," although old, drew capacity houses to the Grand theatre when shown for three days, September 9-10-11.

TEXAS GUINAN was seen on the screen of the Royal theatre September 9-10 in a Frohman Amusement Corporation film, "The She Wolf."

FRANK KEENAN played in the Pathe picture, "Gates of Brass" in the Royal theatre, September 9-10.

"HIGH POCKETS," a Goldwyn release, was produced in the New Bijou theatre September 8-9. Louis Bennison played in the lead.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "Destiny" has been given an extra large advertising campaign for the engagement at the Colonial. Miss Phillips has become one of the most important stars seen in the films here.

THE DETROIT Universal exchange has reopened its screen room and is showing its pictures to exhibitors all day long. Joe Friedman, office manager has returned from a southern trip. The new Corbett serial starts off on September 17 at the Palace. L. E. Davis is a new city salesman and Roule Kleever has been appointed exploitation manager.

THE KNICKERBOCKER broke a house record with "The Spoilers," its fourth time there, and has arranged for another return engagement.

WITH THE showing of "Sahara" at the Majestic next week, the house will discontinue its straight picture policy and will offer vaudeville as well as photoplays.

JOHN P. SOUDERS, former booker and salesman for Universal, has resigned to handle "The Passing of the Oklahoma Outlaws" in Michigan."

UNIVERSAL exchange employes in a "Get-Together Dinner" at the Hotel Statler, presented A. A. Schmidt, district manager, with a pair of gold links, danced, listened to the police censors, and enjoyed themselves generally. Sidney Alexander acted as toastmaster.

E. W. FOLEY, former assistant manager of the Madison theatre, has gone to Saginaw to take charge of the Sargent theatre for W. S. Butterfield.

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT week proved a complete success in Detroit. Five week stand houses offered Paramount-Artcraft programs and 90 per cent. of the neighborhood theatres.

THE DE LUXE THEATRE has booked "Eyes of the World" for a week following its engagement at the Broadway Strand.

Stars of the Screen and Speaking Stage Shed Real Tears

WHEN the five prominent actresses who participated in the monster benefit given for the Tanner orphans at the Auditorium, Chicago, Sunday afternoon, September 7, visited Hubbard Woods to start the ticket sale drive, they stopped at the home of the orphans and were immediately christened "Stars of Hope" as well as stars of the stage and screen, their emotions mastered them and at least five of the best known women of the mimic world, Pearl White, Hazel Dawn, Eleanor Dawn, Gilda Leary, and Blanche Ring had used up all their handkerchiefs before starting back to Chicago.

Biggest Month for Lansing Manager

AUGUST was the biggest month in the history of the Orpheum and Garden theatres, operated by E. Clement Jarvis. Lansing is a city of 70,000 population. During the month Mr. Jarvis showed to a number approximately equal to the city's population. He entertained 40,000 at the Orpheum, with a seating capacity of 500, and 30,000 at the Garden, with a seating capacity of 381. He showed 3,700 children at the Orpheum alone during the month.

Indianapolis Managers Threaten Court Action Against Operators

COURT action to force their operators to abide by an alleged wage contract is threatened by managers of Indianapolis neighborhood photoplay theatres. The contract, the managers say, was entered into with the machine men two years ago.

The operators seek a wage scale of $1 per hour. The manager offer a scale of sixty-nine cents an hour, which will amount to an increase of $2 per week. The operators say the contract is binding no longer because one of the managers violated one of its provisions some time ago. The managers contend that if this is true the contract is abrogated only as to the offending exhibitor and is bind in all of her affected theatres.

Approximately twenty neighborhood houses are affected by the controversy. The operators are at work, having returned a week ago after having been on a walkout for more than a week.

Downtown theatres settled with their striking operators by granting an increase of $5 per week several days ago. This makes the downtown scale the same as the neighborhood houses are offering to comprise with their men on.

"We are ready to see if this contract is a mere scrap of paper that can be ignored at any time," said R. R. Bair, chairman of the neighborhood exhibitors' committee.

The average neighborhood weekly wage is $23.50 while the highest paid downtown operator gets $32 per week, the managers say.

Catherine Curtis to Make Big Production in Spokane

CATHERINE CURTIS, president of the Catherine Curtis Picture corporation, has closed a contract with the Playter Photoplayers to make a $250,000 production it is said, starring her, using the Minnehaha park studios in Spokane, Wash., as headquarters.

Miss Curtis, with her organization of 20 people, is already in Spokane, with two carloads of equipment. Miss Curtis is entering the producing end of the business with two main ideals—to depict on the screen the west as it really is, to show the processes in its upbuilding and to demonstrate its true relationship to the east. She believes picture patrons are tiring of the blood-and-thunder hair-pants' "westerns" commonly offered them, showing a largely imaginary west of 40 years ago.

She has engaged the best scenario writers and technicians, it is reported. She is bringing an all star cast to Spokane, together with her secretary, Miss Trainor, and her manager, Homer B. King, who is no stranger to Spokane. He built Bozanta Tavern at Hayden Lake and the Hotel Idaho at Coeur d'Alene. Edward F. Curtis, the noted photographer of Indian types, has been engaged to head the photographic department and George Scott, a veteran camera man, who has done work for Griffith and Famous Players, will work under the direction of Mr. Curtis.

Miss Curtis is bringing four cameras with her. Her first picture, as yet unnamed, will be a story of the new west in which she hopes to present the right interpretation of western atmosphere. The feature will require ten weeks in the making and special electrical lighting will be taken into Coeur d'Alene country.

"I have already arranged to tap the power line north of St. Maries, in the Coeur d'Alenes, where some of the scenes are to be made," said Wellington Playter, president of the Playter Photoplayers. "This will be the first time that electricity has been used on location in the woods such as this. We have contracted to have 200 Nez Perce Indians participate in the production, bringing their tepees, costumes and full equipment of the early days."

Portland Operators' and Musicians' Strike Is Settled

SETTLEMENT of the strike brought by the Portland Theatrical Federation against motion picture houses came on September 11 after five days of non-union operators and musicians in the 14 largest motion picture houses of Portland. Union men asked the immediate installation of orchestras varying in size from 10 to two pieces in each of the downtown houses. The final agreement provided for the immediate establishment of an eight-piece orchestra in the Columbia theatre and the placing of a twelve-piece orchestra in the Peoples theatre within 90 days. The managers insisted upon 90 days' grace in which to install the Peoples orchestra to present plans for renovating the house. The Columbia theatre is one of the two houses owned by Jensen and Von Herberg, while the Peoples theatre is one of three houses under the direction of the Peoples Amusement Company of which two-thirds of the stock was recently purchased by Jensen and Von Herberg and J. J. Parker of the Majestic Amusement Company of Portland. Strike was originally declared against 15 houses, but C. M. Hill, manager of the Globe theatre, convinced union men his house was not able to afford further investment in music and his theatre was declared fair. During the strike C. J. Jensen acted as spokesman for the theatres. Three conferences were held by managers and union men during the five days of the strike. Each conference commenced at 11:30 o'clock at night and not one of them was concluded before 3:30 o'clock of the following morning.

Curious incidents arose during the strike.

Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, was caught putting up a "24" sheet on a bill board located on one of the busiest downtown corners. He confessed afterward that his position was not made enjoyable by the union men who caught him in the act of replacing the regular posters. "But ——" he declared, "you should have seen me teaching the organ. I was telling the girl just how to do it when she turned on me and suddenly suggested I show her. I murmured something about rheumatism and made a fast get-a-way."

An organist at one of the larger Portland cinema houses is said to have had a 10-year contract which contained a clause providing for a $10,000 fine should the contract be broken by either party. In walking out with his union members he was breaking the contract. Should he have refused to walk out he would also have been liable to heavy fine from his union and to the possible forfeiture of his union membership. It is said that his manager is overlooking the $10,000 clause during the present difficulties. Union employees were taken back into their old employ on the Monday of the following week.

New Exchange Manager for Universal, Portland

VERNON M. SCHUBACH, one of the best-known roadmen in the film business in the northwest, has gone to Seattle to assume the managership of the Universal film exchange in that city, succeeding Wallace Potter, resigned. Mr. Schubach entered the film business as cashier for the Film Supply Company of Oregon, one of the pioneer exchanges of the northwest, when it was founded by G. A. Metzger some years ago. This company later became the distributor for Universal in the entire northwest and Mr. Schubach, aside from a period in which he had charge of the Seattle branch before, has been on the road in Oregon and Eastern Washington and Idaho for the company continually to the present time.

Fox Exchange, Los Angeles, Notifies Exhibitors of Coming News Service

THE Fox exchange has forwarded several hundred letters to exhibitors in the Southern California and Arizona territory telling them of the forthcoming Fox news service. The letter follows:

"What is of the most interest to your patrons? Answer: The news events and happenings on the Pacific coast. These events will now be positively secured by the most thorough organization of camera men and studio editorial staff ever known and all the news will be shown in moving pictures with a promptness that will surprise you.

"The Fox Film corporation will issue its first News October 5, and twice weekly thereafter; and in addition to supplying you with Pacific coast news as well as the news from the entire world, we will also show novelty stunts that will please both you and your patrons. We are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to make this the most interesting and successful news ever published, and it is now up to you to benefit and take advantage of this opportunity. Will you do it? Write, wire or phone us. Our prices are right and consistent with quality."

The letter is signed by the Fox Film corporation by B. E. Loper as manager of the Los Angeles branch.

American Theatre, Salt Lake, Gets Notable Musical Talent

THE American theatre management has secured some of the most notable musical talent in the United States for the coming season. The following artists will appear during the year in the order named: Paul Althouse, foremost American tenor and member of the Metropolitan Opera company; Cherniovsky Trio, violinist, pianist and cellist; Alice Nielsen, America's great lyric soprano; Harold Henry, Pianist, soloist with the New York, Chicago and Minneapolis spmphony orchestras; Frances Ingram, prima donna contralto of the Metropolitan Opera company and the Zoelliner String Quartet, America's popular string ensemble.

Portland Likes Fairbanks' Latest

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "His Majesty, the American," was the first picture to follow the announcement of J. J. Parker, president of the Majestic Amusement Company of Portland, of contracts entitling him to all Griffith, Pickford, Chaplin and Fairbanks productions. It proved to be an extraordinary attraction from the drawing standpoint. The picture opened on September 13 and by the evening of the following day Frank Lacey, manager, announced that it would be continued an additional week.

West Coast Edition

Salt Lake and Vicinity

HARVEY H. GATES, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Gates of Salt Lake, who has risen to fame in the moving picture world as a scenario writer, is visiting his parents in this city. Mr. Gates was formerly with the Universal Company at Los Angeles, but is now "utility" man with the National Company. He expects to spend a week here. He speaks highly of Jean Lewis, Elliott Clawson and Leroy Armstrong, all former Salt Lakers, who, he says, are rising rapidly to fame.

W. C. WHITTLE, manager of the Orpheum theatre in Oakley, Idaho; Hirian Jensen of the Rex theatre at Hiram, Utah, and Frank Knotts of the Orpheum moving picture house at Park City were Salt Lake visitors last week. All report business very good.

THE WILKES theatre will open September 28 with vaudeville and moving pictures. Al Fountain is the manager.

THE WORLD exchange reports that "When Bearcat Went Dry" is swamping the office with bookings. It has met with tremendous applause in the intermountain country. "Twelve Ten" is the next big world picture for release here. The management of the Lyceum theatre in Ogden reports that the crowds were so great when the Judge Brown series were shown that the ticket seller stopped selling tickets for two hours.

EDWARD SAWTELL, formerly of the Fillmore theatre in San Francisco, is the new organist at the American theatre. Bernard Barnes formerly of the Liberty theatre in Seattle is the relief organist.

EMPLOYEES of the American theatre have presented William H. Swanson, the owner, with a handsome engraved gold cigarette case in token of their appreciation of his fair treatment and generosity.

THE AMERICAN theatre has been giving children's matinees with wonderful success during the past few weeks. Charlie Chaplin and other comedy films interspersed with travel pictures composed the programs.

In Portland Film Circles

ASSISTANT MANAGER LACEY, at the Majestic theatre, Portland, is making preparations for the showing of the first of the two-reel features of the Stage Women's War Relief series, beginning Saturday, Sept. 10. This series was made by the Stage Women's War Relief Association for the benefit of the Federal Debarkation Hospital Number 5, in New York, and the plays were participated in by leading stage stars of the county.

FRANK TALBERT, travelling auditor for Universal, whose home is in Portland, says that, in addition to extending its activities to South America, the big concern is preparing to go into the Asiatic market. Mr. Talbert is to leave in a short time for South America and Mr. R. Chase has been dispatched from the home office to go to Siberia, Korea and Northern China, to open offices for the company.

T. J. ROBINSON, of Silverton, has become manager of the Palace Theatre, Silverton, Oregon, succeeding Walter Johnson, who intends to devote his full time in future to his insurance business. Mr. Johnson and Mr. Robinson were in Portland yesterday meeting the exchange men and arranging for the continuance of the policy of the theatre which has built it up in the past five months under Mr. Johnson's management. The theatre caters to road shows and vaudeville and handles the better features in photoplays. Mr. Robinson is just opening with the serial "Elmo the Mighty" which has been featured at the Columbia in Portland.

THE JOY THEATRE in Grants Pass has been remodelled by its manager, Miss Alma P. Wolke and reappears under the name Oregon theatre.

WALTER JOHNSON, manager of the Palace theatre, Silverton, Oregon, was in Portland recently visiting the Universal exchange.

"DADDY LONG LEGS" is having a phenomenal run at the Sunset theatre, one of Portland's largest second run houses. Making allowances for the fact that it is a Pickford picture and therefore a success from the box office standpoint, the Sunset management declared it to be exceptional for its drawing power. Sam W. B. Cohn, manager of the Sunset, aided its exploitation by taking additional newspaper space during its run.

Spokane News and Views

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S story of the Ozark mountains, "The Shepherd of the Hills," showed at the Auditorium theatre for seven days, running matinee and evening show daily. Special music by a large orchestra accompanied the picture. Manager Charles W. York has booked several film features for the season, including the government film, "The End of the Road." Catherine Curtis was selected by Harold Bell Wright to play the lead in the film production.

BILL HART held the boards at the Liberty for four days, showing in "Wagon Tracks." Enid Bennett in "The Haunted Bedroom" was the film offering the remainder of the week. The Stilwell houses, the Casino and the Class A, showed respectively Theda Bara in "When Men Desire" and "Break the News to Mother." The Clemmer program for the week included Maurice Tourneur's "The White Heather" and Jack Pickford in "Burglary by Proxy." The Lyric and the Majestic showed respectively William Faversham in "The Silver King" and Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona."

Fox Feature Big Hit in Portland

SO successful was "A Rough Riding Romance," featuring Tom Mix during the Sunday previous and the Monday of President Wilson's visit in Portland, Oregon, that the Strand theatre which was showing the picture announced it would continue the same photoplay until Thursday midnight. This is an unusual move from the Strand as it usually changes pictures on Sundays and Wednesday.

San Francisco News

E. T. WAKEFIELD, who has been a salesman for the Universal, has become the San Francisco booker, succeeding W. A. Wood, who goes on the road.

ABE JACKSON and D. S. Markowitz have purchased the Bijou theatre at Fresno.

J. L. MERRICK, representing Robinson-Cole Co., was in San Francisco for several days this week posting the office of the Exhibitors Mutual on coming products which he says will "top the World."

RALPH QUIVE, branch manager of the Realart Pictures Corp., has opened up the local exchange of that company at 1006-1008 Hewes building, 995 Market street.

THE COOKOO COMEDIES circulated by the United are being received with open arms by the exhibitors in this territory. It is stated that they will be shown in practically every theatre. For some reason the title is not pleasing to most of the exhibitors who have renamed the pictures "The Birds."

"THE GIRL FROM OUTSIDE" is running to capacity houses at the Tivoli. An unusual stage setting is provided for a prologue, with a drop showing the Arctic regions and stuffed Arctic animals in the foreground.

DUSTIN FARNUM in "A Man's Fight" played to capacity houses at the Strand theatre this week.

BEN WILLIAMS, exploitation man for the Universal, has just returned from a ten days' trip through the territory during which he visited newspapers in the principal cities and was very successful in arranging publicity for the big campaiign which the Universal is inaugurating.

AL SZEKLER, Universal booker in the Los Angeles office, spent several days in the San Francisco office introducing the system of booking in Los Angeles in this city.

Cooperative Exploitations for Select Feature in Venice

COOPERATING with the California theatre the Los Angeles Select exchange, under the direction of David Swing Ricker, western exploitation manager, staged an "Upstairs and Down" day in Venice, as a preliminary advertising campaign of the showing of the picture at the California during the week of September 22. George Cleveland, publicity manager of Venice, cooperated in the plan. High diving contests, Upstairs and Down speed races in the Venice plunge, fox trot quartette at the Big Pier dancing pavilion, pageant dance, trip through the clouds and other events. Business houses of Los Angeles and Venice also cooperated in the event, donating prizes to be won by the various contestants. A total of 10,000 dodgers were distributed jointly by Venice. The Select Pictures corporation and the Pacific Electric Railway; also 2,000 one-half cards and 500 Venice posters showing bathing girls. More than 60 downtown windows in Los Angeles carried displays, eleven of these windows showing three sheet cutouts of Olive Thomas, star of "Upstairs and Down."

What They Say in Seattle

JAMES Q. CLEMMER made a two weeks' hit with Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American." Some days the crowds could hardly be handled and at each performance someone clapped or whistled or stamped their feet or did something to let Jimmy know they liked the show.

J. D. RICE, proprietor of the Dream theatre, Chehalis, Wash., was a recent visitor to Seattle, where he was visiting with Jack Lannon and manager Sheffield of the Brewsters Feature company, most of the time.

NORTH WEST manager George Endert, of the Famous Players-Lasky Co., who has recently returned from a trip in Eastern Washington, has announced that he has done more business there and in Western Washington than he expected. This is expected of George, he always passes his mark. Some hitch their wagons to a star, but George has no wagon, he uses a 12 or 15 cylinder machine. Among his sales were the entire lot of Paramount pictures for the fiscal year to the Greater Theatres Co., who will use them in four of their theatres in Seattle and four theatres in Tacoma. Endert also made yearly contracts with the Everett in Everett; the Liberty in Centralia; the Liberty in Chehalis; the Rialto and Dream in Bremerton; the Gem and Wenatchee in Wenatchee; and the Liberty, Clemmer and Rex in Spokane.

THE Greater Theatres Company have decided to play the Famous-Players-Lasky Co.'s "Mircle Man," with the week beginning Oct. 5 in two of their houses, the Coliseum and the Liberty, at the same time, as this is the only manner in which Jensen and Von Herberg can figure that they can handle the crowds. The Miracle Man" was booked at at advanced price and tickets will be sold at an advanced price. This is the first time in the West that one play is shown at two houses at the same time.

THE Greater Features Co., Jack Lannon, proprietor, has announced that they have taken over the following short reelers for the states of Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho and Alaska: "The Hall Room Boys"; one reel "Gaiety"; two reel "Westerners"; Jenning and Harte pictures. These together with other one and two reelers give the Greater Features Company more short reelers than only other independent exchange house in the country.

With Los Angeles Exchanges

THE TRIANGLE EXCHANGE is making preparations to relase soon a series of seven of the best productions made by Triangle and Fine Arts in 1916, according to plans just announced this week by C. J. Marley, branch manager. "The Flame of the Yukon," made by Triangle and written by Monte Katterjohn, and "Peggy," in which Billie Burke is starred, will probably be among the first releases. There will be a release of the subjects at intervals of five weeks.

GEORGE OLDFIELD, formerly with the VITAGRAPH exchanges at Cleveland and St. Louis, was this week added to the salesmen forces of the Los Angeles Vitagraph exchange.

W. H. HEPBURN, Vitagraph manager, announces that the Vitagraph program which was installed several months ago at the Palace theatre, is making a hit with patrons of that house.

MANAGER FIELD CARMICHAEL, of the Pathe exchange, announces that the Mrs. Sydney Drey comedies are to be released by that exchange in this territory beginning at an early date. Edgar Lewis productions are also to be handled by Pathe.

ACCORDING to announcement made in Los Angeles by Pathe exchange J. Stuart Blackton has closed a contract with Pathe, and that his first productions under the new contract will be "Dawn," written by Eleanor Porter.

THE FOX EXCHANGE announces that a contract for Theda Bara future productions to be played at the Symphony theatre on Broadway, has just been concluded with that house. The first picture of the series, "A Woman There Was," played to capacity business during the week of September 14.

CONTRACTS placing Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein productions in leading theatres in San Diego, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara were made this week, it was announced at the Select offices.

HOWARD SHEEHAN, western division manager of the Fox exchanges, has returned from a circuit trip, including Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco. He reports that the Fox production, "Checkers," has been having a phenomenal run in Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Tacoma, Spokane, Butte, Great Falls, Boise, Niles City, Everett, Oregon City, Berkeley, Stockton, Reno and San Jose.

W. T. WALL, Select salesman, left this week for an extended trip through Arizona.

BOBBY BURNS comedies, better known as the Cookoo comedies, are to be released by United, it was announced here.

MARION KOHN, president of the Consolidate Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles this week from San Francisco for a few days' visit. David Chatkin, treasurer of the corporation, who has been here several days purchasing new releases, has left for New York. Before going east he closed a contract with the California theatre for the showing of the Hall Room Boys' comedies in that house. J. H. Goldberg is now Los Angeles manager of the Consolidate Film exchange.

"HER GAME," the third Florence Reed production for United Pictures, will be released by the corporation the latter part of September.

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by Allen Holubar, had its second showing in Los Angeles at the Superba theatre, following a two weeks' run at the California.

THE INTERNATIONAL SPECIAL of General Pershing in "The Weapon of Destiny" was a feature on the California theatre program for two weeks this month and according to announcement by David Bershon, branch manager of the Universal exchange, 47 bookings in Arizona and California territory resulted as a sequence to the California run.

"HOME," one of the last pictures made by Lois Weber for Universal, starring Mildred Harris, has been booked at the Garrick theatre in Los Angeles during the week of October 19

Short News of San Diego

R. E. HICKS, proprietor and manager of the Cabrillo, broke the records locally for newspaper publicity for a picture when he used twelve columns of the Sunday Union, exploiting "The Right to Happiness." Prof. Louis R. Swain has been engaged by Manager Hicks to preside at the Cabrillo's big organ. He has recently been with the Dearborn theater in Chicago.

NAZIMOZA in "The Brat" has been a big drawing-card at the Plaza from the opening of the week's engagement. A large amount of display advertiising was used in advance and during the week.

THE HIPPODROME'S motion picture number on its vaudeville program for the week was Virginia Pearson in "The Bishop's Emeralds."

DEMOLITION of the old Bancroft building at Fifth and G streets is nearly completed. On the location is to be built a new motion picture house, to seat about a thousand.

MABEL NORMAND in "When Doctors Disagree" proved a success at the Broadway for the week, while at the Superba the attraction was Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure."

THE ILLUSION theatre was opened again for a four days' showing of "Are You Fit to Marry?" Before each showing of the film a lecture was given by Dr. H. J. Brooks. Three days the picture was shown before women only, and one day the men had the house.

With West Coast Exhibitors

BEGINNING the latter part of September, the policy of making a change of subjects twice a week instead of one, as is now the case, will be inaugurated at the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Manager Mallaby having decided that his patrons will welcome the added attraction.

E. L. FRANKEL of the Oasis theatre at Ajo, J. D. Johnson, Santa Barbara, J. Pouris of Bakersfield and M. E. Fletcher of the Liberty theatre, Blythe, were among out-of-town exhibitors to visit Los Angeles in making fall bookings.

JOHN CARNAKIS of the C. and S. theatre, Bakersfield, was a visitor along film row, the week of September 8.

"PAID IN ADVANCE," which was used for the opening of the People's theatre under the management of Jensen and Von Herberg, proved a big success, it is said.

Prominent Theatre Interests Are Merged at Portland

INSIDE facts concerning the deal which has united the Jensen and Von Herberg motion picture interests with the Majestic Amusement Company and the Peoples Amusement Company corporations of Portland, Ore., have been made public since its final consummation last week.

The merger contained several deals within the deal. J. J. Parker, former sole owner of the Majestic Amusement Company, sold to Jensen and Von Herberg 50 per cent of the Majestic theatre stock. Mr. Parker will still remain president of the Majestic Amusement Company while other officers elected were H. V. Parker, vice-president; C. S. Jensen, secretary, and J. G. Von Herberg, assistant secretary.

Two-thirds of the Peoples Amusement Company corporation stock changed hands, the principal sellers being D. Solis Cohen and Max Hirsch. Each share brought $5 it is understood. Of the 19,556 shares sold, out of the total amount of capital stock of 27,829 shares it was divided as follows:

J. J. Parker received 9268 shares, H. V. Parker received five shares and Dan J. Malarky the same, making a total of 50 per cent of the stock purchased by the new interests.

C. S. Jensen and J. C. Von Herberg each received 4636 shares while John F. Logan purchased six shares.

Officers of the Peoples Amusement Company are now C. S. Jensen, president; J. G. Von Herberg, vice-president; J. J. Parker, secretary, and H. V. Parker, John F. Logan and Dan J. Malarky, directors. Managing directors of the two theatres are to be Mr. Jensen and Mr. Parker. Mr. Von Herberg will be booking agent, making his headquarters in Seattle.

Grauman of Coast Invades New York

Is Dined But Not Wined and Naturally Has His Photograph "Took." This Marks His First Trip Here in Twelve Years

THERE have been two quite large sized events about one sanctum-sanctorum during the past few days. J. C. Jessen, our West Coast representative, and we think about the livest wire on the staff, present company excepted, and Syd. Grauman, one writes mighty well and the other is written about considerable, have become more than names.

These two gentlemen have journeyed across some three thousand miles of this old U. S. A., from Los Angeles to be exact, and we've gotten acquainted with them both. One is just as approachable and likeable as the other too.

J. C. has gone back to the land of sunshine and motion pictures and Eastern tourists and obsequies concerning one of the staff would be out of place anyway but Mr. Grauman is still one of us and will be for some time.

No later than one day last week we dined at a luncheon given in his honor by the Famous Players Lasky Company, with John Flinn, General Director of Publicity and Advertising, acting as toastmaster and a lot of celebrities so far as motion pictures go, present. We met Mr. Grauman, talked with him a few minutes and immediately made up our minds that we liked him immensely.

Syd. Grauman for all that he is one of the best showmen in the country and often times we regret to admit that artistry and finance don't mix in the make up of those who control the destiny of big box offices, looks like an artist and is an artist.

When you meet him you immediately forget that out in Los Angeles there is a million dollar theatre (we've seen it) which bears his name and find yourself talking to him in a man to man fashion,

Introducing Mr. Syd. Grauman, one of America's foremost showmen and managing director of "Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre," Los Angeles, California

Getting acquainted with Syd. Grauman. Mr. Grauman trying to hide behind the pitcher of ice water (nothing else served). Eugene, son of Adolph Zukor sits beside him. The solemn looking gentleman standing between Mr. Zukor and the lady with the big hat, Luella Parsons, is John Flinn who controls the destinies of Famous Players-Lasky publicity. Others of the crowd are famous while some are just newspaper men pleased that you have found a new friend. There is nothing "up stage" about Syd. Grauman. He meets you more than half way and acts as if he liked it. He is still a boy in his enthusiasms and it doesn't have to be a big thing to interest him.

Mr. Grauman talks well but he is more than modest in what he says. Knowing New York, although it has been twelve years since he has visited it for which New York is sorry, we wouldn't have blamed Mr. Grauman for coming into our midst full of stories of what he is doing at the "Million Dollar Cinema Palace" of Los Angeles, and bent on letting hide bound Broadway know that there was some other city in the world besides Manhattan and a place West of the Hudson River where they grow real exhibitors. Yet Syd. Grauman is about the last person that Syd. Grauman, himself wants to talk about. True he did make a speech at the banquet we mentioned and got away with it very gracefully but he didn't "spread eagle" at all, which most of us given a like opportunity would have done. He talked along in an easy fashion, told about some of the ideals he has for his theatre, handed Famous Players Lasky and likewise the assembled scribes and others a few bouquets and then sat down and listened to what others had to say.

Now we imagine that banquets are not new things in the life of Mr. Grauman and that he might have considered an affair like that which took place at the Claridge Hotel, in a private dining room with plates laid for twenty-five or so, a tiresome bit of formality that had to be undergone unless he wanted to disappoint the friends who had planned the function, yet so far as we could observe if Mr. Grauman didn't enjoy the event, from soup to nuts, and we'll say that there is nothing the matter with his appetite, then he is a mighty good actor and should sign up with F. P. Lasky for long term contract in pictures.

If you don't believe what we say take a look at "the smile which won't come off" on Mr. Grauman's face when we had our picture "took."

Speaking seriously, for resourcefulness and originality, Syd. Grauman has jumped up to the A-1 class where only two or three exhibitors dwell.

We are indebted to J. C. for these facts regarding what "Grauman's" is doing in the way of "Presentation de Luxe."

It was skillful showmanship that enabled this theatre which always has its manager's hand at the helm, even if he be in New York which broke all records for the week beginning Monday, September 8th, when Grauman's played Bryant Washburn in "Love Insurance" and Ben Turpin and Charlie Conklin in "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," while Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American," and "The Miracle Man" were playing at opposition houses. Now, this week, commencing Monday, the 15th, with Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense," Mr. Grauman is offering three added attractions of a highly diversified nature that are meeting with wonderful success. The first of these is a musical oddity, four 'cellists and a harpist playing "The Rosary" and "Babillage" in a manner to excite the greatest applause. These musicians were all taken from Grauman's Symphony Orchestra, the conductor, Arthur Kay, carrying the melodic strain as first 'cellist. The Giuliana Operatic Quartette sing the famous quartette from "Rigoletto" and a number from "Carmen" that score tremendously with the public. These singers are far above the ordinary, and well up to the standard exacted by Grauman's fastidious patronage. Then C. Sharpe-Minor, master organist at Grauman's, recently returned from a tour of the United States and Canada, renders an extreme novelty with a series of musical impressions entitled "What I Heard On My Vacation." Atmospheric slides heighten the impression and blend perfectly with the spirit and tempo of Mr. Minor's most original musical conception. Early in the week splendid business is reported, and it could not be otherwise, when the originality of Syd. Grauman is taken into consideration.

Your Idea and Ours

THERE have been plenty of displays on "Daddy Long Legs" equal to this one and framed along the same lines, producers' materials entering largely into its composition, but when you stop to consider that the Novelty is located at Anthony, Kansas, a town of two thousand population, this ad which was three columns wide and a full page in depth is most unusual.

In quality we call this up to the usual city standard and in size much larger than most towns of fifty times the size of Anthony are buying. You will note that the Novelty placed the feature for three days, and we are informed did a tremendous business for the whole engagement, which is in itself a proof that big advertising pays. Of course this was an unusually good small town bet, and it is probable that the average program feature would not hold up a half week, but nevertheless it gives food for thought to small town showmen who are still playing them one day some times to a loss. There's a reason and the reason is lack of exploitation.

A man is also known by the company he doesn't keep.

THE Eckel of Syracuse used up a lot of space getting this "look through the window" effect, but the result of its efforts is enough out of the ordinary so that we should say that this can be labeled good stuff.

However, there is one thing which to our mind doesn't come up to the mark, and that is the cut in the center. No action is depicted and consequently it should be better "likeness" of the stars of the production. As we see it here neither of the players would be recognized. If we had been going to devote so much effort to framing an ad, as necessarily had to be done to secure the effect here, we would have used a good still, instead of what we should judge is a producers' cut. The display was three columns wide and seven inches deep, and the best example of advertising we found in the paper from which this was clipped. Syracuse isn't far behind Albany in the matter of indifferent theater advertising, which is saying quite a lot.

A broad gage manager in a narrow gage town is like a narrow gage train on a broad gage track. The best it can do is to bump along on the ties.

WE have ever been believers in making the picturization of a popular novel the big bet when you are advertising a picture filmed from such a source. Therefore we have only words of praise for this display of the Colonial's, Toledo, Ohio, for Mr. Horwitz, the Colonial manager, has emphasized this angle in his exploitation and gone to considerable pains to frame his ad so the book itself will come in for the headlines.

In carrying this idea out he has produced an ad which, besides being unusual in appearance, sells "A Little Brother of the Rich" mighty well. We like the selling talk in this especially. It is a dignified statement of the merits of the picture and could not be improved by a word. If all advertising was as good as this our department would go out of business, as no one would need assistance in framing ads.

A teacher of scenario writing advises his pupils to "keep plugging." It's a good bit of advice for any line of work.

THERE is nothing wrong with this ad at all. The ad is first class, all type work in small space, two columns by nine inches. Rather unusual and nifty in fact, therefore we pass comment on the ad itself to go rather out of the sphere of this department to say that in our opinion the Plaza (San Diego) must have pinched its advertising appropriation if this is the best that "The Miracle Man" and "The Brat" get in the way of newspaper exploitation.

In the "Miracle Man" the Plaza has a picture which surpasses anything of its kind ever made. It is the talk of not only fandom, but filmdom. Half of the hardboiled gang in this office have seen it twice and apparently the Plaza is going to let it ride, when it should be shouting its head off about the production and buying extra space in every newspaper which has a subscriber. There is also another reason why this picture should be given big advertising space aside from its merits as a production, and that is that "The Miracle Man" isn't going to mean much to the fans as a name It has no popular star and the average theater goer maybe never heard of the play. Consequently you can't go too strong on your exploitation. We would advertise this picture to the skies. We would offer to bet our shirt that every one who sees it would pronounce it the greatest dramatic offering they have ever seen. We'd get 'em into the theater the first days of the engagement on this if we had to use a shot gun. If this isn't done a lot of people are going to miss it, because it takes word of mouth quite a while to build up its own advertising and by the time this is done the film will be gone and then the theater will have to book it over again.

As for "The Brat," we would do practically the same kind of advertising on this feature. Here are the two big bets of the present releases. They should be money makers of the first order, and every dollar spent in exploitation on them is going to come back many fold. If you are going to play these features play them up big and use descriptive cuts. Available for your use from the producers of each picture are some unusually good ones. Take this tip from us and cash in.

They even teach piano playing by the movie route. Some of the pianists in the smaller theatres ought to book the film.

WE have often wondered why more exhibitors did not tie up with firms selling talking machines on Farrar subjects, and therefore are rather pleased to run across this display of the Palace Theater, Hartford, Conn., where a full page was utilized by the Clinton Company and the theater on Farrar records, talking machines and "The World and Its Women." This isn't artistic or unusual, but it is good straightforward advertising where the parties advertising get the full benefit of a big display and divide the expense.

As for the Palace's portion of the page, we believe that it might have been improved by a better catch line and more carefully prepared selling talk. Billing Farrar's name above the title of the production is correct and this angle should have been followed out in the selling talk rather than to go in for some rather extravagant sentences relative to the production. However, this is to be commended for what we selected it for, an example of an effective tie-up and as such no doubt brought results.

Until we have a mothers' strike the world will keep right on moving.—Topics of the Day.

THESE cuts furnished by the producers for "The White Heather" were unusual and rather artistic, and have been the basis of a lot of good advertising on this picture. This is therefore just another sample of what has been reproduced several times in the past month or so on this picture, good advertising, because the cuts used were good, and not because the theater had conceived anything unusual.

However, as this is what producers make cuts for, and why exhibitors buy them, we see no reason why we should withhold praise when the ad itself is to be considered. Therefore we call this worth while advertising, except that perhaps a little more space could have been devoted to other numbers on the bill with less to the features of the next engagement which, however, is all a matter of judgment.

The Grand is located at San Antonio, Texas, and this display was a full quarter page in the Sunday edition of the paper.

Football ought to be popular this fall. It is the only thing left with a kick in it.—Topics of the Day.

LAWHEAD chose to go it alone in this, giving his anniversary week the best end of the argument with the bill, "His Majesty the American" coming in for second place in his display, something we should have hesitated about, as we figure that on this latest Fairbanks picture, it is going to be good policy to "spread yourself." We don't mean to say that we would have let an anniversary slide by without trying to make something out of it, for we do think that a week of this sort which presents an excuse for some extra exploitation is good stuff. Therefore if both anniversary week and the feature are entitled to extra efforts, the thought occurs to us that perhaps the Lincoln should have selected a bill which, while presenting good entertainment, isn't so much of a drawing card in itself, and let it ride over on the strength of the anniversary week noise and save "His Majesty, the American," for a later week, when something would be needed to give business an extra kick upward.

As for the ad itself, this five column twelve-inch display is high class. The design is artistic, sticks out on the page, and the reading matter for both the anniversary week and feature is very well worded. The cut used of Fairbanks is excellent too, the only thing secured from the producers used in the display.

If we are to forge our swords into plowshares why not whittle our bung starters into clothes pins?

WE will bet our new fall hat that the Tudor man who framed this ad didn't have a thing from the producers with which to work, and just went ahead with what material he could find about a print shop, and evolved this pretty fair display on "Raffles." The cut used is suggestive of one put out by a ready made clothing house, therefore it can not be called particularly appropriate or descriptive, but it does serve to dress the appearance of the display. The reference to hurricanes is of course local in its application and therefore is a good catch line to be used in New Orleans where the Tudor is located.

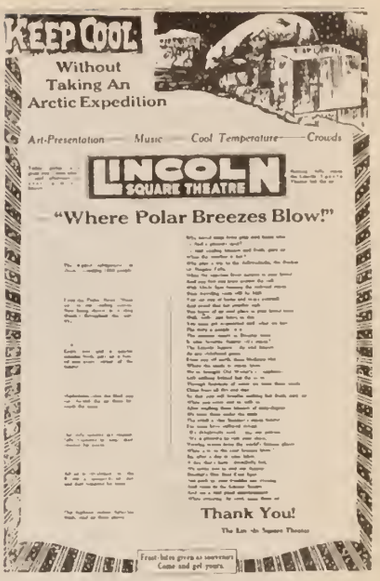
The Tudor man has in our opinion made one slip in display. He has chosen to give a rather detailed synopsis of the story of the feature, whereas since this is a detective mystery story, he might better have worked along the "teaser" lines and kept the plot in the dark. Of course "Raffles" is a widely read novel, and a lot of the Tudor's patrons will know the story anyway, but we think that those who do not know it should not be informed.

The selling talk is also rather long and when set in eight point, as it is, will hardly come in for general reading.

The Tudor might better have devoted its reading matter to exploiting Jack Barrymore, telling about his histrionic career, calling attention to his present stage engagement in "The Jest," one of the biggest plays of the times, and then given the novel a general history once over, stating who the author is, etc. We doubt if you can read this selling talk when reduced to our columns, but it is not of sufficient importance to justify copying.

Aside from what we have mentioned, we should say that this was a very good showing, considering the fact that no aids were forthcoming from the exchange. The display was three columns wide and seven inches deep, and was the best ad on a very good page of movie stuff in the New Orleans Times Pickayune.



It would seem that with the aid exhibitors are evidently getting from this paper that they could afford to come through with some better displays than we have mentioned. The portion of the movie section belonging to the paper is excellent, while the ads for the most part are commonplace.

In laying rails it is the height of wisdom to consider the possibility of expansion.

WE are a little late in getting to this one of the Lincoln Square Theaatre, Decatur, Ill., now that it will soon be time to yell "keep warm" instead of "keep cool," but the ad is so unusual and so nicely framed that we are using it in spite of the fact that it is hardly timely.

If it were not for the fact that Rex O. Lawhead, the Lincoln Square manager, advertised "True Heart Susie" in ample space right alongside of this "boost" ad, we might say that he was using a lot of space without saying a thing about the current feature. However, a good ad relating the merits of the whole Lincoln bill did appear in the same issue, therefore we can only find praise for this one extolling the virtues of the theatre itself.

We think this display is worth slipping, and laying away for the first hot weather of next year. We might add that the display appeared in an issue of the Decatur Herald, which was largely devoted to vacation time stories with some summer resort advertising mixed in. Therefore Mr. Lawhead had a definite idea in mind when he chose to subscribe for this short half page of advertising. He had nothing in particular against summer resorts, when a Decatur family left town for a couple of weeks, his chance to entertain them with good pictures was lost for the time being. There is no need to comment on this display. It speaks for itself, a mighty fine ad which will bring the virtues of the Lincoln to the mind of theatre goers and make them forget that the weather is warm.

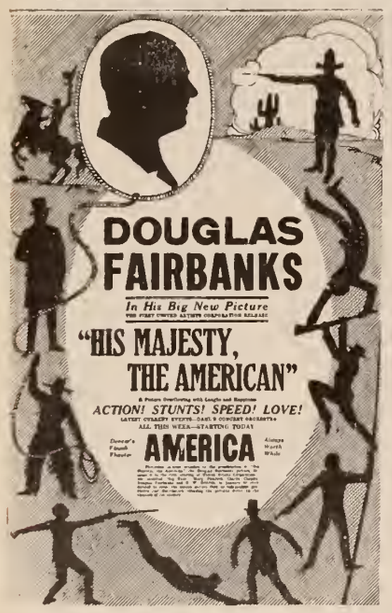
Don't be so pleased that you have a location where the whole town passes your theatre that you neglect to see how many of them you can induce to stop in.

WE are partial to displays which give some idea of the sort of picture which is to be shown and for that reason and also to exhibit about as good a specimen of producers' cuts as we have seen, we have selected this display of Keith's for reproduction.

It is true that the theatre hasn't done anything but place the theatre name line and the playing dates over the cut, but where you wish to feature only one thing in your displays and which is really justifiable in "The



What Live Wires Are Doing

Miracle Man," this display can only be commended.

All the principal characters of the pictures are shown just as they appear in the film and as they are most unusual types this ad. is sure to excite interest. The display very properly gives the director good billing as his name already means something to patrons and will mean more after people have seen this picture. Mention of the play and the author of the story is also worth while. As for selling talk this is excellent. It catches the spirit of the production and prepares an audience for the characterization which they are to see. In size this was a full quarter page.

Do you run your house on the policy of "Get 'em in" or "please 'em after they are in?"

HERE is another one on "His Majesty the American," where the theatre, the American, has used one of the producer's cuts without any change, and added only the name of the theatre and the matter at the bottom under the theatre line.

The silouhette of "Doug" is unmistakable, but personally we like a similar ad to this given space last week, where a front view of the star in photographic style was used in this place on the sheet. It conveys more interest and also brightens up the whole display. It is perhaps noteworthy to say that after all this howl we have heard about having producers' names and trademarks on producers' material, that when a firm leaves them off, that immediately exhibitors take the pains to mention who is sponsor for the picture. There is, however, a difference in the way the America has made mention of the producing corporation.

They exploit United Artists as subsidiary to the productions which are to some cut under the title of "Big Four" and in this we believe they are absolutely correct. This big four proposition means considerable to the public, in as much as it is only a nick name for pictures from the four favorites who star in pictures.

If United Artists was handling other stars or productions, some of which could not be expected to come up to the standard of what is expected from "Big Four," then the whole aspect would be changed. The America's mention of the producer here, or rather the releasing corporation is only to distinguish this picture from others placed on the market through other releasing mediums.

This display was five columns in width and a trifle short of a full page in depth.

THE Colonial of Toledo does some mighty good advertising, and that is the reason we use so much of this theatre's displays for reproduction in this department. Here is one of Mr. Horwitz's creations that is framed in about as nice style as anyone can ask for. Two good cuts, both descriptive and meaning something, have been utilized and in the oval white space both the star's name and the title of the production stand out, with mention made of Sheldon Lewis, a rather popular supporting player, given mention in about the right size lines.

Again Mr. Horwitz's selling talk is good stuff, both from a literary standpoint and in the thought conveyed.

You can't beat this for advertising on a picture of this kind where you have a melodrama which needs everything a bit extravagant and bold. If you can do work of this kind in your town, cut this one out as something to go by when you are framing your next ad for a melodramatic bill. In size this was four columns wide and ten inches in depth.

There is one capital letter which it is policy to use sparingly. It is the ninth of the Alphabet.

YOU can bet that this ad of the Liberty's, Portland, Oregon, sold "Paid in Advance," for we seldom see anything which to our minds is any better for a picture of this kind.

The use of the big cut in the center gives Miss Phillips the right kind of a send off and also suggests to the reader that this is melodrama. Then all the reading matter is in tune to the cut and the kind of picture "Paid in Advance" really is.

We might go over each little portion of this layout beginning with the nice use of heavy rule, but think you would rather have more ads and less comment in this section, therefore we pass this along for your inspection, with only a general word of commendation. This was a full page. Sorry that when reduced to our columns it will lose much of its smart appearance.

"Bunk" in your advertising will not increase your reputation for veracity.

THE Strand of Hartford, Conn., who is responsible for this display on "Wolves of the Night," have framed a very good display where no special effects were attempted and unless one is to figure that a melodramatic bill should be advertised by boldness, this passes as better than average. With a producers' cut of just ordinary grade the Strand has made its display look very well by selecting type that fits in well with the half tone used, and then let plenty of white space make the display conspicuous on the page.

For small space, this was two columns by six inches; we seldom see anything better in type and cut work. We commend the amount of space the Strand has given the other numbers on the bill and the name cut used. This should be placed well up in the batting averages.

WHILE the Sennett Bathing Girls were at the Broadway, there wasn't much chance to judge the newspaper exploitation, for most of the advertising done was along other lines, therefore this display of the Lyric's, Minneapolis, is interesting and incidentally, mighty good work.

The display was three columns by ten inches and if the cut so attractively placed on the end of the black rule doesn't get attention we don't know when an ad is well framed. The little catch line, "Peaches from the Beaches," is good regardless of who originated it and the one to the right in bold makes the engagement announcement sure to be understood. The reading matter within the black rule box isn't anything but good, straight stuff but it tells the story and makes a nice contrast with the white space reserved.

We would call this an ideal ad and one worth saving by every exhibitor whether or not he is going to play the "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," inasmuch as these effects may be obtained in any good printing plant and the cut balanced on the black rule can be utilized for other feminine figures.

Good printing always seems to mark the displays from Minneapolis and this is no exception.

Love may be blind but unfortunately it is neither deaf nor dumb.

HERE is the layout which the New Orleans Times-Picayune devoted to amusements in its issue of September 7th, along with many columns of reading matter referring to the current bills at the New Orleans theatres and other interesting show stuff. We reproduce the cut as an example of what we consider good cooperation between theatrical interests and the newspaper, with both parties finding mutual benefits. If your editor looks askance when you try to shove a cut in for free space show him this layout and tell him to get on the bandwagon, and be a progressive, not a reactionary.

Burned timber pays no profits—keep your forest productive.

THIS is the way they string out the advertising out in Springfield, Ill., nearly all of the displays for the picture houses being one column wide, with everything set in about two styles of type. In view of the fact that all the houses affect this style it is plain to be seen that the newspaper from which this display on "The Fire Flingers" was taken is holding to a hard and fast rule as to style. Just why they should adopt such a style is something we can't see unless they figure it is easier to set, for the page from which this was taken certainly looks very bad as some of the ads were twice as long as this one, which is seven inches. This paper does, however, give considerable free space and maybe figures that in so doing they have placed the exhibitors under such obligation that they don't dare kick for better work for fear of having their free space taken away from them. However, if we were running a theatre and any printer attempted to hold us down to any hard and fast rules as seems to be in vogue in Springfield there would be some kicking done if we had to begin on the office boy and go clean up to the board of directors. The Vaudette is a progressive house and we feel sure would be paying more attention to its advertising if a little encouragement was received.

Blessed is the man who has a job for he shall inherit a pay envelope.

HERE is a display of the Liberty's, St. Paul, which will show you how to use a "head" cut and incidentally here is a beauty of Pauline Frederick. There is a distinctiveness about the displays of the New Liberty that is carried out in this three column eight inch ad, although all the results have been accomplished with the ordinary materials. In arrangement this is unique, especially in the use of the rule and the nice type used. In fact we call it a very good display where all the angles that should be covered in advertising, including some good selling talk, have been well taken care of.

This ad is another one which is worth borrowing.

As for selling talk, we do not think anyone is going to beat that selected here. We aren't quite sure how much of this is producers cut, if any, but some one is entitled to a lot of credit for this sells the feature in great shape.

In size the display is five columns wide by a full page in depth. They aren't afraid of spending a little money for advertising in Seattle.

Every man should make good before he makes love.

THE Princess uses up quite a lot of space with a cut in this display, which doesn't do much except make the ad attractive, but it does do this latter deed and also allows the billing of the star and the title, a rather long one, to be used in much of the same space, so we should say that this display is very good.

There is a nice cut of the star, getting to be one of the rather few real "she" bets, and certainly a proper billing for star, theater and the feature with a good paragraph of selling talk in the right vein, that of emphasizing the fact that this is a picturization of one of Peter B. Kyne's stories.

The Princess has adopted the policy of listing its whole program at the bottom of its ads, a practise which we most assuredly approve. In fact if we were doing it we would go a bit farther and give the time each number on the bill would be presented. There is a growing tendency among theatre goers to avoid "seeing the show backwards" and we believe that people should be encouraged in this idea of getting in so they won't catch the middle of some thing, and have to spend most of their evening figuring out what the whole show is about.

This display on "The Valley of the Giants" was four columns by fifteen inches.

When a man tries to kill time, time usually turns the tables.

HERE is a page from the Baltimore American, which was a good idea and a form of advertising, that of using stills from the production, which is growing in favor but because the producers' cut is meaningless and prints badly much of the effectiveness striven for is lost.

If the Parkway had used another producers' cut which has been commended in this section in place of the one selected here, and tied their stills around it, we think this display would have been a model. As it is, only commendable comment is justifiable from the fact that it is a big display with "pictures" which will attract attention.

If you use our suggestion of using the producers' cut reproduced from a display by Keith's, Hartford, Conn., with the tie-up originated here see that we get a sample of your work. We want to see just how the ad would look.

Some men think they are original when in reality they are aboriginal.

JENSEN AND VON HERBERG didn't stint themselves on advertising when they opened the People's at Butte, Mont., for this was a full page.

We aren't sure but that just as good results except for the fact that the white space makes this stand out and there is always extra value in a display which covers a full page, might have been accomplished in less inches than has been used, but the People's wanted to make a "flash" and also do some announcing and therefore their efforts can be labeled A-1.

The selling talk at the top over the cut of Miss Phillips surely is wild stuff but this picture is melodrama and those who like 'em strong ought to be interested in what is promised them in "Paid in Advance."

The announcement concerning policy is very well worded and all in all we would commend this as good big space stuff.

The press agent usually puts the con in the story of his star's contract.

Lobby decorations at Kings theatre, St. Louis, during the run of "Hiding in Holland"

Bills Comedy Above Feature with Good Results

OCCASIONALLY a small feature is of sufficient size as an attraction to overshadow even a good feature on the bill and justifies giving the best of exploitation to it rather than to the larger film.

Here is a photograph illustrating a case of the sort we have mentioned.

Kings Theatre, St. Louis, gave "Hiding in Holland," a one-reel comedy featuring the former Crown Prince of Germany all the best of the advertising on a bill which Irene Castle headed in "The Firing Line."

In the Kings lobby display equal space was given the comedy feature and on the bill boards a form of advertising the Kings uses quite extensively the smaller length film was headlined.

Manager Sydney is a good showman and he recognized that curiosity was going to make people want to see the "Clown Quince" as a film actor. That his judgment was good is evidenced by the fact that Kings enjoyed unusually good business during the four days run on the bill mentioned.

The Kings, while not one of the largest houses in St. Louis, gives its lobby displays considerable attention.

A hand painted sign advertising the complete film bill is always used above the lobby doors. On the inside of the lobby attractive boards are used with a plentiful supply of photographs of scenes in the picture scattered about where people may look at them conveniently.

Sayre Says He Didn't Do It and We Don't Know Who Did

BY accident we have discovered a way to find out whether exhibitors read "Your Idea and Ours." Here is the stunt. All we have to do is to select some sample of bad advertising and then credit it to the wrong house. This is evidently what we did on page 1976 of our issue of Sept. 6th when we "panned" a display on Chaplin's "Sunny side" and wished the authorship off on the Liberty theatre of Seattle.

Here is the way Mr. J. M. Sayre advertising manager for the Greater Theatres Company which operates the Coliseum, Liberty and Mission theatres in Seattle comes back at us, most emphatically denying that the specimen reproduced ever originated in his neck of the woods.

Just who did conceive the ad which failed to please us, we are at this late date unable to determine as the original has gone to the waste basket way and therefore the advertising sins of it's creator will have to go untold.

However, we must humbly apologize to Mr. Sayre for publicly stating that he was the daddy of the ad in question. As a matter of fact we sort of alibied the display for Mr. Sayre by saying that he must have been in a hurry for as a rule the displays that emanate from the Jensen and Von Herberg houses are models. Here is what Mr. Sayre had to say when he discovered that we were accusing him unjustly:

Editor "Your Idea and Ours,"
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City
Dear Editor:

On page 1976 of your issue of September 6, column three, you reproduce an ad crediting it to The Liberty Theatre, Seattle, stating it is about the worst you have ever seen from this city.

In self-defense please let me say that this is not an advertisement of The Liberty Theatre, Seattle; nor was it printed anywhere in this city.

I am inclosing you The Liberty ad for The Liberty Theatre, Seattle, on this attraction.

Very respectfully,
J. M. SAYER,
Advertising Manager.

How to Put Over an Anniversary Week

Charles H. Ryan, Manager Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Tells How to Make the Theatre Birthday a Success

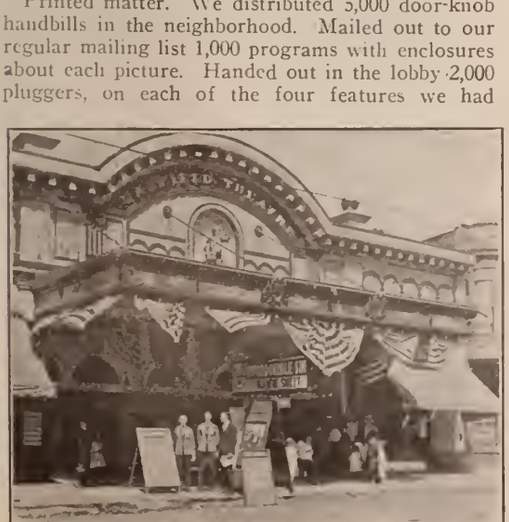
ONE of the surefire methods of boosting business is an "Anniversary Week." It isn't new in the theatrical world but nevertheless when properly exploited nothing is conducive to better results than taking the yearly anniversary of your theatre's opening and setting it apart for special effort. What to do and when to do it, however, counts a good deal in the results and that our readers may have a practical illustration on which to base their efforts we have induced Charles H. Ryan, managing director of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, one of the Charles J. Schaefer enterprises, to describe his method of procedure for the Anniversary Week at the Garfield, which has just closed with most gratifying results.

Here is Mr. Ryan's own story:

ADVANCE TEASER CAMPAIGN

As our anniversary was the tenth we started about thirty days before the date by running a slide with nothing else on it except the numeral "10." On our program four weeks before the anniversary date we put a large numeral "10" on the front cover and under it we had printed, "IT WILL BE WORTH WHILE WAITING FOR." When people ask about it just smile and look wise and tell them it is a secret they must wait for.

The next week I made a slide with a large "10" on it and under it I printed "TEN IS NOT THE DATE OF ANY FEATURE WE WILL RUN." No one guessed what the "10" was for.



The next week the third week I had a cut of a birthday cake with 10 candles on it put on a slide and underneath this picture of the cake was the announcement "Sept. 1st to 7th Anniversary Week. We are 10 years old. Will you come to our party?" and signed "Garfield Theatre" on the bottom of the slide. On the front cover of the program for the second week was the same numeral "10" and underneath was "Will You Come to Our Party?"

BOOKINGS FOR ANNIVERSARY WEEK

Features for Anniversary week. We booked 4 pictures that we considered big from the standpoint of box office value and pleased patronage. The four pictures were "The Unpardonable Sin" "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" "Flame of the Yukon" and Wm. Hart in "Wagon Tracks." Short subjects were 2 reel Mack Sennett Comedy "Trying to Get Along," 2 reel Fox comedy "Merry Jailbirds" Lloyd comedy, Pathe News, Pathe Review and Christie comedy.

ADVERTISING USED

Printed matter. We distributed 5,000 door-knob handbills in the neighborhood. Mailed out to our regular mailing list 1,000 programs with enclosures about each picture. Handed out in the lobby 2,000 pluggers, on each of the four features we had booked and 2,000 circulars with the song chorus of "Woman Thou Gavest Me." Imprinted 200 copies of the song "Woman Thou Gavest Me" and sold every one of them before the date we showed the picture. 3,500 8 page programs with colored cover distributed in lobby of theatre. Programs were made by Cahill Igoe Co. Herewith you will find some of the copy used in the Anniversary Program.

The Garfield celebrating its tenth birthday

Four weeks previous to Anniversary week I imprinted with our addressograph machine each envelope on the outside where the flap is. I changed the reading matter each week as the attached envelopes show.

Each program was numbered as shown on the lower left hand corner of the larger cut accompanying this story. As we had 3,500 programs printed the numbers ran from one to thirty-five hundred consecutively.

The lucky numbers for the first night was any number ending with 99, such as 199, 299, 399 etc. Seven people turned in lucky programs out of 35 numbers we placed on our list.

The second day the lucky numbers were: any number ending with two zeros such as 100, 200, 300 etc. Eight people turned in lucky numbers on the second day but about 300 people looked at the list of numbers to see if they held the lucky number. It stirred up a great deal of interest and did not cost us much only the admission on a few seats each evening.

For each picture booked I had a film trailer run seven days in advance of the film. This is expensive but on a big week like an anniversary week it pays for itself.

DECORATIONS

Decorations for Anniversary week. I went to a neighboring florist and told him of what benefit an advertising slide would be to him on our screen. For the ad he consented to decorate my lobby and stage opening with flowers and plants. If you have a lobby hanging ferns in a wicker basket give a nice pleasant effect. In the corners of the lobby place a couple of pots of "Wandering Jew" plants in wicker baskets. We had gladiolas and asters trimmed with golden-rod and milkweed in three standing baskets placed at the entrance door and a vase of nice roses in the box-office. Ferns in baskets were placed on each side of the stage in the footlights. Each usher and doorman, cashier, musicians and manager wore a button hole flower each day during the week. With the flower was worn a badge printed on white ribbon on which was printed "Garfield Theatre—10th Anniversary—Sept. 1st to 7th, 1919."

"Look Back"

There's a lot of you will smile as you stop, for a minute and look back to the time when you had to stand on tip toe to reach the cashier's window in those days, and we've watched, year by year, as your heads kept going higher and higher on the barred window

We remember some of you fellows when you used to come in knickerbockers. We remember when you asked for "two, please," instead of "one," and ushered that first girl of yours into the theatre. Yes, sir!—the "Garfield" has helped along many a romance, and now we see some of our friends who used to come here in knickerbockers, and who brought their best girls here, coming back with that same best girl and another chum who reminds us of the kids we used to know.

WATCH YOUR NUMBER!

Carry this program with you to the theatre each day you visit us during Anniversary Week. If your number is on the list posted at the theatre you will be admitted free that day. About 40 numbers will appear on our list and will be changed daily.

DON'T THROW YOUR PROGRAM AWAY!

Cahill-Igoe Company, 215 Printers, Chicago

Lobby display used by Manager Walter Armstrong for his engagement of "The Spitfire of Seville"

How to Put Over an Anniversary Week

We have a canopy over our sidewalk and under this we hung flags draped as shown in the picture. These flags we rented for the seven days for $10. In the evening we had a wood holder out in front of the theater in which we placed red fuse sticks which give a bright red light for 10 minutes. We burned about 10 of these every evening in front of the theatre and it was noticeable two blocks away.

SOUVENIRS

During the week we gave out photo cards of 8 popular stars. The only ad on same was "Compliments of Garfield Theater Tenth Anniversary Week, Sept., 1919.". These cards cost $2.50 per thousand from a Detroit firm.

Also passed out gate tickets to White City and Riverview Park, two amusement parks in Chicago. A novelty stunt I used which came from the Motion Picture News' aids was the "Simplicity Coat Hanger." An 8 penny wire nail inside of the envelope.

These were passed out to the boys and young men and they in turn passed them to their friends. It gets a good laugh out of those who are not "on" to it.

VOCALISTS ADDED TO PROGRAM

As an added feature we had a vocalist each night render two popular songs. The vocalists were changed with each picture. We had during the week two men and two women vocalists. As the first three pictures ran two days each we kept each vocalist two days. With the "Woman Thou Gavest Me" the singer starts singing the song two minutes before the end of the film and it works in nicely.

SIGNS USED

Put up a sign somewhere either in your electric attraction board or have it painted and on it put as we did "10th Anniversary Week: Welcome!" All of your cards announcing features have the phrase "10th Anniversary Week" on them. Have signs done in red and blue on white cards to match flag colors. For the card for the lucky numbers, have your sign man take a black one sheet card and give it two coats of oil Jap-black which makes it like a blackboard and you can use chalk on it and rub it off with water without affecting the card sign.

BUSINESS

We held them out every night during our 10th Anniversary Week and had the largest total weekly receipts of any week in the 10 years we have been in existence. In closing I say spend some extra money on advertising films, decorations and souvenirs and you will be amply repaid if your campaign is put over right. This is the first time we have ever had an anniversary week with special exploitation.

CHAS. H. RYAN,
Managing Director.

"Sahara" Sets New High Water Mark at Detroit

"SAHARA" still continues to make money for exhibitors. The latest story of what the C. Gardner Sullivan story is doing comes from Detroit where the feature played the Majestic theatre owned by Charles H. Miles.

A line of picture lovers stretching from Woodward to Willis avenues at noon told how well advertising of the Miles-Eland variety pays. Waiting for the doors to open had its compensation for the eager throng in the form of a beautiful lobby display devised by Manager Eland—a night scene on the desert on which Mr. Eland's mechanical staff had labored from Saturday midnight until sun-up. In the centre of the unique display was a life-size portrait of Louise Glaum showing her petting a peacock to represent one of the gorgeous scenes in the Palace of the Dawn, the creation of C. Gardner Sullivan.

Mr. Miles, in his long career as a picture showman, never held a production in higher regard than he did "Sahara," and his enthusiasm was shared by the Majestic musical director, who arranged a special score for the presentation, and, of course, by Mr. Eland, who, in addition to the attractive lobby display, devised a prelude that ranked with the best that have been made on the big Hodkinson release. It consisted of a big desert setting with a camel on either side and in the centre stood four men attired in Arab costume. They were four Detroit singers, whom manager Eland had advertised as "The Sahara Four." With the conclusion of their song number, the lights were dimmed and the curtain lowered. In a

Eliminates Vaudeville for Straight Picture Policy and Is Successful

THE Strand theatre of Portland, Oregon, managed by Walter Armstrong, recently decided to eliminate vaudeville from it's programs entirely and stake it's all on a straight picture policy with extra exploitation employed on all features which merit it.

We presume that it was not without some fear and trepidation that Manager Armstrong awaited the results which were to follow his latest policy for making a combination house over into a picture theatre is not the easiest job in the world and many a good showman has failed when he attempted it. That Mr. Armstrong has been successful is due largely to the methods he has employed in advertising his programs.

Striking lobbies are the prineipal means employed to attract the public into his theatre. For example, in the "hot wave" when other theatres were advertising themselves as "the coolest house in town" he simply placed a papier mache Billiken about four feet high, sitting on an enormous block of real ice, in the middle of his lobby—and caught the faney of the crowds as no other theatre had caught it.

In the run of "The Spitfire of Seville," introducing to his patrons for the first time Hedda Nova, the Russian star, he built his lobby into a street in Seville, even giving the box office window the semi-moorish areh. The houses on either side of the painted street were in soft yellow with red tiling and red and yellow awnings, while painted and real "greenery" blended in the foreground and the fringes of the set.

Just inside the entrance beyond the box office, behind the fountain, was a three sheet cut-out of Hedda Nova in character, very striking and life-like and suggesting vaguely that the Sevillian scene extended on into the interior of the theatre.

The column 12-inch advertisements carried a striking black and white cut made from the Randall sketches that appeared on "The Spitfire of Seville" in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

It is this kind of exploitation that puts over a picture in an unusual style. Practieally every exhibitor today ean count on a certain amount of trade and patronage no matter what picture he shows or to what degree he exploits it. But it is the successful exhibitor who goes to the added trouble to please his audiences. And the exhibitor who uses such methods as have been described is the one who builds up a permanent patronage of the highest class.

Don't think for a minute this exploitation doesn't pay. It does and the proof of it is shown in the fact that today more than ever before exhibitors are resorting to novel lobby displays to draw the patronage and getting the compliments of the public.

Novel Stunts Used in Exploitation of "Oh Boy"

THE De Luxe theatre a residential house of Detroit, managed by A. J. Moeller who knows the theatrical business and believes in exploitation for his attractions has done some clever stunts in the latter connection in eonnection of his engagement of "Oh Boy."

Along with other novel stunts, Moeller engaged a Jazz orchestra, and, from eleven in the morning until eleven at night, the players performed in the foyer of the De Luxe, while patrons of the theatre were permitted to dance to their hearts content. He also had a few cabaret numbers and during dances, these entertainers went through their paces.

In one reel of "Oh Boy," there is several hundred feet showing a brilliant cabaret in full swing. Just prior to this scene, Manager Moeller raised the screen, and on the stage there appeared six cabaret girls who gave a real performance. Then the sereen was lowered again and the picture continued.

Keith Firm Believer in Window Displays

Uses Seven Displays for "13th Chair" and Becomes Staunch Supporter of This Form of Publicity

THERE has always been a wide divergence of opinion regarding the merits of the window display as an advertising medium for motion pictures, but there is no longer any doubt of its merits in the mind of Manager Keith of the Broadway theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

In fact, Mr. Keith is the staunchest supporter of the window display, and all because of the success he recently enjoyed with "The Thirteenth Chair," a special feature starring Yvonne Delva, the noted French actress.

Mr. Keith arranged seven window displays, using a cover slip with "The Thirteenth Chair" stamped all over it, and 22 x 28 scene photographs. These displays were placed in the most prominent merchandise houses in the downtown section, and created quite a lot of interest among the theatre-going public. In some of the displays, Mr. Keith purposely forgot to mention the dates on which the picture was to be played, and the telephone bell was kept continuously tingling for the entire time before his first announcement appeared in the newspapers.

It was just this little mysterious note about the advertising that aroused more than the ordinary curiosity in the picture, and no doubt had something to do with the tremendous business which "The Thirteenth Chair" enjoyed at the Broadway.

Acknowledging Receipt of Many Articles on "Admission Prices"

THE way exhibitors all over the country have complied with our request for articles on the subject of "Admission Prices," is extremely gratifying and proof that the subject is of nation-wide interest.

These stories will be published at the rate of two or three each week, selected in the order of their receipt at this office.

To those who have not as yet written their story, we again urge immediate action. Don't put it off. Do it today while the thought is fresh in your mind.

Ten thousand good showmen are waiting to read your experiences and opinions not from idle curiosity but because they want the benefit of your advice and your knowledge of the picture game.

The question which we have summed up in our term "Admission Prices" is one that needs great thought and careful consideration. You are going to be aided by what others have written and are going to write, so practise reciprocity. No town is too small and no city is too large to contribute to this series to their mutual benefit.

Podunk may not be directly interested in the exhibiting problems of Chicago, but every theatre has its story which will be of vital importance to many other theatre managers.

The trend of the articles we have received is to the effect that a majority feel themselves "between the devil and the deep sea." They admit they must raise admissions, but fear the consequences. Summed up, everybody seems to be "on the fence" waiting for something to happen which will force them to a conclusion as to what their future policy shall be. Help solve this problem.

From the articles which are to appear a great deal of good is forthcoming; of that we are sure.

"Co-ordinate Your Publicity," Says Richards

"CO-ORDINATE our publicity." Sounds like highbrow stuff, doesn't it? And well over the heads of the ordinary chap who has to write about so many displays each week, and hopes to have some better than others, but who doesn't always have any definite aim except to furnish an ad which will attract business for his theatre.

Yet this is what E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, attempts with every display which is framed for use in the Saenger theatres. In other words, Mr. Richards attempts to have something in his advertising which he can follow up in the display for his next bill, and so successful has he been that the record of the Strand's efforts, the New Orleans house, has echoed through the whole Saenger circuit covering five states.

As an illustration of what we mean we will illustrate with an example of what was done in Volume 29, the Saenger circuit house organ. The bill being played the week of this issue was "The Firing Line," with a cover page devoted to Miss Castle. However, an insert was added covering two pages which exploited "The Unpardonable Sin," and especially the director, Marshall Neilan, for the reason that the Strand was going to play "The Unpardonable Sin" the following week, and expected to use other of Neilan's productions, and believed that this director is going to turn out pictures of such caliber by educating his patrons to know his name and make them understand that a picture produced for him would be worthy of their attention, was a business policy which will build prestige for the theatre as well as for Mr. Neilan.

Mr. Richards is looking ahead of the immediate dollar, which is what the man does who plays only pictures which will get him the most money, and who spends neither money or efforts advertising anything but the show he is playing. Mr. Richards always has a very definite purpose in view when he steps outside of the orthodox billing for a show, but as in the case of Neilan he often seems to be advertising something quite foreign to his particular subject, only to have the purpose appear to those who care to study his methods at a later date.

Sometimes the Strand will be featuring a star in its advertising, as was the case in the "Firing Line" cover page on the Saengerette. We can see a definite purpose in this. Probably Mr. Richards thinks Miss Castle is a comer and will add to the friends she has in New Orleans; therefore he is willing to help make her popular. If he thought that she intended retiring from the stage or that her popularity was on the wane he would probably have picked something else from this picture on which to specialize. Quite frequently, rather more often than most managers, Mr. Richards gives the story the big end of his publicity arguments, as was the case with "Sahara." He figured that the clientele who knew Miss Glaum wasn't large enough to warrant his trying to boost her into popularity. However, if he had thought that she was to make other big pictures that he would want to use, he would have gone to some pains to let people know that she was the star of this production.

This is "co-ordination of publicity." Reduced to slang, it is using your head and looking ahead.

Another Ancient Ford Dug Out of Scrap Heap to Exploit "Better Times"

WHAT is probably some of the most expensive picture exploitation was successfully worked out by William Saal, press representative for the Hulsey theatres in connection with the recent showing of "Better Times" at the Old Mill theatre, Dallas.

"Better Times" is a picture that readily lends itself to exploitation and Mr. Saal capitalized on it. "Better Times" was made the advertising slogan for Dallas merchants. Good, effective publicity was also secured. As the Dallas Daily Times Herald expresses it:

"Breaking into jail isn't as easy as it seems. William Saal, enterprising booking agent and publicity shark for the Hulsey theatre interests, tried his best to 'get pinched' Wednesday afternoon and failed completely.

"Saal had dug up an antiquated 'Tin Six' at an East Dallas junk yard which was an exact replica of the flivver driven by Zasu Pitts in the picture, 'Better Times,' now showing at the Old Mill theatre. He figured that if he could make it run far enough to violate a few traffic ordinances he would be arrested and thereby gain much notoriety. Such is the nature of a press agent.

"Just how he stumbled upon the aged 'Lizzie' could not be learned. It was a 1902 model Ford—a wierd-looking bird—a side winder with more jumps and hops in it than a grasshopper. The wheels and body were still intact, though they showed the ravages of the ages and the engine retained a shadow of its former uncertain cough. 'Twist her tail,' shouted Saal, taking a determined grip on the wheel at the start of the famous tour.

"Jean Finley, publicity man for the Hulsey shows, gave a side crank an accommodating twist —and lo! the relic of bygone days came back to life with a near-splitting crash that threatened to scatter its occupants. With a dangerous lurch the critter banged into gear and went clattering, jerking and snorting down Elm street toward the business section.

"But the law did not step in. Perhaps the cops were afraid to interfere. At every intersection the ancient mariners were given the right of way as pedestrians and horses scurried for the safety of side streets. Even the street cars stopped while passengers gazed on in terror.

"By the time Alkard street was reached Saal abandoned the idea of being pinched and proceeded to the Times-Herald in hopes that the commotion would frighten the editors into giving him the desired publicity. He got it.

"'I tried to get arrested,' he explained afterward. 'But I couldn't break any automobile laws with this relic.

"You see, the cops didn't realize that it was an autombile.'"

The phrase "Better Times" manifested itself in co-operative advertising covering a full-page in the Times-Herald. "Better Times" was linked up with better lines of merchandise. "Better Times," better cigars, better service, better foot comfort and similar phrases were used to advertise the local merchants. The Ford dealers illustrated their ad with a picture of the famous "Better Times" car.

The page was captioned "Better Times" and the Old Mill advertisement carrying a particularly strong selling appeal covered the upper left hand third of the page.

SAHARA SETS HIGH WATER MARK

flash the curtain was raised and there stood a vision of loveliness, one of Detroit's prize beauties, pleading with the Arabs to forget Allah and stop annoying her with their everlasting prayers, a representation of one of "Sahara's" telling scenes.

The management continued the entire week its elaborate advertising campaign, which in conjunction with the word-of-mouth advertising by Sunday's patrons crowded the Majestic at every performance. Mr. Miles has arranged for an early second-run presentation of "Sahara" in Detroit at his Regent Theatre.

An Example of Trianon, New Orleans, Exploitation

THE Trianon of New Orleans is a theatre which believes in extensive exploitation of its programs and never leaves a stone unturned in the way of doing the unusual to get the public's attention. One of the recent examples of this progressive theatre's advertising campaigns is to be found in this story and its accompanying cuts.

The Trianon management recognized the opportunities for something out of the ordinary which Mabel Normand's latest picture "Upstairs" presented, and during the two weeks run of the film at this theatre hardly pulled many stunts which is being credited with being a big factor in the success the feature enjoyed at this house.

The first step taken to let New Orleans know about "Upstairs" was to construct an attractive lobby display, using a painting showing various figures, including festive Mabel mounting a stairway.

Window displays in various New Orleans stores, one of which is shown in the smaller illustration, a tie-up with a music house, was also an effective means of attracting attention to the current bill at the Trianon. In addition to the lobby display and tie-ups with local merchants which we have described, the management circused the picture for all it was worth, using a motor truck with figures from the play painted on its side. A jazz band occupied the truck on its daily tours of the city, following a route that included both the business and residential sections. The city was covered with one-sheets more thoroughly than it has been for any attraction in a long while. With the jazz band truck, the liberal distribution of posters, the music store window display, dominated by a picture of Mabel Normand, attractive lobby decorations, and generous advertising copy in the New Orleans newspapers, the management figured that the Mabel Normand production was brought to the attention of every picture-goer in the community.

In this story is illustrated what good publicity, as it is viewed today, really is. Had the Trianon let "Upstairs" ride, the film would probably have done just a fair business. By properly exploiting it the Trianon made the whole two weeks' engagement one of the film events of the season. And best of all, this whole campaign was of the kind which does not run into money very fast. It of course cost something, but nothing compared to the results obtained.

California Theatre Is Again to the Front

Los Angeles First Run House Adds Stage Setting and Musical Number to Bill for Fairbanks Engagement

IN presenting for the first time in Southern California the first Douglas Fairbanks release under the new United Artists booking "His Majesty, the American," Fred Miller and Harry Leonhardt, managing director, established at the California Theatre in Los Angeles for the two weeks beginning September 8th, a striking example of showmanship in presenting a big attraction in a dignified manner, and at the same time in a way which would insure the largest attendance. Advance advertising prepared theatre goers for the picture's arrival, while lobby displays designed by the theatre art staff, attracted attention previous to the new production, as well as to the then current picture of William S. Hart, "Wagon Tracks." The result was that the first night brought unusual large strings of patrons awaiting for admission. The initial Fairbanks production brought with it the first appearance at the California of Carli Densmore Elinor, one of the most noted of motion picture musicians as leader of the orchestra. Elinor returned to Los Angeles after an absence of seventeen months as a military interpreter, and more recently following a special engagement as general music director-composer and arranger for David Wark Griffith in staging "Broken Blossoms" in the east. Elinor is declared to be the first man to have synchronized music with motion pictures, and is responsible for the scores which accompanied "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," "Ramona," "The Spoilers" and several other big productions. Director Elinor's chief musical offering to the program was "The Evolution of Dixie," as played by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Atmosphere for the music was provided by a special stage drop which represented exteriors of an old time Southern mansion.

Special stage setting used for overture on "Wagon Tracks" engagement at the California theatre, Los Angeles

An interior and exterior view of the California theatre during the engagement of "Wagon Tracks"

While Los Angeles is used to elaborate stage settings, both at the California and Grauman's and take even the most artistic creations with a rather matter of fact air, the view of the painting designed to accompany the overture number brought a gasp of surprise and pleasure from every audience.

With the lightings nicely blended to suggest a Southern summer sunset and moonlight, the painting looked so real that one could imagine that the big front door was about to open and a frock coated white haired Southern gentleman of the old school walk out to view his ancestral acres.

This style of Southern architecture is always a subject of interest, and when a painting is prepared with such careful attention to detail as was shown in the canvas exhibited at the California, not only is a fitting atmosphere provided for the music, but also the scene serves to excite a lot of favorable talk which results in increased attendance for the attraction.

A musical number on the bill, a trio under the professional title of "El Trio Espanio," composed of Margaret Carol, Sylvia Harding, violinist and Hulda Hannele, contralto, also came in for a great deal of praise. The number was given in a special stage setting and the performers were costumed in the pretty fashion of long ago, which synchronized nicely with the overture and scenic setting described.

The whole bill in fact marks an epoch in the presentation of pictures which seems continually to advance in artistry, with Los Angeles well up among the leaders in the art mentioned.

Press Agenting the Youngest Picture Exhibitor in U. S. A.

BEING youngest exhibitor or the oldest exhibitor or the homliest exhibitor gets you out of the average class and therefore lets one break into the news page on most any old publication.

George Vorhees

This is what one George Vorhees of Flora, Ind., claims to be or rather what one of his friends in a film exchange claims for him and therefore it is fitting that he should send the information along to the Motion Picture News.

Despite Mr. Vorhees we might with some propriety say "Master" Vorhoees' tender age he is a live wire and is making good with a theatre that his successor didn't think well enough of to keep off the selling market.

George first started as ticket-taker. Then the owner of the house decided to sell and George induced him to accept his note for the theatre. This was done and the new owner immediately started to work and work hard he did for in the short time that he has had the house he says he has increased the business about 75 per cent.

Asked how he brought about this big increase in business George modestly replied:

"By advertising like Hades and working the same way. You see the man before me didn't do much advertising. But now there is never a week that passes but what I have big ads in the two weekly newspapers of my town."

George is going back to high school, however, to complete his term. He's going to manage the theatre at the same time, however. After he completes high school he's going to Indiana University and then to Yale he says and the old hometown "show" is going to pay his expenses.

George's folks want him to study law. But George isn't sure that he wants to be a lawyer. He likes the theatrical business and believes there's a big future in it. Also he admits that he has a "slight hankering" to follow in the footsteps of his uncle, Ainsworth Arnold, the actor who has played in several productions with Mrs. Fiske. Yes, George would like to "go on the stage."

If You Are Wondering If "The Miracle Man" Will Draw, Look at This

EXHIBITORS who have booked "The Miracle Man" and who may have some doubts as to what favor the feature will find with patrons of the picture theatres outside of the bigger cities where the play has a considerable prestige, will be interested in this photographic testimonial from the Plaza theatre, San Diego, a city of the middle class.

Here they are waiting to get in rather late at night at that, for the camera man was not hunted up and brought to the scene of the S. R. O. sign until it became evident that box office records were in a fair way to be broken by this latest production of George Loane Tuckers.

It may be possible that San Diego is a little better informed concerning pictures than many cities of its size, for it is in the motion picture belt, and not so far from where the picture mentioned was filmed and therefore may have known that something out of the ordinary was in store for them.

However, this will cheer many a manager who has oftentimes booked a good picture, but which had no popular star to steer the crowd to the box office. It would look as if "The Miracle Man" was going to draw even where little is known of the original production's merit and where the fame of the first showings have not as yet traveled.

Anyway, this is a honest to goodness, bonafide pay to get an audience patiently waiting for a chance to squeeze inside the theatre taken by flashlight on the evening of Sept. 1.

Just how long a run the feature had at the Plaza we do not know, but judging from this photograph it was neccessarily extended, for once people begin to see this feature there is no question but that the word of mouth advertising will tend to boost business way above normal proportions.

"Red Lantern" Still Going Strong

PICTURED evidence that Nazimova's "Red Lantern" is still being used with success by exhibitors in middle class cities again comes to our attention with the receipt of a photograph of a window display of exceptional attraction which the Mahawie Theatre of Great Barrington, Mass., recently secured for its engagement on the feature.

Using one of the oil paintings of the star which have been the basis of so many great displays on "The Red Lantern," the Mahawie was able to make the display window of a drug store secured for the advertising scheme, a thing of real artistic beauty.

The business done by the theatre was most satisfactory and much of the result is attributed to the window display. As an attractor, this sort of work cannot be beaten.

The First of Our New Series On Admissions

Charles H. Williams, Manager of the Strand Theatre, Providence, and C. Edgar Momand of the Garden, Flint, Mich., Give Opinions on This Subject

WILLIAMS RAISED HIS PRICES AND HIS PATRONS DIDN'T OBJECT

IN reference to your letter of the 12th, the writer does not just know how to outline this for the layman exhibitor to grasp the circumstances that have brought this about, and if the following does not meet entirely with your approval, take the meat from it and use it yourself as you feel fit.

You will perhaps recall that something like a year ago, the writer was in your office, and during the conversation stated that after investigating both conditions and methods of exchange managers and producers and what they were up against, the writer could see that the time was fast approaching for a closer get-together method between the three factions and that the percentage idea had to come about, that a higher standard of production and exhibition were to be maintained. The writer used the first-class road shows as an illustration, stating that if the producers were to give us what they thought were better pictures, and they were to be the judge entirely, why should the exhibitors assume all the responsibility with a fixed rental at often times a burden? This has been the foundation of our change in methods and prices this year. After looking over the entire field we still found the Paramount-Artcraft, from the point of our clientele, were in a class by themselves and after a series of negotiations we contracted for the pick of their entire output, including their twelve so-called "super-specials," and as we cannot possibly run over one hundred four out of their one hundred and thirty releases, this assures our patrons practically 100 per cent. entertainment every week, and with this foundation assured we prepared a series of advertising called "The Story of the Silver-sheet," comparing former methods of producers in the booking and handling of entertainments, leading up to the new arrangements. This series of advertising we believe your department is familiar with, for it was commented on in last week's issue of the NEWS, Page 2212, and as you will note we made no apology for the raising of our prices, believing this sort of method to be wrong. We have always believed in stating facts, giving the prices same as any retailer does, knowing that if the goods are worth the price asked the public will buy. To date, the new policy is more successful than any policy we have had here before. We seat around twenty-two hundred, and on the first of September our admission prices were jumped from twenty-eight cents to fifty cents, eliminating all ten cent seats both afternoon and evening, and our schedule of admission prices beginning September first, are as follows: Matinee: Balcony 15 and 20 cents, Orchestra 25 cents; Evening: Balcony 15 and 30 cents, Orchestra 50 cents.

Charles H. Williams, manager of the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., and one of the shrewdest exhibitors we know

In replying to your question, Will these prices remain? We have never as yet lowered any prices and believe this is the worst thing that can be done, in fact the writer believes if a thing is not a success at a given price it would be better to raise again. To lower would be to admit that we were wrong.

Trusting this will answer somewhat your request, we are, Very truly yours,

C. H. WILLIAMS,
Manager, Strand Theatre.

PUBLIC WITH THE MAN WHO IS RIGHT, SAYS MOMAND

OUR PRICES have been, for the past sixteen months, practically stationary at 10 and 20 cents, tax included. We decided three weeks ago that it would be impossible to continue longer at those admission prices in view of the increased cost of everything in the exhibition end of the game.

For the past several months I have charged thirty cents for lower floor, twenty cents for balcony (children ten cents anywhere) on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of each week, at which time I endeavored to have an extra fine attraction. "Virtuous Wives," "Good Gracious Annabelle," "String Beans," "Heart of the Wilds," "Mary Regan," "Silver King," "Roaring Road," "Extravagance," "Squaw Man," "Paid in Full," "Sheriff's Son," "True Heart Susie," "We Can't Have Everything," "Tarzan," "Love Burglar," "Greased Lightning," "Johnny Get Your Gun," "Grain of Dust," and numerous others. "Sporting Life" and "Mickey" were specials for which I charged thirty cents lower floor and twenty cents balcony.

Now, anyone who might be acquainted with me or my policy of operating a theatre, is well aware that I am not in favor of now, nor was I ever in favor of continually jumping the prices up and down. A substantial and stable admission price, governed according to locality, theatre, service and the general tone and quality of the house should govern the admission prices anywhere.

Seventeen months ago I came to Flint to take charge of this house for Col. W. S. Butterfield. The theaters in town were all charging different prices on different days—11 and 17, 17 and 22, 17 and 28. The public never knew what to expect, and any old picture was called a special and the public was "gyped" on the slightest provocation, or without any provocation at all—just "gyped." One of the first things I did was to figure out the operating expense of the house and how many people I would have to play to each day to break even. All above that would be clear profit. I had so many seats, an off location, and would have to give an honest-to-goodness entertainment. So I began immediately to sell them the show for 20 cents, tax included, and they could take any seat that was vacant. Kids were a dime (and are yet). The public liked the policy; no more bothering with pennies, no odd change. They knew they could come to the Garden any time for twenty cents (could throw down a half dollar and get two tickets and a dime back, anytime) and in less than two weeks the other houses were doing the same, except that it took one house a long time to get away from selling his show for less money—11 to 17 cents.

But I had put it up to my patrons in what I considered the proper method of presenting something that I knew would be infinitely more satisfactory to them.

Now we are forced to raise the price and have set the ten, twenty and thirty cent standard. Any person who does not wish to pay thirty cents for a lower floor ticket can save ten cents by purchasing a balcony ticket for twenty cents.

And I have put it up to them in the following language on my screen and in the paper:

Dear Patrons: We have raised prices just enough to get us by——. We have met, in every instance the increased demands of organized labor and every other demand made upon us.—— Our screen attractions cost us an even greater amount than formerly (which was indeed excessive). We know that the general public places confidence in our foresight (that we can be depended on to attend in advance to their every entertainment requisite) and in our business sagacity and integrity (we have never been known to "kite" prices on any picture in the hope of making a "clean-up," but have consistently regulated and held admission prices at the lowest possible figure). We STRIVE TO GIVE YOU YOUR MONEY'S WORTH. We offer each program at the Garden on its Merit.

So that is my policy and it is going to be my policy. I am going to give them my attractions at ten, twenty and thirty cents, and not jump it up to forty or fifty cents at the slightest provocation. I'll let the other fellow do that. Years ago I learned that the idea that Barnum was right was all wrong in the exhibition end of the picture game. The producers and exchanges can do that, and get by for a time. But the men who tried to build a business on that principle never had succeeded nor will they ever succeed.

In conclusion wish to state that it is absolutely necessary to increase admission prices at this time. It is unavoidable, and the exhibitor who has always played square with his patrons is the one who will find it easier to convince them that it is necessary and unavoidable and more quickly established the advanced prices in the good will of the house patronage.

Down town theatres will find it easier to raise prices than will the neighborhood places, though the reputation of the neighborhood house itself will have a great deal to do with it. If it is one of those joints that run itself and is badly run now, and doing only a percentage of the amount of business it really should be doing, a raise of admission will be impossible—former patrons will keep right on going.

I have added two pieces to my orchestra (seven now, five formerly) and one single reel, giving an hour and forty-five minute show against an hour and a half previously. That is the sum total of my additions.

Any good showman who is on the fence and undecided as to what course is best to pursue had best sit down and analyze his house, his service, his employees and everything pertaining to the business, then adopt a scale of admissions that is most likely to please the patronage of the house—and stick to it, first letting them know that it is coming to them, but that it is perfectly proper and necessary. The public always was with a man whom they thought was right. So the exhibitor who has always been right with the public need have no fear of asking a just price for his entertainment. John Grouch and Mrs. Tightwad will kick, and Old Man Crab will tell you he don't like it, but don't let them worry you, for they do not constitute the public; just go ahead, saw wood, give them the best you have and the public will be with you, never fear.

I trust the above, while longer than necessary, perhaps, is in line with what you wanted of me; also that it may be of help to someone in a quandary as to what to do.

Yours very truly,

C. EDGAR MOMAND,
Manager, Garden Theatre, Flint, Michigan.

How New York Stages the Show

A LONG time ago as film history is measured when Pearl White was with Universal a comedy came through called "East Lynn in Bugville," with Miss White doing most of the burlesqueing. All these years it has stuck in the writer's mind as a comedy masterpiece equalled by, say, only "Tillie's Punctured Romance." As may be imagined this picture was a travesty on a "legit" performance of that historic as well as histronic vehicle of the stage, "East Lynn."

Therefore it is fitting that when a running mate for this slap-stick masterpiece comes along, that some one, somewhere, some place, should make mention of it.

At the Rialto and Strand this week, a comedy is being shown entitled "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin." In the cast is Ben Turpin, Charlie Conklin, Marie Provost and Ford Sterling. In the film is more laughs than we have seen since the two above mentioned pictures, "Tillie" and "East Lynn," were going the rounds.

When you make a metropolitan audience hold its sides for fear of bursting buttons or twenty-two-dollar corsets and get loud "guffaws" from a man who has been looking wearily most of the time at pictures for eleven years, you've got some comedy, and that is what this latest picture from the Mack Bennett studio did Sunday night about going to bed time for most honest people.

We aren't singling this picture out because we want to boost any one's program or picture, but because we want to inform every exhibitor that here is a production with which you can make as much money as you did on "Shoulder Arms" if you will give it the same amount of billing and exploitation, and not let it slide by with passing notice. This is the best gloom dispeller in many a year because it has the "stuff" in it. Hook on to it as soon as you can and then give it all the boost that you can think of. The picture will make good on the most extravagant claims.

Strand Theatre

MANAGER JACK EATON of the Strand is out doing himself these days in the way of stage settings for the Strand overture. Another beauty follows the artistic offering of last week at this theatre, in a highly colored canvas showing a tropical outdoors scene.

Beginning at the proscenium opening a lagoon is shown in prospective meeting the horizon in dimly showing hills. The banks are low on each side of the strip of water. Trees and shrubbery in the vivid colors of tropical growth adorn the banks. As the curtains part for the opening strains of the overture the scene depicts the time as late afternoon with a gradual change to deep blue and green suggesting the coming of the tropical twilight. As the overture progresses the lights are varied until they again return to the pink, yellow and scarlet blends of the opening. During the night scene, light clouds float across the canvas sky.

The overture selected by conductor Carl Edouarde for this week's opening number is "Madame Butterfly" that romantic and tuneful composition of Puccini's which so many famous artists have sung to their own and the opera's reknown. The selections used by the Strand orchestra are without doubt the best that the composition contains and in it's oriental flavor forms a fitting musical opening for the Outing Chester scenic which is screened after it's playing.

This release from the Chester releases is titled "Imposing on Good Nature," being another of the series of Japanese subjects, this one being largely devoted to fishing scenes in Japan and like its recent predecessors combines the scenic with the educational.

The third number on the program is the Strand Topical Review, which opens with the Kinogram strip showing President Wilson at Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., and includes the Executive's review of the Pacific fleet.

Kinograms also furnishes the next piece, an accellerated motion subject showing a ship passing completely through the Panama Canal in about one minute.

Pathe's first contribution to the reel is a horse racing bit from Reno with Kinograms returning with views of the Harvard football team in action and another Kinogram selection showing Indians hunting the buffalo from an aeroplane at Dallas, Texas, the last strip before the Topics of the Day.

Following the topics' number the Prince of Wales again comes in for attention this time being shown at Winnipeg by Kinograms.

Pershing and his veterans in the recent parade at Washington, D. C., are given extra footage, both Kinograms and Pathe furnishing views. The Pathe contribution was extremely novel, the marching columns being caught from an aeroplane. These strips closed the reel.

The first vocal number is "The Bonny Banks of Loch Lomond," one of Lindsay's favorite character ballads, sung by Redferne Hollingshead tenor.

This selection is followed by the feature picture, Anita Stewart's latest contribution to the screen, "Her Kingdom of Dreams," a Marshall Neilan production with a most notable cast including such famous players as Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Jefferson, Tully Marshall, Spottiswood Aiken, Thomas Holding, Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert McKim, Tom Sanstschi, Edwin Stevens and a host of others who have a following and prestige with picture fans. It seems strange to see such corking good actors as Mr. Marshall, Mr. McKim, Miss Williams and Mr. Holding doing "bits." For instance Marshall appears in two or three scenes and dies. Mr. McKim attended somebody's wedding breakfast and then disappeared. Mr. Holding also passed to the great beyond in the first few hundred feet of the film.

For the second vocal selection, number six on the bill, the Strand management has provided a bit of real grand opera, stage setting and all.

"Dite Alla Giovine" from "Traviata" is sung by Alys Michot, soprano, and Carl Ferretti, baritone, now in his third week at this theater. An interior set, a room of the "castle" style has been provided and furnished appropriately. The walls represent the stone of the ancient abiding places of lords and ladies. A large window opens on a view of old country landscape in the rear, while the sides are mainly painted draperies in red, hiding that which purports to lie beyond huge doors. The set is nicely lighted and gives life to the costumes of the period of the architecture and of the opera, in which the singers are attired. The number was greeted by and deserving of enthusiastic applause.

A Mack Sennett comedy, "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," is given special mention at the top of this column.

The organ solo is "Finlandia."

Rivoli Theatre

THE Rivoli theater returns to the weekly change policy after a two weeks' engagement of "The Miracle Man," which by the way has moved to the Broadway theater after enjoying a very successful run at both the Cohan and Rivoli, especially at the latter house.

The Strand theatre, Tampa, Florida, one of the most beautiful houses in the South, and famous for being "spotless white."

The overture selected at the Rivoli is the "Dance of the Hours," one of a number of such ballets, titled Hours of Dawn, Hours of Evening, Hours of Night, etc., which formed a portion of the opera, "La Gioconda," by Ponchielli, which in English means "pretty maiden," and is founded on a gloomy play by Victor Hugo. The ballet music, of which "Dance of the Hours" is a part, occurs in the third act and is one of the prettiest portions of the opera as well as a composition in a lighter vein than some of the more sombre parts.

The Rivoli Pictorial's first number is "Pershing at Washington, D. C.," being views of the parade of veterans in that city and is followed by a Pathe strip on the same subject, with the scenes photographed from an aeroplane.

Pathe has the third section with a bit concerning Reno horse races, which are becoming as famous as Reno divorces, with Gaumont coming in with auto-polo scenes taken at Detroit.

Kinograms' first contribution is the accelerated action subject of a ship passing through the Panama canal.

The "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon follows this week entitled "Mutt and Jeff in Spain," another subject on the order of the "Switzerland" creation. The two comedians go in for the bull fighting game in the land of Chile Con Carni. The subject is amusing and well up to the standard of these cartoon offerings.

International furnishes the current events, which follow "Mutt and Jeff," "A Trip Over Germany" in a Zeppelin, and also contributes again with views of the consecration of a new cathedral at Queenstown, Ireland.

Cardinal Mercier at Baltimore and Wilson at Seattle and Tacoma are shown by Pathe, the latter a long strip. This closes the reel.

The vocal number, "Long, Long Ago," is given with a very pretty stage setting and with the singers, Emuel List, basso profundo, and Gladys Rice, soprano, attired in the attractive clothes of "long, long ago," the girl in the ruffles and furbelows and the man in the Colonials of the days of the spinning wheel.

The set used represents an old colonial room with it's fire place and other typical furnishings.

For the singing Miss Rice is seated at an old flax wheel and is busily making home spun, attired in her attractive costume, while Mr. List stands near dressed in the buff swallow tail of the early days of the Republic. The set and performers are so well lighted that at first glance before the strains of the song are heard, the spectator may well believe that he is looking at a motion picture, instead of painted canvas and two real persons.

The fourth number on the bill is an extra picture, one of the two reel O. Henry productions. Like all of this famous short story writer's works this one, "Shocks of Doom," has a serio-comic twist with much of the humor being derived from the use of the O. Henry dialogue in the original story.

A pretty number has been arranged for fifth place on the program in a dance by two girls and a third sleeping in a bed near the top of a stage setting as if viewed through a window.

The setting used represents an exterior with the corner of a house showing where in a room of the second story a girl lies in her bed. As if to visualize her dreams the two dancers appear and go through some clever steps. One is attired as a boy of a century and a half ago and the other in women's clothes of the same period. The scene is dimly lighted at first, with the figure of the girl reposing in a spot. Gradually the scene is lighted and then is darkened as the girl wakens from her slumbers and after sitting up in her bed lies down again to peacefully slumber.

The feature picture is "Widow by Proxy," a light comedy with Marguerite Clark starred. The story is by Catharine Cushing. Walter Edwards directed. "His Naughty Wife" is the comedy, a Sunshine production.

Rialto Theatre

FOR the first time in some weeks the Rialto theater is presenting its program without something extra in the way of a stagesetting with which to coax the "hard boiled" public into line at the box office. This week there is no stage setting but there is offered about as strong a picture program as can be gotten together for one showing. Magazine, cartoon comedy, feature and comedy stand out as way above the ordinary and even New York is going to be appreciative.

Dr. Reisenfield has selected for his overture selections from the famous classic opera, "Tannhauser" first produced in Dresden in 1845 and since that time one of the standard musical compositions.

The opera which was based on a mediævel legend typifies the struggle between the world, the flesh and the devil on one hand and holy aspiration on the other, ends with a tragedy and therefore must necessarily conform in it's musical tempo to its rather somber theme. Reeds, strings and the harp dominate for the most part of the playing, with the brass in evidence only at the finale, signifying we presume the triumph of holy aspiration. Even the layman would readily guess that the overture is Wagnerian, as it has that unmistakable appeal and peculiar plaintiveness characteristic of the "master's" compositions. The overture is given with a scarlet flood changed to white on the finale.

The Rialto magazine opens with Kinograms' views of the President's visit to Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., and is followed by a strip from Gaumont, showing the recent navy cutters' races at San Francisco.

Gaumont also contributes views of yacht racing at Los Angeles with another Western bit by Pathe showing the Puebla Indians at Santa Fe, N. M., doing their native dances.

A semi-education and scenic strip by Gaumont showing the sugar industry at Hilo, Hawaii, is next with a jump to Boston in locale for a glimpse of "Babe" Ruth, the noted Boston ball player, in action (Gaumont).

The "Hooligan" cartoon follows these strips and this week is entitled "After the Ball" showing "Happy" as a base ball player. This is an especially ingenious conception.

On the return to current events, Gaumont again leads off with the recent Greenpoint, N. Y., fire with Pathe coming in at its finish with some intimate views of Hoover as he looked when landing from his work abroad.

International's first strip concerns the Boston police strike and shows the various prominent people who are identified with the fight.

Kinograms closes the reel with a long strip devoted to the parade of General Pershing and his warriors at Washington.

The vocal at the Rialto is Greek Evans, baritone, and a prime favorite at Broadway picture houses, singing "The Tramp." No special effects are striven for in this number, the singer being attired conventionally sings from the stage and in an amber spot.

The feature picture "Stepping Out," is a comedy drama containing all the elements of good picturization, story, cast, direction and photography.

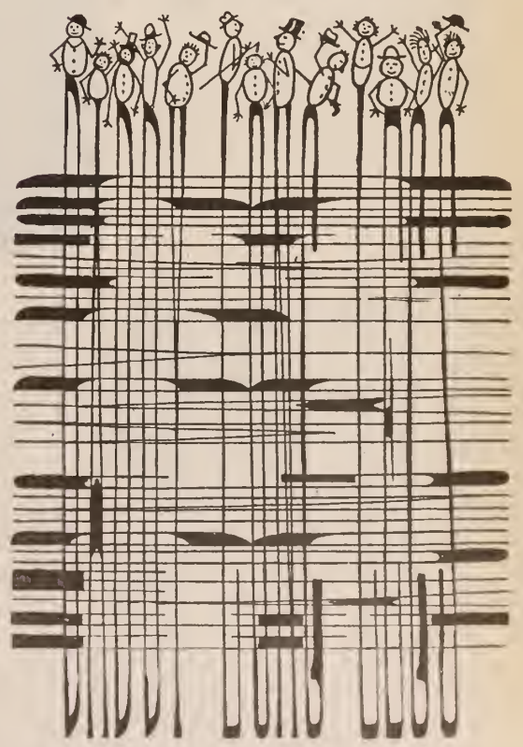
Enid Bennett is starred in a sympathetic and well fitting role and is ably supported. The production is from the Thos. H. Ince studios and the story and continuity is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan perhaps the most famous of American scenarioists. The direction is Fred Niblo's.

For number five the Rialto orchestra renders "Nobody Home," a rousing, cheering number which gives time to wipe away a few tears that may have been welled out of sympathetic eyes during the projection of "Stepping Out."

The comedy is the Paramount-Mack Sennett production, "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," a travesty on the presentation of a "Tom" show in one of the tanks with dire results to the cast and performance that is conducive to much merriment among an audience.

Academy of Music

THE program at the Academy of Music this week runs strongly to the melodramatic but proves an excellent bill for this theatre if we are to judge by the applause which a house jammed to the doors evidenced at the performance we attended. The overture which is selections from "Zampa" is given with the same stage setting as last week, except that the painting has been altered to a night scene with a moon shining on shimmering waves of the lake, which was described last week.



Following the overture the International news weekly is projected, most of the strips of which have been described in the special reels compiled by the three other theatres covered under this heading.

The "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon is "Everybody's Doing It" another "shimmie" subject described last week at the Rialto.

The vocal this week, is two selections, the latter being "Life's a Game of Checkers" sung by Mary Mitchell, who possesses a pleasing soprano voice. The song mentioned is an appropriate offering to the screening of the first feature which is the picture version of that famous racing melodrama "Checkers."

Following the projection of the feature which is an extra length film, a comedy, "Flips and Flaps" was shown for which the Dixie Jazz band which is now in its third week at this theatre, furnished the accompaniment. The program closes with Frank Keenan's latest picture "The False Code" a tense drama typical of the sort Mr. Keenan does.

Selection In Story and Star American Policy

FROM exhibitors in all sections the American Film Company has received expressions of commendation of the policy announced a short time ago by President Samuel S. Hutchinson.

The straightforward announcement, which, boiled down, meant merely that American was to offer big stories, carefully produced with carefully selected and balanced casts, has apparently struck a responsive note, hitting exectly upon what exhibitors want.

"Six Feet Four," the first picture released since the inauguration of the palicy, has met a hearty reception wherever it has been shown.

Mr. Hutchinson said concerning this picture, and the production to follow:

"'Six Feet Four' is the first of many notable offerings we have decided to produce — all of them from the works of celebrated writers — all of them stories which have already met with favor at the hands of the public as stage plays or in fiction form are numbered among the best sellers.

"Exhibitors will note," continued Mr. Hutchinson, "that American is not announcing any star series or any 'program.' In the future each production issued by the American Film Company will be handled as a separate entity, from the moment the story is chosen until the finished product is flashed on the screen in the exhibitor's theatre. We are not setting definite release dates and are not preparing to rush through the manuscripts we have purchased, in order to release them as feature photoplays on a certain definite day. Each story will be made as though that were the only production we ever contemplated making, and one on which our whole reputation was to rest. The best stars, the best directors, the best supporting casts will be chosen for each production.

"The star, the director, the members of the supporting bast are engaged for each picture because of their special aptitude for correctly portraying that particular story on the screen. The story is the thing — the star, the director and the players of the supporting cast are chosen to fit the story—not the story to fit the players we may have under contract.

"If a certain story, because of its elaborate nature, requires ten weeks instead of five to make, then ten weeks will be taken. If it can be done satisfactorily in less time, then less time will be spent in making it. If it may properly be told in five reels, then a five-reel production will be offered. If seven reels are required to properly present it, then the exhibitor will get 7,000 feet of film.

"Not only will the utmost care be taken in choosing the director, the star and the members of the supporting cast for each production we undertake, but the same pains and care will be taken in correctly costuming it, in dressing the sets, in choosing the locations, in photographing it. When the negative reaches our laboratory, only the sort of printing, developing, tinting and toning which makes for the perfect picture will be approved. The editing and subtitling of each subject must be perfect before it is judged ready for release. The cutting of the negative is especially important and will be given particular attention. In short, we aim to forestall all criticism before each picture goes out, rather than offer the exhibitor a picture which may bring unfavorable comments from screen critics after it gets on the screen. We are confident exhibitors will learn to appreciate this — to look forward to booking American Film Company offerings because they know in advance that they are as nearly perfect as it is humanly possible to make them.

S. S. Hutchinson, President American Film Co., Inc.

"In 'Six Feet Four' the exhibitor will find William Russell in one of the strongest roles he has ever played. They will find it an offering that will attract big patronage to the theatres the moment it is announced, for there are hundreds of thousands of jackson Gregory fans who are eager to see the story they have enjoyed in print visualized on the screen, with real flesh and blood people enacting the scenes that thrilled one even in cold type. The duel scene will keep any audience in suspense and send it forth from the theatre delighted at the end. 'Six Feet Four' will soon be shown at Pathe Exchange by American Film Company representatives.

"Though 'Six Feet Four,' in one way, may be considered as a standard by which the new and particularly high quality of future American Film Company productions may be judged, still, in another way, it would not be fair to use this particular play as such a standard, for the subject next to follow is so entirely different — with a new and different star, a different director, different players in support of the star and a story of such a different type that it is impossible to compare them.

"Exhibitors may rest assured, however, that quality will dominate each offering. Each story is handled individually. By this I mean is made as a single unit. It is cut and edited as a single unit. It will be marketed to the exhibitor as a single unit. To merit the continued patronage of the exhibitor and the public, each subject will have to be perfect. Knowing well that such is the case, we know that forthcoming offerings of American Film Company, Inc., are to establish our pictures on the plane they deserve — that they are going into the finest theatres in America — that they are to be approved by the most critical of audiences -- and that the exhibitors showing them are to reap corresponding profits."

History of Advertising Shown in Pictures

The history of advertising is visualizing in the film "Down to the Ages," which was shown at the Convention in New Orleans of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

This picture was produced and presented to the Associated Clubs of the Screen Advertisers' Association, which is the motion picture division of the advertising organization. Harry Levey, managing director of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is president of the Screen Advertising Association. "Down Through the Ages" was produced under President Levey's personal supervision.

When the Convention closed the film started on a tour of the 172 clubs affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs.

Title Given to Earle Williams' Next

"The Black Gate" has been definitely decided upon by Vitagraph as the title of Earle Williams' next feature which has been completed and now awaits an early release. This is Mr. Williams first picture since he appeared in Eugene Walter's stage success, "The Wolf," and will be followed by "The Far East," by H. H. Van Loan, on which he is now at work at the Hollywood studio.

To Vita. Coast Studio

"Al" Herman, for more than ten years technical director at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio, left on Monday for Hollywood, Cal., where he will occupy a similar position at the West Coast studio.

H. N. Brownell directing "Adventure Scenics" in the Pacific Northwest for Robertson-Cole

F. P.-Lasky Eastern Studios Humming

J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has leased the Triangle studio in Yonkers for a period of eight months. This additional studio was made necessary to house the productions of George Fitzmaurice, the first of which is to be "On With the Dance." Work has already been commenced there on this elaborate production of New York life, with Mae Murray and David Powell in featured roles.

The Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are humming with activity. The studio at Fort Lee is occupied by Dorothy Dalton, working on the production of "Black Is White," under the direction of Charles Giblyn, supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

The Estees Studio and Laboratory on 125th street is held in constant readiness to take care of such sets as may be erected on a small floor space.

At the Fifty-sixth street studio Billie Burke, under the direction of Lawrence Windon, is hard at work on her forthcoming production, "Wanted, a Husband."

A plot of ground near Elmhurst, L. I., has been leased for a period of two months. Upon this is being built a complete city for the production of "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore, under the direction of Charles Maigne.

A Vitagraph Offering

Following closely on Vitagraph announcement that it soon would release the "Wreck," with Anita Stewart in the leading role comes the further announcement that "The Combat" was written by Edward J. Montagne and directed by Ralph Ince.

"The Combat" is described as one of those big, melodramatic plays where the action jumps from New York City to the gold fields of the Northwest and back again.

Blackton's Next Story

"Respectable by Proxy" is the working title of the original story by Stanley Olmsted which J. Stuart Blackton, president and director-general of The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., has accepted for his next production.

Month's List of Robertson-Cole

Four Big Subjects Are Included in List Programmed

FOLLOWING upon the preliminary announcement which indicated a carefully considered and progressive policy of expansion, Robertson-Cole in their schedule for October will release a series of pictures designed to attract the attention of discriminating exhibitors.

Robertson-Cole declare they have undertaken to place before exhibitors marketable and unusual wares, putting their reliance in statements of fact that will appeal to the reason rather than to the imagination. In their campaign now in the first steps of progression, results of importance have been secured in their initial offerings that vindicate this policy of conservative statement.

"Robertson-Cole has expanded and continues to do so, with noiseless and increasing momentum, and are in a better position than ever to serve their large clientele. All pictures are now being shown in first run houses and critics and exhibitors have agreed to their artistic worth, while the records point to exceptional returns," states an official of this organization. "The October schedule includes two of the Superior brand of pictures which are promised for this month.

"'Kitty Kelly, M. D.' finds Miss Barriscale's charming personality projected amidst the more primitive and rugged reaches of the western mining camp, where her medical knowledge and her yearning to determine her own future, supplies the motive for a comedy drama of novel twist and viewpoint.

"The story has been especially conceived for Miss Barriscale, written by M. B. Havey, well and favorably known as a brilliant and forceful writer of photo-plays. The continuity and screen version is by Howard Hickman. In 'Kitty Kelly, M. D.,' it is said, that while there are a logical succession of laugh compelling situations around which the principal characters are grouped, the elements of mystery and big drama saturate the story.

"The Hampton Studios have contributed a comedy titled 'The Blue Bandana,' adapted from the story by P. G. Wodehouse, published under the title of the 'The Prince and Betty.' Mr. Wodehouse, of course, ranks among the foremost of the humorist writers of the day. Simultaneously with the release of the picture here it will appear as a musical comedy on the London speaking stage."

Mentioned in the group of players associated with William Desmond are Mary Thurston, William Taylor, George I. Swan, William DeVall, Frank Lanning and Walter Perry.

"Poor Relations" as indicated in the bare outline of the theme has all the heart interest, pathos, comedy touches, and distinctive handling that have characterized King Vidor's plays. The cast will include Florence Vidor, Charles Meredith, Lillian Leighton, ZaSu Pitts, Roscoe Kens and William DuVall.

The return of H. B. Warner to the romance of the Forty-niners, when the lure of gold was the magnet that drew the adventurous element of the nether quarters of the globe to the golden West, is manifest in the production of "The Gray Wolf's Ghost," adapted from Bret Harte's classical and vivid masterpiece, "Maruja."

Publicity Cooperation Fox's Aim

Trip of Sheehan and James to Arrange Thorough Aid

COOPERATION to the utmost between the producer, the exchange and the exhibitor on one hand and the exhibitor and the newspaper on the other, will be brought about by the transcontinental trip which Winifield R. Sheehan, general manager, and Arthur James, supervisor of advertising and publicity of Fox Film Corporation, are now making. The trip to and from the Pacific coast will take in every city in which there is a Fox exchange between New York and San Diego, Cal.

That the exhibitor may realize to the full the value of advertising and that the newspapers may not underestimate the news and circulation value of the motion picture department, it is the intention of Mr. Sheehan and Mr. James to seek, in every large city in the United States a newspaper and advertising expert who fully understands the local conditions and will cooperate to the utmost with all exhibitors in the exploitation of the features produced by Fox Film Corporation.

No theatre will be too small to receive this service. No advertisement will be too large for this expert to handle. He will place in the local papers news and publicity features of interest to the motion picture public of the community in its relation to productions then showing or about to show at the local theatres. Working in close touch with the home office of Fox Film Corporation, the local publicity representative will have at his command at all times the latest information regarding Fox pictures and Fox stars. It will be his duty to present to the local papers such matter as best suits their needs. He will be able to add to the news columns of the press in the city in which he is stationed, as well as in the country immediately adjacent to it, features that have both a distinct news value and a publicity value to the exhibitor.

In the writing and the arrangement of advertising in the press, this trained newspaper man will be at the command of the exhibitor, to whom he will tender his advice, and suggestions as to the proper exploitation of Fox features.

It will not be the ordinary press agent material, it will be prepared with an eye to the particular desires and needs of the editor of the photoplay department in relation to the Fox productions then being shown or scheduled for an early showing in the local theatres.

Every aid that enters into the advertising and exploitation of a feature will be offered to the exhibitor. It is believed that in this manner the true value of the press in its relation to the motion picture theatre and producer will be realized. Fox Film Corporation hopes thus to provide a link which will complete the chain that should bind the motion picture theatre with the newspaper to the benefit of both.

By the time they return to New York, Mr. Sheehan and Mr. James will have completed this most complete program of advertising and publicity. A study of conditions in each city will be made and talks with the managers of Fox exchanges, the exhibitors and managing editors, will conclude preparation for the broadest and most comprehensive system of picture advertising and exploitation ever undertaken.

Moments in "Lombardi, Ltd.," which Screen Classics is distributing through Metro. Bert Lytell has the leading role, a character study which is said to be a revelation

Metro Heads View New Offerings

METRO officials at the home offices in the Longacre Building had their first view on September 20 of the first three of the "fewer and better" special productions made by Screen Classics, Inc., at a private projection room showing. The productions reeled off on the projecting machine were "Lombardi, Ltd.," starring Bert Lytell; "Please Get Married," with Viola Dana in the stellar role and "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison.

Richard A. Rowland, Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., president; W. E. Atkinson, general manager; Joseph W. Engel, treasurer, and a score of other corporation officials attended the inspection. As is invariably the case when new productions are subjected to the official "once over," it was a highly critical audience, keenly alert to detect any imperfection or lack in the finished pictures.

After the three pictures had been shown, however, there was only the most enthusiastic praise for the excellence of the work done by Maxwell Karger, director general in charge of all production at the Metro studios in Hollywood, in translating to the screen three stage comedies which had made audiences on Broadway, throughout the country, and even in England, laugh until their sides ached.

This private viewing of the first three of the Metro "fewer and better" specials de luxe revealed to the Metro officials how happily cast has been each of the stars appearing in them. Bert Lytell, for instance, was found to have interpreted the difficult role of Tito Lombardi, Fifth Avenue man modiste, with a degree of artistry that he has suggested but never displayed as completely on the screen before.

Joseph Kilgour, Vera Lewis, George McDaniel, Thomas Jefferson and John Steppling have the remaining supporting roles and were found to have done splendid work in them under the direction of Jack Conway.

All the sparkle and intriguing humor of James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne's honeymoon comedy, "Please Get Married," another Moroso stage success, is said to be brought out in the screen version of this hit. Viola Dana is appealing and humorous as Muriel Ashley, the bride who never gets a chance to spoon. Antrim Short, Margaret Campbell, Harry Todd, Emmett King, Ralph Bell and Hugh Fay accord her splendid support. The picture was directed by John E. Ince. Finis Fox adapted the play.

The role of "Blanny" Wheeler, the deceived wife, who wreaks revenge on her husband by accumulating an innocent "souse," was found to fit May Allison, star of "Fair and Warmer," like a glove. Miss Allison recently has proved herself to be a comedienne of novel and original method, and her blonde beauty is decidedly effective in her newest vehicle. The supporting cast includes Pell Trenton, Eugene Pallette, Christine Mayo, William Buckley and Effie Conley. June Mathis, who adapted "Lombardi, Ltd." for Bert Lytell's use, collaborated with A. P. Younger in scenariozing Avery Hopwood's hilarious stage farce for May Allison. The production was directed by Henry Otto.

After the private showing the verdict of the Metro officials was that the picture had exceeded their highest expectations.

Interesting Issue of Kinograms Offered

The current release of Kinograms contains eight new subjects which will be of timely interest to the followers of this news-weekly feature.

First of all President Wilson is shown as he reviews the Pacific Fleet in Seattle during his tour.

Then we meet another President, this one being President Pessoa of Brazil, as he is sworn into office at Rio de Janeiro.

"Thru Panama in a Minute" is the third subject. It is a stop motion picture showing in one minute the operation of putting a ship thru the Panama Canal in nine hours.

The Prince of Wales reaches Winnipeg and is given a rousing welcome with cannons. Assiaboine Park is the scene of the many ceremonies which were arranged for the next King of England.

From Winnipeg we are brought to the German border, and here we see how the British border guards examine the hay carts to find smuggled goods and fugitives.

Assistant to Chautard

Albert J. Lena, who has been associated with Emile Chautard almost from the time that well-known director arrived in this country from France, has been promoted to the position of studio manager for Mr. Chautard. For five years prior to his promotion, Mr. Lena was Mr. Chautard's assistant director.

Finest Feature for Fox Denver Houses

At the four new theatres of William Fox in Denver, Colo., the biggest features obtainable will be shown. Besides the productions of Fox Film Corporation these houses will have a list of other attractions that will be thoroughly exploited. William Fox is a showman. He realizes fully the value of publicity and advertising, and his four theatres in Denver are to represent the highest type of motion picture entertainment.

The Rivoli, the Isis, the Strand and the Plaza in Denver are among the finest houses west of the Mississippi. First runs features only are shown at them. The whole 1919-1920 Fox program—including the Star series with William Farnum, Pearl White, Tom Mix and Theda Bara, the twenty-six Victory Pictures, the twenty-six Excel Pictures and the big all-star productions will be shown at these four theatres, as well as the Fox Sunshine Comedies, the Fox News and the popular Mutt & Jeff animated cartoons.

On Advisory Board of United Theatres

James Q. Clemmer of Seattle, Wash., and James Beatty of San Jose, Cal., have been appointed to the Advisory Board of United Picture Theatres, Inc., President J. A. Berst announces this week. Mr. Clemmer has a seven-share franchise for the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, this being the maximum number of membership shares possible under United's constitution. This well-known exhibitor also holds the United's franchise for the Clemmer theatre in Spokane, Wash.

Mr. Beatty operates the Liberty theatre in San Jose for which he holds United franchise.

United reports the addition of forty-two new members during the past ten days.

Heavy Demand on "Last of the Duanes"

From all sections of the country, telephone calls, telegrams and letters are reaching the Fox exchange from exhibitors anxious to book the William Fox deluxe production, "The Last of the Duanes," with William Farnum in the role of Buck Duane.

First Red Cross on Belgium

Big Opportunity Offered for Exploitation Aid from Red Cross Chapters

VICE-PRESIDENT E. W. HAMMONS, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, makes the suggestion that every exhibitor avail himself of the opportunity to secure the co-operation of his local Red Cross chapter in exploiting the new "Red Cross Travel Series." Each of the 3,864 local organizations, including cities and towns in every nook and corner of the United States, has an average membership running into the hundreds, and will be found ready and willing to lend every possible assistance that will help to make the "Red Cross Travelogues" a successful attraction for the exhibitor. Particularly is this true in the smaller cities, where are located 80 per cent of the nation's motion picture theatres. The eight million members of the juvenile Red Cross constitute another source of co-operation, the value of which is well known to every exhibitor.

The annual roll call of December, 1918, resulted in a membership of 20,390,173 adults and 8,293,114 children. Of the grown-ups, more than eight million were active women workers, who devoted many hours to the manufacture of Red Cross hospital equipment and supplies. This great number of workers, with more than a casual interest in Red Cross activities, can be depended upon to display enthusiasm when they are given the opportunity to see the new series of travel films. In every subject, the intimate close-ups of foreign lands and their peoples are made the primary attraction, with the actual Red Cross and military endeavors kept discreetly in the background.

The initial release is devoted to Belgium, and contains exclusive pictures from that country, embracing the sort of material that will be most interesting to the vast army of tourists who are preparing to visit Europe this Fall. Pathetic scenes of the return of Belgian children from Germany, a number of unpublished pictures pertaining to Edith Cavell, and a close-up of Cardinal Mercier at Malines are features of the reel.

Big Exchange Vacancy Filled

Two Men Picked from Ranks to Occupy Place in Biggest Universal Exchange

UNIVERSAL picked two men from the ranks this week to fill vacancies in the Big U Exchange—their biggest exchange in all the world.

The men picked are Charles Rosenzweig and George D. Uffner, and from now on they will handle the entire sales end of the Big U Exchange.

When Sam Zierler resigned the general sales managership of the Big U Exchange last week there was much speculation as to how his place would be filled. Mr. Zierler has been elected president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation.

Hundreds of exhibitors and scores of exchangemen speculated on the proposition for more than a week when Harry Berman, general manager of exchanges, made the announcement that the new managers would come out of the ranks.

Both of the new sales managers are young men. They will divide the work heretofore done under the direction of Mr. Zierler.

Mr. Rosenzweig will be in charge of all Jewel Productions and Universal Special Attractions; in a word, in charge of all feature productions. Mr. Uffner will be responsible for all Serials, also all Short Subjects.

The general spirit around the Big U Exchange all this week has been one of jubilation. Mr. Berman, of Universal's home office, is proud that he did not have to go outside the Universal organization to find men to fill a big position. Mr. Zierler, the retiring manager, is extremely proud that two of "his men" were able to step into his shoes. The salesmen were proud that two of their own number were chosen for big promotion and of course Mr. Rosenzweig and Mr. Uffner are jubilant because of their good fortune.

Aywon Offers a Series of Railroad Thrillers

Thoroughly realizing the need of good short subjects, knowing full well how exhibitors all over the country are seeking two reel stuff that will bolster up their programs, Nathan Hirsh, President of The Aywon Film Corporation has been on the hunt for something of the kind and has found it.

In his search Mr. Hirsh has passed up any number of short reelers submitted to him, not being satisfied with their box office value. He now announces that he has secured for exhibitors thirty thrilling melodramas starring Helen Holmes.

Territorial rights are now selling. The interest taken in these Helen Holmes railroad dramas once again proves that the State Rights man is not slow to take advantage of a good thing.

Bookings for the New York and New Jersey territory will be handled by The Aywon Company from their New York office, all other territory will be sold.

Dinner Given New York Branch Manager

The sales force of the World Pictures connected with the New York Exchange of World Pictures tendered Norman Moray a beefsteak dinner at Reisenweber's on September 5 as a testimonial of their loyalty on his taking the position of manager of the New York Branch.

Mr. Ricord Gradwell, president of the company, George Meeker, general sales manager, and S. B. Van Horn, advertising manager, were present. In addition to Mr. Moray were Mr. George Schaefer, the retiring manager, Mr. Robert W. MacGrath, Mr. Anthony Philbin, Mr. Ben Morgenroth, Mr. Ballard, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Hummel, Mr. Robert Wolf, Mr. Moe Kurtz, Mr. Harry Olshan, Mr. Clarence Mott and Mr. Dutcher.

Signed by F. P.-Lasky

Joan Monte Dumont, who played the role of "The Dope" in "The Miracle Man," a Paramount-Artcraft Special produced by George Loan Tucker, has been placed under contract by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and is now a member of the notable stock company at the Lasky studio.

Civic Problem Teaching by Film

State Reconstruction Committee Adopts This Method

MOTION pictures will play the most important part in a campaign undertaken by the State Reconstruction Commission, recently appointed by Governor Albert E. Smith, for the education of the people of the State of New York during the next few months, following a conference in New York this week between Mrs. Belle Moskovitz, secretary of the commission, and Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C., and Harry Levey, head of the Industrial and Educational Departments, Universal Film Mfg. Co.

Chief among the subjects upon which the campaign is to be based are the development of highways and the furtherance of the ship-by-truck movement. Motion pictures boosting these two great activities will be shown in every city and town in the state of New York during the progress of the tour, Mrs. Moskovitz declared after the conference.

In the development of the ship-by-truck movement and the educative work connected with the Good Roads movement, the Commission will have the support of New York's new State Highways Transport Committee, which was appointed by Governor Smith, its personnel having been announced last Thursday.

While these two important movements will be furthered during the tour, the commission plans the production of several motion pictures which will impress the state populace upon such important topics as suitable housing needs in congested industrial committees; public health insurance; the development of hydro-electric power, which is being urgently supported by Governor Smith himself, who believes that the water power in the state should be controlled by the state, and harnessed for the use of its citizens; public health movements of all kinds; the question of control of the milk supply, and sundry other topics of a similar nature.

The production of these films will be under the supervision of Mr. Levey, as head of the Industrial and Educational departments of the Universal. They will be produced under the sanction and approval of Governor Smith, who will appear in several of them with his entire cabinet.

In the matter of good roads, "ship by truck" propaganda, food questions, and others included in the program as outlined at the conference, Mrs. Moskovitz said that the commission, of which Abram I. Elkus is chairman, had some startling facts to portray upon the public screen. She declared that the screen offered the most satisfactory means of presenting these facts to the public—that by this method more people would be reached than by any other.

Governor Smith has officially approved the tour, and will lend it the influence of his office and his personality. The chambers of commerce boards of trade and other civic organizations in each city or town visited will co-operate with the commission and the Bureau of Commercial Economics.

More First Run Realart Booking

Many More Big Houses Contract to Take the Output

MR. E. H. HULSEY, one of the largest exhibitors in the South, has contracted for Realart Pictures. The deal was closed by Mr. Herschel Stewart for Mr. Hulsey and Mr. Diaz Callahan, Dallas Manager for Realart.

Dallas, Houston and Waco first runs are covered by the agreements. The well-known Queen Theatres in these cities as well as the Old Mill, the Hippodrome in Dallas and others in the three cities are being added to by tremendous, new, modern edifices according to announcements recently emanating from the Hulsey headquarters.

Lubliner and Trinz, who control a large chain of theatres in Chicago, also have been signed by Harry W. Willard, Realart manager, to show Realart Pictures in their houses. This circuit numbers eleven theatres, including the Covent Garden, the Michigan, the Pershing, the Biograph, the Knickerbocker, the Paramount, the Crawford, the Oak Park, the Vitagraph, the Wilson and the West End.

Sig Faller has secured first showings downtown for his well-known Bijou Dream on State Street opposite the Palmer House. Hundreds of thousands of persons daily pass the Bijou Dream which is one of the busiest spots in Chicago's famous Loop.

The Loew houses in Boston will use Realart Pictures as first run. These are the Orpheum, one of the best known theatres in New England, and the Globe. Runs will be simultaneous in the two houses, it is announced. Vic Morris, manager of the Orpheum, Nicholas Schenck of the New York office of Loew's Enterprises, and Walter Scates, Boston manager for Realart, made the deal.

Pictures distributed by Realart will be shown in Cleveland at three Loew theatres, the Stillman, the Alhambra and the Euclid. Part of the productions will go to the Stillman exclusively and others will be presented simultaneously in the other two houses. Jack Kuhn directs the Stillman and James B. Reilly is Realart's Cleveland manager.

The F. F. Proctor circuit with theatres in New York and New Jersey is another of the metropolitan firms which will run Realart Pictures as feature parts of their programs. The New York territory contract with this concern covers the Proctor houses in Troy, N. Y., Elizabeth, N. J., Port Chester, N. Y., and Plainfield, N. J.

Keene and Rogers who run the Colonial Theatre in Brockton, Mass., are among other New England exhibitors who have signed with Realart. When Mary Miles Minter was on location at Dedham, Mass., filming the exteriors of "Anne of Green Gables," she made a personal appearance at the Colonial Theatre, and her reception by the public was so enthusiastic that the conclusion of a contract followed immediately.

In Milwaukee, Realart Pictures are booked at the Merrill Theatre. Ellis Bostick, one of the best known exhibitors in Wisconsin, is the manager. Another Wisconsin theatre that has secured the company's pictures is the Fuller in Madison, which is under the management of Asher Levy.

Player May Appear in Person During Run

The management of the Strand theatre, Hoboken's largest and most beautiful photoplay theatre, has arranged several special features in the presentation of "Virtuous Men" which they have booked for an extended engagement beginning September 25th. This is the first time that the S-L picture starring E. K. Lincoln has been seen in the city of Hoboken and due to its importance, the Strand will exploit the production in an unusual manner. Arrangements have been made with S-L Pictures whereby Grace Darling, who plays the leading female role in the film may appear in person during the length of the engagement.

Miss Darling if she does appear, may give a short talk at each performance and as a special inducement to the women patrons of the Strand will wear a different gown creation at each appearance. The Strand Management is advertising the forthcoming appearance of Miss Darling in person extensively both the local newspapers and by means of their screen and various folders and circulars. In addition to this feature, the orchestra at the theatre will be specially augmented to twenty pieces during the engagement of the picture and a new stage setting has been prepared.

Victor Moore's Screen Return Hailed

A most potent and significant justification of the Riskins Brothers' formation of the De Luxe Victor Moore Productions and their plan to present the comedian in his famous stage successes in motion pictures of multiple reel length, comes in the form of numerous congratulatory telegrams and letters from his host of friends in the industry, including many prominent exhibitors and independent exchangemen, welcoming Victor Moore's reappearance in comedies of feature length.

Titling Rolfe Films

Ralph Hill, formerly art editor of Boys' Life Magazine, and for three and a half years the head of Metro's art title department, is now making the art titles for the B. A. Rolfe productions to be presented through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

Simplex Notes

CHOOSES SIMPLEX

Appreciating the vast possibilities in the religious and lecture field through the use of motion pictures, the Rev. Howard A. Talbot, of the Presbyterian Church, Michigan and James streets, De Pere, Wis., has just purchased a motor-driven Mazda Simplex equipment.

The Rev. Mr. Talbot has inqured very closely in the projector field before making his choice, and is to be congratulated upon taking this step, thus avoiding many of the mistakes made by non-theatrical people in the selection of motion picture apparatus. As the purpose for which this Mazda equipment was purchased is to use it exclusively for lecture work in which the Rev. Mr. Talbot specializes, and also for various church gatherings, a regular commercial type of machine was necessary.

The installation of this machine was made by the Teco Products Manufacturing Company, of Minneapolis, whose activities in the church field are gradually including every church in their territory on their mailing lists.

NEW GARRICK "SIMPLEXIZED"

The New Garrick theatre, considered the finest playhouse in Minneapolis, has just installed two motor-driven, carbon arc Simplex Projectors. This theatre which is owned by the Twin City Amusement Trust, and of which Mr. Julius K. Johnson is manager, seats 2,200, and after going carefully and fully into the merits of the various makes of projectors, Wood C. Smith and Earl Smith, the Garrick projectionists, declared themselves flatly in favor of the Simplex.

J. George Feinberg, general manager of the Teco Products Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis, Simplex distributors for that territory, reports to the factory that the New Garrick installation is a very important one and can be regarded as a forerunner of a general Simplex invasion.

MAZDA EQUIPMENT PLEASES

As an indication of the growing popularity of the new Simplex Mazda Equipment, the number of orders coming into the factory from all parts of the country for this type of machine, are increasing every day. This machine, while having been marketed only several months, has already reached the four figure mark in installation in the United States alone.

The Hollis-Smith-Morton Company, Simplex distributors for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, report the installation of two Mazda Simplex Equipments at the Strand theatre, Pitcairn, Pa., which is owned and operated by Mr. Albert Bianchi. At the Strand the length of throw is 85 ft. with an 11 ft. 6 in. screen. The Simplex Westinghouse regulator for producing low voltage service of the Mazda lamp is included as a part of the equipment at this house.

With Elk Sales Force

Julius Schwartz, who has been with the Fox Film Corporation for the past five years, has now joined the Elk Photoplays' sales force.

State Right and Foreign Sales

THE C. B. Price Company has sold the Indian series featuring Mona Darkfeather for Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Kentucky, Georgia and the Carolinas, and Mr. Price is at present in the West closing another big deal.

Max Cohen, president of Monopol Pictures Company reports the sale of "Alma Where Do You Live" and "Crimson Shoals" for Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Alabama. The Alma subject has also been sold for Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

The Romayne Superfilm Company announces the sale of their territorial rights to their twenty-six two-reel comedies, to be issued under the Bear Cat brand, in the following territories: California, Nevada, Arizona, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Southern Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Delaware, Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

Territorial Sales Corporation of No. 1600 Broadway announces the sale of territorial rights to the Jester Comedies in practically all the territory of the United States. These are the comedies in which Twede Dan is featured and Leon Netter and Sol Lesser have bought the Ohio State rights to Robert McLaughlin's feature, "The House Without Children" from the syndicate that originally acquired the rights from Argus Enterprises.

It is announced that five road shows of "The House Without Children" will be sent out through Ohio by Mr. Netter and Mr. Lesser.

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., reports the following sales through his company:

"The Spoilers" to Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Ky., for Kentucky and Tennessee; the same feature to Premier Pictures Corporation for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

To Pearce Films, New Orleans, "The Spoilers," "Who Shall Take My Life," "The City of Purple Dreams," "Beware of Strangers" and "Ivan the Terrible."

Fox Production Sets Record

"Checkers" Plays in Three Houses Simultaneously for a Week to Capacity

FOR the first time in the history of Cleveland, amid a blaze of novel exploitation stunts and pages of paid advertising space in the newspapers three big theatres played "Checkers" simultaneously to capacity business. Not only did these three houses play the picture simultaneously, but they played it for a full week's booking—with options on a second week. These theatres—the New Orpheum, the Strand and the Metropolitan—all acclaim this production as the biggest attraction that has come their way for many a day.

In exploiting "Checkers" the exhibitors proved their showmanship by the amount of newspaper advertising used which created a record for the city on a motion picture of any kind.

Acting upon the suggestions contained in the press sheet issued by the Fox organization, and evincing a keen appreciation of the co-operation of the Cleveland exchange, these managers plastered the public press with every style of ad from the attractive two-column size to smashing big eight-column page spreads—and thus brought many thousands into the three houses during the run.

These ads were compelling in their originality and force. The theme of the story, of course, lends itself admirably to exploitation of various styles—and this was wrought from the press sheet suggestions, bringing into use the scene cuts as well as the ad copy, mats and cuts emphasizing the strongest features of the great production.

From the Fox Exchange in Cleveland also comes word that the "Checkers" fever is spreading beyond that city, to other sections of Ohio. The greatest piece of booking in the history of the State, is recognized in the schedule of the National theatre at Akron. For four solid weeks the National will show "Checkers," and in behalf of the production the theatre has under way a publicity and advertising campaign that reaches not only every part of the city, but all the suburbs.

Cleveland Is Proud of a Picture Star

The "sixth city" is indeed progressive and on the alert to recognize opportunity's knock, and its doors are always held wide open for a big event. The Cleveland Press, as well as many of the other leading newspapers of that city, are so justly proud that a Cleveland girl, Miss Alice Beaturiee Calhoun, is featured as heroine of one of the motion picture productions of the day, "Everybody's Business," that these newspapers have devoted large space to photographs of Miss Calhoun in "Everybody's Business," as well as to articles commending the production.

W. H. Productions Co. are rapidly selling territory on the State Right market for "Everybody's Business." This production is arousing great interest and its success is predestined.

Mary Miles Minter now making the "Anne" stories for Realart

"Checkers" Is Sought in All Sections

From East and West, from North and South, the demand for the william Fox production of Henry Blossom's racing play "Checkers" continues unabated. Following its run at the Central theatre on Broadway and Tuller's Shubert theatre in Brooklyn, the Fox production was shown at the Hartman theatre in Chicago for more than 35 performances and at the Rose theatre in the same city for a like number.

Runs of fourteen days in Kansas City, thirteen days in St. Louis and twenty-three days in Detroit are reported from Fox exchanges.

Runs of one week were reported from the Garden theatre in Baltimore, the Queen theatre in Houston, Texas, and the Hippodrome in Dallas, Texas.

In Minneapolis and St. Paul, Finkelstein & Ruben, managers of the Twin City Amusement Company, have booked the Fox success for week runs at their theatres, the New Garrick and the New Liberty.

San Francisco has been running "Checkers" to crowded houses. So has Jacksonville, Florida. Youngstown, Ohio, and Butte, Montana, report a record business with the production.

Exhibitor Interest in Rex Beach Story

Although the release of "The Vengeance of Durand," the story by Rex Beach with Alice Joyce in the leading role, is still some little time away, Vitagraph is daily receiving numerous inquiries regarding this big superfeature and advance bookings are being made in unusual numbers. The fact that "The Vengeance of Durand" is the first of a series of twelve special features, each written by one of the foremost authors in America, has aroused the interest not only of the exhibitors, but lovers of good pictures throughout the country as well.

Morey in Double Roles

It is quite by coincidence, but in both of Harry T. Morey's most recent Vitagraph productions, "The Darkest Hour," which he recently completed, and the one now in course of production, as yet untitled, he has a double personality or a double role.

Selznick Invades the Antipodes

Branch Shortly to Be Established There; Far East Next

THE second step to encircle the world with Selznick Pictures—the first was the opening of the Selznick Pictures, Ltd., office in London last week—will be taken October 14, when D. J. Selznick, former manager of the Select Branch at Boston; Phil Selznick, former Cleveland salesman, and Hyman Fine, former Boston salesman, sail from San Francisco to establish the headquarters of Selznick Pictures, Ltd., of Australia, in Sydney.

This will constitute the first direct representation that Selznick Pictures have had in the Antipodes and the Far East. A powerful organization will be built in that territory and Selznick Pictures will be distributed and exploited on a scale larger than ever before attempted in those countries by any concern. D. J. Selznick will be general manager of distribution, Mr. Fine will be office manager and Phil Selznick will be director of exploitation and sales.

During the months that D. J. Selznick has been manager of the Boston Exchange he has demonstrated on numerous occasions that he is fitted for a more important executive position. Under his supervision the Boston office has maintained an enviable position among the other exchanges.

Phil Selznick, who has been a salesman attached to the Cleveland Exchange since the establishment of that office, has recently interested himself in exploitation work, and a good share of the excellent showing which the Cleveland office has made is due to his efforts. In his new position he will launch a campaign in the Antipodes which will spread the name of Selznick to every corner of the vast Dominion.

Mr. Fine, as office manager of the Australian office, will also find abundant opportunities to sustain the good record he has enjoyed in the past. Mr. Fine is an experienced motion picture man and he has done much toward giving the Boston branch its present important status.

Although most of the plans for the establishment of the Australian company have already been arranged, there will be considerable to do after the three executives reach their destination. The main office will be established immediately in Sydney, but within a short time D. J. Selznick will have arranged for the establishment of branch offices in other sections of the country, and even in the Far East.

Another Sunbeam Comic Scores a Hit

BEFORE an interested and select audience another of the Sunbeam comedies was given a private showing at the Klutho Studio in Jacksonville, Florida, the other night. This makes the 8th of the series of comedies made by the Florida Film Company, and it went over big. It starts out with a bang and laughter and doesn't lag until the last foot is reeled off. It is called a "Pool of Peaches" and derives its name from college girls in a swimming pool contest.

A hard faced mistress of a ladies' boarding school is possessed with the idea that woman's brain is equal to man's and that if physical development of body is added will be man's superior. To make good her philosophy she advertises for Physical Instructors. Three down and out vagabounds apply and secure the positions.

The fun starts in the gymnasium and ends in the Swimming Pool. A sentimental student, an heiress, an obdurant father and a poor music professor form the love story that runs through it.

Third Charles Miller Production

"Heart of a Gypsy" Is His Latest for Hallmark

"THE Heart of A Gypsy" is announced as the latest Charles Miller production to be added to Hallmark Pictures Corporation's series of Famous Directors' Pictures, the new list of specials scheduled to head the list of releases of Hallmark under its new policy for the season of 1919-20. "The Heart of A Gypsy" will follow on Hallmark's release schedule, J. Searle Dawley's production. "The Phantom Honeymoon," scheduled for the month of October.

The late Charles Miller production is in five reels and presents Florence Billings in the starring role. Others in the cast are: Aida Horton, Mathilda Brundage, Fay Evelyn, Josephine Wehn, Bradley Barker, Corliss Giles, Franklyn George, Hubert Wilkie, Sara Biala and Gaston Bell. The story is from the one of Elizabeth Ethel Donahar. Edward Earle photographed and it was produced under the personal supervision of Charles Miller.

As the title implies, "The Heart of A Gypsy" is a story centering around the lives of nomadic people of the States commonly known as gypsies. Romance, love and adventure are the dramatic elements of this late Charles Miller production for the Hallmark list of releases. Director Miller has assembled a strong cast for the portrayal of the principal characters and it is said this picture represents a true story told in the picturesque light of adventurous lives of the nomadic gypsies.

"The Heart of A Gypsy" is scheduled for release the last of October. Prints are now en route to the Hallmark exchanges. All Hallmark Pictures are released in the South through the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, successors to Southern Triangle Pictures Company and the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc. This corporation is handling the bookings of all Hallmark product in the fifteen Southern States. Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark announces that within the next two weeks he will make announcement concerning another big special for which he is now negotiating.

Neva Gerber comes back to the serial field in the Ben Wilson product for Hallmark, "The Trail of the Octopus"

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces for release on October 5 the next "Smiling Bill" Parsons Capital Comedy, "Oh Bill, Behave!"

Fitzmaurice Starts on "On with the Dance"

George Fitzmaurice has started work at the Triangle studio in Yonkers, which recently was leased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on the first George Fitzmaurice production for release on the Paramount-Arteraft schedule. This is "On With the Dance," in which Mae Murray and David Powell are to be featured. In addition to their roles, there are three others of almost equal importance, and for these Jack Milturn, Robert Schaible and Ida Waterman have been chosen.

Latest Drew Comedy on Loew Circuit

"A Sisterly Scheme," the current Paramount-Drew comedy, starring Mrs. Sidney Drew, with John Cumberland, has been creating laughter over the Marcus Loew theatre circuit in Greater New York, just as the previous Drew comedies scored success with the Loew audiences.

Dorothy Langley, appearing with William Russell in the Fox production, "Sacred Silence"

British-American Gets Dawley Picture

J. Searle Dawley's independent production, "The Phantom Honeymoon," with Margaret Marsh in the starring role, has been acquired by Nancibelle W. Grant, president of British American Pictures Finance Corporation, for the United States and Canada, for distribution through the Hallmark Picture Corporation as a special. The release of this feature by Hallmark is announced for the month of October, following Charles Miller's production, "The Heart of a Gypsy," starring Florence Billings. Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark, announces, also, that Mr. Dawley is now at work on a second picture which will be released by Hallmark.

The picture is in seven reels and will be released as a special on the Hallmark list of offerings for the fall and winter season.

Demand on the Chaplin Reissues Surprises

The success attained by World Pictures with the five Chaplin pictures, "A Night in the Show," "The Bank," "Police," "Shanghaied" and "Triple Trouble" that are being distributed through the World Exchanges is one of the most remarkable testimonials ever accorded an artist either on the screen or the spoken drama. That Chaplin has a hold on the patrons of motion pictures is best evidenced by the amount of business done by the reissues of these five pictures. When the World took over these comedies a quota was set that would, if reached, satisfy all parties concerned. The New York office alone exceeded the quota by fifty per cent, and the same relative increase was reached by every one of the twenty-three branch exchanges of the company.

"U" Players Narrowly Escape Injury

The collapse of a second floor of a set for "The Lion Man" serial at Universal City early in the week, endangered the lives of a number of players. Kathleen O'Connor, Jack Perrin, Gertrude Astor, and others were buried in the debris, but escaped with bruises.

Buel to Direct for Hallmark

Frank Hall Signs Well Known Director, Who Will Produce a Number of Specials

FRANK G. HALL, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has signed Keanan Buel to direct a number of special productions for release through Hallmark on the Famous Directors' series. Director Buel started work on the first of his series last week at the Fifty-fourth street studio. The title to his first production has not been announced but it is stated by Mr. Hall that it is a screen version of an original story written especially for Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard who will portray the principal roles. The first Buel production will probably be ready for the Hallmark exchanges the early part of November or the last of October.

Director Buel was formerly associated with the directorial forces of the Fox Corporation and during the five years that he spent with this organization he directed such popular stars as Virginia Pearson, Evelyn Nesbit, Valesca Surrat, the Lee Kids and others. From point of time spent behind the megaphone in the studio, Mr. Buel is one of the screen's oldest directors and his work is represented in some of the most successful screen productions shown within the past six years.

In signing Director Buel, Mr. Hall is carrying out his policy of associating with the productions releasing through Hallmark Pictures Corporation, those directors who have demonstrated by past performances that they can give the public and the exhibitor pictures of entertainment and box-office value. Director Buel's long experience in the production of motion pictures has given him a wide range of knowledge in creating for screen presentation the drama that serves as entertainment for millions.

Director Buel with J. Searle Dawley, Charles Miller, and other prominent directors to be announced later, will contribute each his quotat of productions to the list of twenty-six Famous Directors Pictures to be placed before the exhibtors of this country by Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

Kerrigan's October Release

Hodkinson Announces "The Joyous Liar," the Star's Second Brunton Picture

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces the completion of "The Joyous Liar," the new J. Warren Kerrigan production to follow "A White Man's Chance" in the popular star's series of Robert Brunton pictures, word having been received from the Brunton plant that prints of "The Joyous Liar" have been shipped East.

The new Kerrigan production, featured by fine settings, it is said to offer the star an admirable combination of stirring melodrama, a highly interesting plot and a score or more of unusual comedy situations, all in all, being a worthy successor to the recent J. Warren Kerrigan-Hodkinson release, "A White Man's Chance," which press and public alike have stamped as the best production in the career of the star.

As in "A White Man's Chance," Lillian Walker, she of the dimples and irrepressible smile, is the star's leading woman in "The Joyous Liar." Joseph J. Dowling, veteran character actor, who has won praise for his remarkable performance in "The Miracle Man," has an equally important role in the latest Kerrigan vehicle. Ernest C. Warde, who directed "A White Man's Chance," also held the directorial reins in "The Joyous Liar," the photography being in the capable hands of Charles Kauffman.

"The Joyous Liar" is a thrilling tale of adventure involving Burke Harlan (J. Warren Kerrigan), a young millionaire artist, and Anne Warren (Lillian Walker), a daughter of wealth. The action is said to be fast throughout, and the settings up to the Brunton standard.

On Tour of Exchanges

E. C. Jensen, the most recent acquisition to Goldwyn's sales staff, has left the home office to visit exchanges in the middle West.

At present Mr. Jensen's schedule calls for stops at Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and Kansas City, but as likely as not the trip will be extended before he returns to New York.

Films of Late Harold Lockwood in Demand

A little less than a year since the untimely passing of Harold Lockwood, the young Metro star, finds the public and motion picture exhibitors alike urgently demanding to see and to show the four or five screen productions made by Mr. Lockwood just prior to the attack of influenza that cut short his career at its very zenith.

Metro exchange managers report that the Lockwood pictures are more popular than ever. The demand for "Pals First," "The Great Romance," "A Man of Honor" and "Shadows of Suspicion" is even more insistent now that Mr. Lockwood is only a memory, than it was when he was in the flesh and giving his art to the silent drama.

Completing Friedberg's "Innocent Cheat"

Joseph Friedberg's "The Innocent Cheat," featuring Carlyle Blackwell, and an all-star cast, is nearing completion and the offices of Mr. Friedberg, in the Brokaw Building, are abustle in preparation for the reception of the first print of this picture which is due to arrive here from the studios in Los Angeles within two or three weeks.

The picture was produced by the Carlyle Blackwell Productions, Incorporated. The Foreign Rights will be handled by the Apollo Trading Corporation.

South Americans Favor Advertising Display

South American exhibitors are firm believers in the value of newspaper advertising. First, second and third run exhibitors of the Fox features in both Brazil and the Argentine Republic spend, by agreement with the Fox exchange, from twenty-five to thirty-three and a third per cent of the rental cost of the pictures in newspaper advertising.

The daily papers of Rio de Janiero and Buenos Aires compare favorably with the newspapers of the larger cities of the United States, it is said; and it is not uncommon to see display advertising of the Fox features running from 400 to 1,200 lines in a single issue.

Fire Will Not Delay Holly Comedies

Barely three hours after he had moved his trunk and other personal belongings into the studio where a series of motion pictures were to have been made in which he was to star, Sid Smith, the young comedian-soldier of the Holly Comedies, received word that the plant the Alkire Photoplay Corporation had rented on Allesandro street, Los Angeles, was totally destroyed by fire. The conflagration occurred Friday night, September 12th. Smith was to make his initial appearance before the camera as a star the following Monday. According to Robert P. Kerr, the new studios of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation on Santa Monica avenue, Hollywood, will be used temporarily in making the Holly Comedies, beginning on schedule time. The Holly Comedies will be released through the Bulls-Eye organization on the state rights basis.

Several Elements Make S. L. K. Serial Big

The new S. L. K. Serial "The Fatal Fortune" in which Helen Holmes is being featured, is said to have two important elements that will cause it to rank as one of the greatest offerings of its kind ever presented on the screen.

First, the intrinsic value of the story, gripping, suspensive, dramatic situations that held, according to the S. L. K. serial.

Second, an all star cast, every part is interpreted by a player of established reputation on the speaking stage and the screen.

Assisting Helen Holmes one of the most conspicuous characters is Leslie King.

A Misleading Caption

A cut of Mildred Harris Chaplin recently published contained a caption to the effect that she would release her pictures through Realart. As is well known, her productions will be released through First National.

Nicholas Power Promotions

Sales Manager Named; Business Growth Brings Additions to the Sales Staff

THE cinemachinery trade throughout the United States and Canada are interested in the announcement which has just been made by the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., of the appointment of S. S. Cassard, as Sales Manager of the Organization, and the enlargement of the office sales force through the addition of another assistant sales manager in the person of E. E. De Hart. The formal announcement of the changes has just been made by letter to the various Power's distributors and dealers throughout the country. F. J. Bird, who for the past four months has borne the title of Assistant Sales Manager, continues to act in the same capacity, and with Mr. De Hart, will work under the direction of Mr. Cassard.

The enlargement of the sales force and its reorganization along the lines indicated, has been made necessary by the rapid increase of the Power's business during the past few months, and the development of plans which the company has had under way for some time, looking to an even more active sales campaign in its chosen field in the future.

The changes just made are the result of investigations and conferences by Edward Earl and Will C. Smith, respectively President and General Manager of the company. "We have found," said Mr. Earl, "that our business has been steadily outgrowing the methods, as to sales and service, which we have used to handle it up to the present time, and have decided that inasmuch as the long established Power's policy which calls for genuine and careful personal attention to every detail of our business representing contact with customers—either established ones or "prospects"—must be maintained, the changes we have just made are necessary."

S. S. Cassard, the new Sales Manager of the Power's company, is new only as to title. Mr. Cassard has been identified with the company for many years, and before joining the Power's forces, was identified with Mr. Earl, President of the Power's company, in another important business enterprise, serving as Sales Manager of a well known brass company.

Mr. Bird and Mr. De Hart, Assistant Sales Managers, have also been in the employ of the Power's company for a number of years. They have earned their promotion by rendering valuable service in their positions in the Sales Department.

Deitrich-Beck Not Bragging

Do Not Believe in Preceding "The Bandbox" with Words; Stands on Merit

IN direct contrast with an industry where nearly every one uses a megaphone to shout in advance how big a picture is before a camera crank has been turned, Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, the two heads of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., have taken just the opposite tack on their first Doris Kenyon production, "The Bandbox," from the Louis Joseph Vance novel.

To date, although they have been at work for two months, all that these executives have said is that they were producing "The Bandbox," that R. William Neill was directing it, that this and that player had been engaged to act in it. They have avoided bragging about their picture until they saw it in its completed form. They have now seen their picture, which has been turned over to the W. W. Hodkinson organization for distribution throughout the United States, and have adopted the unusual course of letting "The Bandbox" bring its own verdict when seen by exhibitors.

The exhibitor verdict on "The Bandbox" will, it is said, be obvious in the next fortnight when announcement is made of the big first-run theatres that have signed contracts for this production. It will be seen in the fact that Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox" enters the largest first-run theatres for extra engagements, and that she will take the place to which she is entitled. First announcement directly to the exhibitors will be made by the Hodkinson organization

Pauline Frederick Is Ahead of Schedule

Pauline Fredericks is keeping well ahead of her schedule at Goldwyn's Culver City studios. With "Bonds of Love," the Louis Sherwin story in which Miss Frederick is starred, just starting on its round of first run theatres, Goldwyn's emotional actress has completed her next picture to be issued with Goldwyn's second series, probably in the latter part of October or early in November, and is making rapid progress on a third production under the direction of William Parke.

A print of the recently finished picture, an adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's famous play, "Letty," in which Miss Frederick interprets the remarkably sympathetic character of the misunderstood heroine, was received at Goldwyn's New York offices last week.

At a showing it was decided "The Loves of Letty" was a title best fitting the picture.

Hodkinson Picture in a Fox Theatre

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production "Sahara," distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson organization, has been booked for its Denver first run in one of the four big theatres recently purchased in Denver by William Fox. "Sahara" was a convincing and heavily exploited success during the hottest part of the past summer in the William Fox New York and New England theatres and it is one of the first big productions to receive the heavy campaign of Fox advertising in Denver.

One of the secrets of the success of the William Fox theatres is the broadness of vision that causes that organization to seek the biggest pictures produced or distributed by other organizations, in spite of the fact that Mr. Fox himself is a producer.

Legislature Endorses "World Aflame"

When a state legislature goes on official record in the unqualified indorsement of a picture any doubt which may have existed as to the drawing capacity of the photoplay seems obliterated: This is what happened to "The World Aflame." It is said to be something that has happened to no other picture drama.

Amusing Trouble Takes Fox Actor to Court

An actor got into trouble, a picture was almost spoiled and incidentally the Fox Film corporation received columns of publicity from the daily newspapers as the result of the desire of Henry F. Koser to get his hair cut

Koser was engaged to appear in "From Now On," a Fox picture now in production, on the stipulation that he would let his hair and beard grow, as his part demands, and not have them cut until the film was finished.

He decided to have himself made more presentable, however, and as a result R. A. Walsh, Fox director, had to get out a summons. The court ruled Koser would have to abide by his agreement and keep his hirsute adornment until October 15, even though his old sweetheart is coming on from England for which reason he wished to visit the barber.

Northernmost Theatre Has Fox Service

A recent shipment of Fox films through the Seattle exchange to the northernmost motion picture theatre in the world, located at Point Barrow, Alaska, is conclusive proof of the completeness of the Fox system of distribution. These features are naturally not of recent issue, for the film must travel 2,000 miles on the Pacific, thence by reindeer team more than 500 miles to the little settlement on the Arctic ocean. The audience will consist chiefly of Indians and esquimaux. They will not see the pictures until they have been away from the exchange three months. Following their use the films will start the return journey to Nome, Alaska, where they will remain until navigation between Seattle and the Seward Peninsula opens next July.

Marriage Film Starts Its Third Week

Elk Photoplays' new feature "Are You Legally Married?" with Lew Cody and Rosemary Theby, has started its third week's successful run at the Harris theatre to great and interested crowds.

This picture has been summarized as "A masterly exposition of the chaos resulting from marriage laws being made by the States."

Goldwyn's Fall List Augmented

Two More Subjects Are Named; Order of Release Given

WITH the addition of two new productions to follow the first eight in the Goldwyn fall series, several of which are now in circulation a definite statement concerning the new season's program and the order of issue is forthcoming from the Goldwyn offices. The additions to the subjects, scheduled for distribution during the fall months are "The Gay Lord Quex," an adaptation of the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero play starring Tom Moore, and another Geraldine Farrar super-production, as yet unnamed.

The list in its correct order now reads: "The Girl From Outside," Rex Beach; "Lord and Lady Algy," Tom Moore; "The World and Its Woman," Geraldine Farrar; "Almost a Husband," Will Rogers; "Strictly Confidential," Madge Kennedy; "Bonds of Love," Pauline Frederick; "Jinx," Mabel Normand; "The Cup of Fury," Rupert Hughes: "The Gay Lord Quex," Tom Moore and the Geraldine Farrar production.

Under the present policy of "Don't book Goldwyn Pictures until you have seen them," exhibitors are requested to view prints of the photoplays at any of the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges, far enough ahead to give ample time for the making of a selection and the preparation of a complete exploitation campaign well in advance of the showing.

The Goldwyn organization is exerting particular effort to bring the fall series pictures to the attention of all exhibitors, in that they give a fair idea of the quality productions being produced by this company to back up the policy of individual booking, whereby each production must stand on its own merits. "The Girl From Outside" "The World and Its Woman" and "Lord and Lady Algy" already have received an emphatic endorsement from exhibitors, the public and the press, in a number of cities where they were shown prior to the scheduled release date.

"Almost a Husband" is conceded to present Will Rogers to even better advantage than did "Laughing Bill Hyde," his first Goldwyn Picture, whereas "Strictly Confiential" is a polite comedy ideally suited to the personality of Madge Kennedy. Another comedy produced and acted in an entirely different mood, is "Jinx," the story of circus life, starring Mabel Normand and directed by Victor Schertzinger. In the way of photoplay drama, Goldwyn offers two subjects in "Bonds of Love," the current Pauline Frederick picture, and "The Cup of Fury," an adaptation of Rupert Hughes' novel, the screen version of which was personally superintended by the author "The Gay Lord Quex" is said to offer Tom Moore an engaging character unlike any he has portrayed in the past.

Reports from the coast indicate that the Geraldine Farrar picture, directed by Reginald Barker, is destined to surpass anything in which the famous prima donna has been seen. Months have been spent in its making and the expenditure for costly sets marks a new record. The story calls for many lavish scenes and they have been secured irrespective of cost.

Expansion of An Educational Dep't

Famous-Lasky Announce Bigger Production Activities

BECAUSE of the wide popularity being enjoyed by the Paramount Magazine, the one-reel weekly release produced by the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the department, and W. O. Hurst, production manager, have made elaborate plans for the enlargement of their production organization so that the best material throughout the world will be made available for the magazine.

W. O. Hurst, production manager, already has sent one expedition, including Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., into an unexplored region of the Canadian Rockies for the purpose of photographing rare animals. This expedition, which cost upwards of $50,000, is expected to prove rich in photographic results, as the territory which the party is penetrating has never before felt the foot of a white man.

Other expeditions, even greater in importance than this, are contemplated by Mr. Hurst for the near future, as it is his plan to ransack every corner of the earth for interesting material for the Paramount Magazine.

To accomplish this he already has effected a world-wide photographic organization so that no matter where it may be, anything that is beautiful, unusual, bizarre or interesting in any other way can be recorded by the camera men of the Paramount Magazine. Mr. Hurst has a staff of twenty-five camera men working directly from his office. These men are sent into all parts of this country to catch the unusual in photographic subjects. This staff operates much as the city staff of a metropolitan newspaper works, each man being given an assignment for some definite subject.

An unusual feature in connection with Mr. Hurst's staff of photographers is that two of the men are aviators, Lieutenant J. A. Landey, late of the British Royal Flying Corps, and Lieutenant John L. Hawkinson, who was a pilot and photographer at Fort Sill, where he trained numerous fliers who later distinguished themselves in France.

In addition to his "city staff" of photographers, Mr. Hurst has a large corps of correspondent photographers, whose activities have ramifications all over the world. These photographers are constantly sending in material from the most out-of-the-way places.

In addition to the large staff of photographers, Mr. Hurst has under his direction a corps of artists whom he considers the cream of the men who are making animated technical drawings. These artists include Paul Perry, creator of the Farmer Al Falfa series of comic cartoons; Frank Moser, who is making the exceptionally amusing Bud and Susie comic cartoons, Pat Sullivan, who is soon to introduce a new series of comic subjects; Harry Shields, John Terry, Irma Heimlich, and Harry Leonard, all of whom have made enviable reputations for themselves by their work with the Paramount Magazine and other companies.

Working directly under Mr. Hurst is Henry MacMahon, who has charge of the scenarios of the Educational Department.

Chosen for Star Cast

Fred M. Malatesta is the second player selected for the all-star cast of the first of the Metro Drury Lane melodramas, "The Best of Luck," to be produced by Screen Classics, Inc.

Three amusing and picturesque moments from two Harold Lloyd comedies released by Pathe. At the left is shown an amusing moment from "His Royal Slyness." Both scenes are from "Captain Kidd's Kids"

Griffith Film Given Pre-Release

Big Four Inaugurates Its Distribution in Pittsburgh

OCTOBER 20 is the National release date set by United Artist Corporation for D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," but a pre-release run of at least three weeks has been arranged by Messrs, Rowland & Clark for their Duquesne theatre in Pittsburgh to begin on Monday, September 29.

Hiram Abrams has arranged with Albert L. Grey, general manager for Mr. Griffith, for a co-operative effort, in order that the Duquesne showing of "Broken Blossoms" may in every way duplicate the artistic triumph achieved at the George M. Cohan theatre in New York during Mr. Griffith's personal presentation of "Broken Blossoms."

The special prologue staged by Mr. Griffith in New York will be put on for the Pittsburgh run, and extra musicians, including a Chinese orchestra, will be used. All the special lighting features and the color innovations introduced at the Cohan theatre will be employed, it is said.

It is reported from the offices of United Artists Corporation that "Broken Blossoms" is already assured of a one hundred per cent first run on release date, with every print accounted for for many weeks after October 20. Early dates are already at a premium, and the lengths of runs being booked seem to indicate that numberless cities will duplicate the sensational records made in the cities in which Mr. Griffith held his repertory season this spring.

As in the case of its first release, the Douglas Fairbanks film, "His Majesty, the American," the "Big Four" will sell its accessories for "Broken Blossoms" at cost prices. Its posters —consisting of three styles of one sheets, two styles of three sheets, one six sheet, and two styles of twenty-fours, will be sold at seven cents a sheet straight.

The lobby display photos consist of two styles of hand-colored, waterproofed 22 x 28; eight hand-colored, waterproofed 11 x 14 photos with pictorial title card, and ten black and white 8 x 10 photos, also with a pictorial title card.

The music score used by Mr. Griffith for "Broken Blossoms" during his repertory season has been secured and will be given to exhibitors without charge.

Slides, cuts of all kinds and extensive exploitation aids have been prepared and will all be sold at cost.

Realizing the exploitation opportunity afforded by "Broken Blossoms," United Artists Corporation is sparing nothing to make available for its exhibitors every bit of equipment necessary to the carrying out of a long and extensive campaign on each booking.

Secrecy on Cathrine Curtis' Production

Cathrine Curtis, president and leading woman of the Cathrine Curtis Company, together with her director, George Foster Platt and a large company of players and executive forces, has left Los Angeles for Spokane, Washington and northern Idaho, where the exterior scenes will be filmed for her first production.

Considerable secrecy surrounds both the name of the story and its character, but elaborate preparations have been made for its staging. In the cast are such prominent names as those of Thomas Santschi, Lester Cuneo and Alfred Allen. Included in the company besides those mentioned are Edward S. Curtis, supervisor of photography, Homer Scott, camera man, H. B. King, business manager, and Kenneth O'Hara, news director. The company expects to be gone for about two months.

A "Mutt and Jeff" Rush

Ever since the news was spread of how the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons created a positive riot of hilarity in the Rivoli and other metropolitan theatres, managers in Ohio, Illinois and other Middle Western States have been flooded with business on Mutt and Jeff from sources never before interested.

New business, big business, is reported from exhibitors in all classes of theatres, both large and small.

Early Day Favorites Again on Screen

When "The Moonshine Trail," the first J. Stuart Blackton-Pathe production is released shortly, exhibitors and followers of Blackton pictures will find two long-time favorites again under the Blackton banner. They are Julia Swayne Gordon and Van Dyke Brooke, both popularly known for their work in Vitagraph pictures since the early days of the company which Commodore Blackton helped to establish.

Lesser Lays Plans for Next Year

Expresses His Views on Questions of the Moment

WITH the expression of a few decided views—views which are worth while insamuch as their source has made for himself a record in achievement—Sol Lesser left New York last week after a six months' stay. On the coast he will attend to his business interests, and as soon as possible return East.

Aside from the fact that he has done a number of big things, latest of which was the presentation and "putting over" in real fashion of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and the Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties, Mr. Lesser is interesting from a number of angles.

When talking he does not devote every other sentence to Sol Lesser and what Sol Lesser has done or is going to do. If this is lese majesty to the paramount precepts accepted by rote by many of our industry then he is without a doubt guilty. Again, Mr. Lesser is a striking personification of the adage that success goes to youth, for, with all that he has accomplished, he is still under thirty. Best of all he does not attempt to make himself appear older.

While in New York Mr. Lesser extended his headquarters to this city, but in October will establish larger offices. He arranged for eighteen companies of the "Yankee Doodle" film and Bathing Girls to take the road.

In California he will lay plans for next year.

"I hope to arrange with Mack Sennett for something larger next year," he said. "My idea will be to take a company across the country composed of a number of the more popular stars in film, drama, serials and comedy, and to present them in conjunction with films illustrating their art. There will be a Mack Sennett Revue as it were, but it will be enlarged by the introduction of these other stars."

Mr. Lesser has little or no patience with the plaints of exhibitors opposed to higher film rentals. "Water will seek its own level" is the way he puts it. "The exhibitor who cannot attractively stage his show, and educate his public to the necessity of paying the prices commensurate with the showing of a high class performance does not deserve to win out, and has no right to complain at conditions which generally obtain through his own lack of initiative.

"As for the various systems of booking, it is my belief the exhibitor as a whole will stick to the program. Exhibitors do not wish to cut each other's throats bidding for pictures one by one. There is nothing beneficial about that, and such is the view held by a number of men I have talked to. However, every one to their own beliefs."

Mr. Lesser went a little out of the line of motion pictures by purchasing concert rights for the famous Vatican Choir of seventy male voices which left Rome, Italy, under direction of the Catholic Church, with the Pontifical Blessing and the Pope's Benediction. Concerts have been arranged in the following cities on the coast: San Francisco, Oakland, Seattle and Portland, and they will take place immediately after the performances in New York and other leading cities in the East.

In commenting on his New York stay, Mr. Lesser said, "I believe this one of the biggest years I have enjoyed in the business, and I am now going to devote my entire time to big attractions, which can be exploited in a showmanship way.

Realart Manager Finds Building Boom

"Better pictures mean more and better theatres. Theatre building activity is unprecedented in the history of the New York territory."

This is the word which Lester W. Adler, manager of the New York branch of the Realart Pictures Corporation, brings as a result of a trip through New York City, New York State as far North as Albany, the Western part of Connecticut and northern New Jersey.

One exhibitor is quoted by Mr. Adler as expressing confidence in a record breaking season because receipts for June, July and August were so far above his greatest expectations. This man argued that if profits were big during the off term, there is every reason for expecting success during the coming year.

Many new houses are nearing completion, Mr. Adler found, and others are projected.

King Vidor to Produce with Own Company

Dispatches have been received from the coast to the effect that King Vidor, director of "The Turn in the Road," "The Other Half," "Better Times" and other big productions, has severed his relations with the Brentwood Company and has left for New York to complete arrangements for making pictures with his own producing company.

Vidor is said to be accompanied by William Parker, screen writer, who will act as his personal representative. Vidor plans to make possibly four pictures a year, though this point has not been definitely determined.

Henry Ginsberg Joins Educational

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces the addition of Henry Ginsberg to the Educational Home Office staff. Mr. Ginsberg was formerly in charge of the Short Reel Department of the International Film Service, and leaves that position to become associated with Mr. Hammons in the extension of the Educational organization.

Mr. Ginsberg is well known in the trade, and lives up to his reputation as a live wire.

Paramount-Artcrafts in October

Big Subjects Among Eight Releases Scheduled

THREE special productions are listed among the Paramount-Artcraft releases for October, eight in number, just announced by Walter E. Greene, Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Charge of Distribution. They are the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Life Line," his first under his present contract with Famous Players-Lasky; the Houdini picture, "The Grim Game," and the all-star production, "The Teeth of the Tiger."

The Tourneur production, "The Life Line," is scheduled for release October 5. This is a picturization, with typical Tourneur treatment of the spectacular, of the old English melodrama of the sea, "The Romany Rye," by George R. Simms, the screen adaptation being by Charles E. Whittaker. It is said to be the most thrilling contribution which Mr. Tourneur has not yet given to the screen, which is saying much, in the light of his recent Paramount-Artcraft Specials, "Sporting Life" and "The White Heather." The climax is a shipwreck scene of tremendous realism, it is said, involving the rescue of the heroic by a breeches buoy. An all-star cast is featured, among the players being Jack Holt, Lew Cody, Pauline Stark, Senna Owen, Tully Marshall and Wallace Beery.

Also released on the 5th is "Miszoura," with Robert Warwick in the stellar role.

"The Lottery Man," with Wallace Reid as the star, will be released October 12. This is an adaptation by Elmer Harris of Rida Johnson Young's stage play of the same name in which Cyril Scott scored a great success. James Cruze directed and among those supporting Mr. Reid are Wanda Hawley, Harrison Ford, Sylvia Ashton, Marcia Manon, Clarence Geldart and Winifred Greenwood.

On the same day is released the Houdini special, "The Grim Game," by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray, which scored so heavily in a pre-release engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, a few weeks ago. The picture is said to be literally packed with stunts by the self-liberator, culminating in an airplane collision thousands of feet in the air, an incident not included in the original scenario but which, thanks to the presence of mind of Director Irvin Willat, who was photographing the airplanes from another machine, was caught in its entirety and interpolated as a thrilling climax to the story. Thomas Jefferson, Ann Forrest and Tully Marshall are also in the cast.

Bryan Washburn in "Why Smith Left Home," George Broadhurst's famous farce comedy, adapted for the screen by Elmer Harris and directed by Donald Crisp, is released October 19.

Another picturization of a popular play is scheduled for the same date. This is Avery Hopwood's "Sadie Love," described as a rollicking farce built around a story of marital entanglements, in which Billie Burke is starred. Clara Beranger wrote the scenario and John S. Robertson directed. James L. Crane is Miss Burke's leading man and Helen Montrose and Jed Prouty have leading comedy roles.

Vivian Martin in "His Official Fiancee," adapted by Edith Kennedy from the novel by Bertha Ruck, is scheduled for October 26. Robert G. Vignola directed. This is a comedy in which Miss Martin playing the part of a stenographer, is persuaded by her employer to pose as his fiancee, for reasons best known to himself. In the end he finds that he has fallen in love with his "official fiancee." Forrest Stanley is Miss Martin's leading man.

Also released on the 26th is the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Teeth of the Tiger," with an all-star cast headed by David Powell and including Marguerite Courtot, Templar Saxe, Myrtle Steadman, Charles L. MacDonald, Riley Hatch and Charles Gerard. This is an Arsene Lupin story by Maurice LeBlanc and Chronicles the return of the famous French crook in the role of a detective.

Strong Story in "From Now On"

Fox Version of Packard Story Will Soon Be Released

FRANK L. PACKARD, author of many successful stories, a master word painter of human nature, has written what perhaps is his most dramatic story, "From Now On," which has just been completed at the eastern studio of Fox Film Corporation with George Walsh as the star, and will be released without delay. The production was directed by R. A. Walsh, who also adapted for the screen this interesting Packard story of the half-world.

To the world Frank L. Packard is best known as a novelist. His success as a writer of stories that have in them a deft human touch, a keen perception of unvarnished life, characters that live and breathe for the reader has been phenomenal. In the character of Dave Henderson, which he has furnished for George Walsh in "From Now On," Mr. Packard has surpassed his best previous achievement. It is a big, strong, virile part, requiring an actor of the type of the athletic star. Around this strong man the genius of Frank Packard has woven a big story, strong in plot, quick in action, unlimited in its heart appeal.

Opposite this character of the half-world, who is constantly beset by temptation, the author has drawn the character of a young girl—not the usual type, but a positively distinct character. George Walsh and Regina Quinn have many scenes that will touch the heart in this big story by a big author.

Packard can tell a story. He knows life. R. A. Walsh can adapt a story, he can direct a story, for like the author, he knows life.

George Walsh and Regina Quinn, his leading woman, have interpreted the principal parts in "From Now On" in a way that brings the efforts of these master story tellers home to everyone.

The support of the star includes such well-known artists as Paul Everton, Mario Majeroni, J. A. Marcus and Cesare Graves—to say nothing of Mike Donlin—who materially assists the athletic Walsh in many stunts which this actor is called upon to do.

When not writing, Frank L. Packard's diversion is his two children; and he says that by them and for them he is giving to the world the best that is in him.

Realism was carried to such extreme that one death occurred in the First National company which went into the real North to film "Back to God's Country"

Work has just been completed by Irvin Willat on a picturization of Gouverneur Morris' sensational story, "Behind the Door." This picture, a Paramount-Artcraft produced by Thomas H. Ince, is said to contain some of the most thrilling stunts ever screened. Hobart Bosworth is the star.

The Goldwyn repertory players are gradually increasing in number, James Neill and Edythe Chapman being the newest additions. They have just signed contracts whereby they will appear in productions made at Culver City studios for a term of years.

RK'S BEAUTIFUL PARK THEATRE

Author Collaborates on a First National

The personal cooperation of James Oliver Curwood, writer of animal stories, enabled the Curwood-Carver Productions Company to obtain for "Back to God's Country," their adaptation of his story of "Wapi, The Walrus," the identical locations visited two years ago by the author, and which suggested at that time the plot for this most successful of all his magazine works.

It also was Mr. Curwood who perfected arrangements which gave to the producers the use of a novelty adjunct to the cast of sixteen varieties of wild animals which, have very important parts in the story.

"I consider the story of 'Wapi, The Walrus' one of the best things I have ever written," declared Mr. Curwood. "And I wanted to express my personal concern in its adaptation to the screen by contributing whatever I could from my knowledge of wild animal life and the hunting regions of California and the Arctic fields."

"Back to God's Country" was released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit on September 29 as the first of its special feature attractions for the 1919-20 season.

Magazine Cover Ad on "Topics of Day"

Over one million readers of The Literary Digest are being attracted to "Topics of the Day" by Norman Rockwell's front cover painting on the September 20th issue of the magazine. This is remarkable publicity and it is probably the first time that any subject or product has been accorded such pictorial publicity on the front cover of a weekly periodical of so extensive a circulation as The Literary Digest.

Selznick Star Better

Eugene O'Brien, the Selznick star, who has been ill for two weeks, was last week operated on by his brother, Dr. George O'Brien, a Chicago surgeon who came on to New York for the purpose.

"Sealed Hearts," the player's latest production, was finished just before he was taken ill.

Mr. O'Brien's condition is reported improved.

Equity Head Back from Coast

President Somborn Enthusiastic Over "Eyes of Youth" and Tells His Plans

HERBERT K. SOMBORN, president of Equity Pictures Corporation, who has been at Los Angeles for the past two months, watching the production of "Eyes of Youth" at the Garson studios, returned to New York this week and reports the first Equity feature, as undoubtedly the finest dramatic production ever published. He is extremely enthusiastic and delights in relating details of the work at Garsons new plant at Edendale, at which Clara Kimball Young and her supporting cast is working.

"We decided," says Mr. Somborn, "to do as does David Belasco.

"He concentrates on one or two productions a year, turns the details of production over to his various department heads, and the result has been that during the past ten years he has known but one failure, and that was only because the public was not ready for the type of production he made of 'Just a Wife.'

"Harry Garson is following out this line of reasoning and with appreciable results.

"On 'Eyes of Youth' he has devoted no less than four months of intensive productional effort.

"He has built the finest sets I have seen during my five years at the coast and has assembled what I consider the greatest cast of recognized actors and actresses that ever characterized any one picture.

"He has given his technical director, his camera crew, his building staffs and his various department heads absolute carte blance in matter of splendor and equipment.

"As to the release we have sold practically the entire United States for our first year's output and interested the foremost exchangemen and distributors and we are now busy arranging simultaneous release throughout the country. We are going to give service to distributor and exhibitor which has never been attempted before and I was to prophesy that it will be the general consensus that Clara Kimball Young is just making her debut on the screen, for this is her first really important picture and will prove itself."

New Cartoon Mode Claimed

Leslie Elton, Drawing for Universal Screen Magazine, Gets Invention Credit

UNIVERSAL'S New Screen Magazine has a new feature which is expected to cause a sensation in the novelty field of motion pictures. This feature is the perfected process of cartoon-artist action depicted on the screen. The artist is Leslie Elton, known among caricaturists as the youngest cartoonist in America, who has after more than three years of experimenting claims to have solved the problem of this feature.

Prior to Mr. Elton's findings it was impossible for any film to show an artist working on a drawing and the character in the drawing moving at the same time. Formerly the artist stopped work and the cartoon moved, similar to any other animated cartoon, or the cartoon was still and the artist continued to work on the picture. The new Universal-Elton process allows the character in the cartoon to play, as it were, with the cartoonist while he is making the drawing. In one of the first cartoons for the screen under this new process and which was shown in the Universal home office projection room recently the character in the cartoon reached up and took a cigarette out of the mouth of the artist.

The effect obtained in these cartoons is said to be exceedingly humorous. About five months ago Elton was given assistance by the Universal company to perfect his process. He now has a complete studio and the films are made there. The process is a secret one but it is known that six different processes are required to produce the final print.

Elton has signed a long term contract with Universal for the production of these feature cartoons.

The first Elton cartoon will appear October 17.

Far Reaching Campaign on Roosevelt Film

One of the most far-reaching and detailed publicity and advertising campaigns ever put behind a production will herald the advent of Hallmark Pictures Corporation's two-reel Western drama, giving intimate studies of the life of Colonel Roosevelt during the time that he spent in the Dakotas and Wyoming as a rancher. Through an arrangement entered into between Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark and Hermann Hagdorn, of the Roosevelt Memorial Association, under whose supervision the picture was made, Hallmark will distribute through its exchanges this subject telling of the friends and early companions of the Colonel Roosevelt. The scenes of this subject were taken over the country where Roosevelt spent his earlier days and Mr. Hagdorn, who with a cameraman went into this country with personal letters of introduction to Roosevelt's friends, had obtained "shots" that reveal in detail the country that our ex-president loved so well.

Mr. Hall announces that prints of this subject are now being shipped to the Hallmark exchanges and bookings on same may be made next week.

Foresters Aid Making of Wilderness Films

Never, it was said, has a motion picture producer received such hearty cooperation from the forest rangers, department of the interior officials and Indian reservation heads, as Leland J. Burrud, who heads the Sunset-Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness" cinema expedition, now trekking through the Pacific northwest. According to a letter Mr. Burrud has written to Nat Spitzer, studio manager for the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, who is supervising the release of the "legends," Mr. Burrud states that his credentials from "Sunset," the Pacific monthly, is an "open sesame" wherever he goes.

Care on Art Titles

Art titles which represent two working days for every title will be one of the bright spots in the forthcoming Bulls-Eye scenic release, "The Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness." The art titles for the first release of the "legends" were painted by Herbert V. B. Acker, head of the Bulls-Eye art department on the west coast. Mr. Acker spent over 40 actual working days with his brush on the 20 art titles of the first release.

From the famous story in the Saturday Evening Post by Arthur Somers Roche

THE STORY.

A GENUINE thriller—real melodrama—the kind that makes you sit tight, hold fast and breathe hard—that transports you out of your daily hum-drum life and makes you part and parcel of the biggest, most daring robbery ever put through in a modern city. Not a tawdry, picayune theft of a few dollars in a back street but the robbery of the biggest jewelry establishment you ever saw—a hold-up of hundreds of people—a block in the city's traffic—the telephone service out of commission—the police force paralyzed. A clean story—a virile picture—an absorbing love-drama. Just exactly the kind of sensation that you don't believe in till you see it—and then you realize that there's a mighty good chance any day of its coming true.

THE SELLING.

PLAY up the fact that this is the wonderful story they read in the Saturday Evening Post, by Arthur Somers Roche—the story of the outwitting of "The Shadow," New York's keenest criminal brain, by a little musical comedy actress. "With her back against the wall, she fought off the evil that would ruin her new-found love." "Even blase New York, satiated as it was by thrills, gasped at the daring million-dollar robbery." Bring out the fact that the traffic of the main streets of one of this country's biggest cities was held up for hours to make this picture. Say: "Imagine a hold-up of Tiffany's—then see brilliant ORA CAREW in 'LOOT.'" Tell them exactly what it is—a breath-catcher, a gasper—then watch them come in.

Special Service Section on
Ora Carew in "Loot"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

SO far as the print which we saw was concerned this picture didn't say a thing about the fact that this is a Saturday Evening Post story which was published about two years ago under the same title and for that reason we want to call your attention to it right off the bat for, to our minds, this is one of the biggest reasons why you should book it.

The story was a thriller which you can be sure everybody who reads the Post waited for, from week to week, to see what was going to happen next, and as this publication has quite some circulation a good many people are going to know about it if you will go far enough in your advertising to recall the general trend of the story to your patrons so they will understand just which story from their favorite magazine is being shown at your theatre in pictures.

This is a faithful presentation of "Loot" and as such you can assure your public that they will have action galore.

The story concerns a young Englishman who comes to America for a valuable string of pearls, about the time a gang of New York crooks are planning to rob a big jewelry store, and in order to steal this piece of jewelry along with the rest of the valuables, attempts are made on the messenger's life which, however, are frustrated by an actress who seems to be implicated with the robbers, but in reality is working against them. The robbery is committed and both the Englishman and girl is kidnapped, but the police through the efforts of a detective capture the whole gang, and the messenger goes back to his employer with the pearls, taking with him a bride, the actress who saved his life.

The locale of the offering begins and ends in England but the principal part of the story is played in New York and can be said to be American in plot.

Two stars are headlined in "Loot," Darrell Foss having the part of the English messenger and Ora Carew the role of the actress.

The story in the Post was written by Arthur Somers Roche, who contributes largely to this magazine and the direction is by William C. Dowlan.

There is little which may be called characterization in the production, action predominating throughout. It is filmed in six reels.

Considerable footage is devoted to the robbery of the big jewelry store, which by the way is about the best staged thing of its kind we have ever seen, and the big punch in the picture. The scenes used for this sequence includes both exterior and interiors of the store, and the way the directors monopolizes Los Angeles' principal business thoroughfare, Broadway tieing up all traffic by the use of two big vans backed up to the curb and marking off everything for nearly a block is something to make anyone wonder if there is no limit to what can be accomplished in "putting over the picture," especially so far as Los Angeles is concerned. We doubt if any other private business has influence enough to accomplish what has been done in this picture, and that is practically subjugate a whole city to a private project.

WHAT THE FEATURE IS ABOUT

THE first scenes of "Loot" are laid in England disclosing the reason that Wade Hildreth, played by Darrell Foss is to be sent to New York for a valuable string of diamonds. The continuity introduces and the subtitles tell you about an organized gang of crooks, who under the leadership of a mysterious master criminal called "The Shadow," are planning to rob one of the greatest Metropolitan jewelry stores. The string of diamonds which Hildreth is to bring to England, is especially desired. Through the treachery of the private secretary to the proprietor of the store, "The Shadow" knows about Hildreth's visit and plans to keep him from receiving the valuables before the appointed time for the hold-up.

First attempts to do this fail and finally "The Shadow" enlists the help of Morn Light, an actress playing in a musical comedy at a local theatre, with whom he is in love and who seems to be on friendly terms with him. Morn Light is told to get the young Englishman interested and have him escort her to her apartments where it is inferred he will be held captive.

Hildreth has been provided with seats at the theatre and soon becomes greatly interested in the actress. During one of the intermissions Morn Light sends him a note asking him to call at her dressing room. He does so and is told that he must leave the theatre at once as his life is in danger. The girl sends him to a restaurant where she promises to meet him later. Thus another attempt to put the messenger out of the running fails. Hildreth goes to the restaurant where the head waiter secretes him in a private dining room. "The Shadow" however frustrates Morn Light's attempt to join him and she is compelled to go to her apartment instead. From there she telephones to the restaurant that she is delayed and asks Hildreth to wait for her.

In the meantime "The Shadow" has located his quarry and sends his lieutenants to "get him" at any cost. Fate again intervenes as by the time the crooks have forced their way to the dining room, Hildreth has left by means of a private entrance and is on his way to Morn Light's home.

Here he is told the reason that "The Shadow" is attempting his life and also that the reason the girl associates with the crook is that she plans to avenge her father's death which occurred through the machinations of "The Shadow."

During this conversation "The

Tell Them This Is a Saturday Evening Post Serial Success

Shadow comes to Morn's apartments and hears what is said. With the aid of his gang both Hildreth and Morn Light are bound and gagged and then the continuity jumps to the scenes of the robbery.

During the height of the shopping period and with the great store crowded with purchasers the gang assembles for the most gigantic robbery ever attempted.

"The Shadow," armed with Hildreth's credentials, goes to the proprietor of the store for the diamond necklace, which is being kept in the private office safe.

After the proprietor has opened the safe, he is chloroformed by "The Shadow," all the valuables located in the inner office are secured and the signal given for the hold-up. From the crowd of shoppers appear numbers of the crooks who line everyone up against the walls where they are relieved of their valuables.

The street in front of the store is guarded and traffic blocked by the use of big vans placed cross ways of the pavement. One or two employees try to protect the property of the store but are shot. Quickly the thieves gather their loot and as quickly make their way to waiting automobiles, the police being called away from the scene by pre-arranged disturbances.

In a few minutes the robbers have disappeared.

The police begin their hunt. A discredited detective, because he had contended that such a person as "The Shadow" existed, is placed in charge. He traces the robbers as far as he can and then becomes convinced that they left the city by means of a strange vessel which sailed shortly after the robbery and a government patrol boat is pressed into service.

The detective's deduction proves correct. The patrol boat soon overhauls the slower vessel and the crooks, with the exception of "The Shadow" who jumps overboard, surrender. Hildreth and Morn Light are also on board the vessel. All the valuables including the diamond necklace are recovered and Hildreth sails to England taking with him the jewels and a bride, Morn Light, who forsakes the stage for a husband.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

WHEN it comes to comparing this picture with other productions of its kind, about the nearest in type which we call to mind, are "The Lone Wolf," its sequel, and "Raffles;" although in this feature the hero is not a crook and there is therefore no divided sympathies.

In quality of production this is quite a lot better than the usual program offering, in spite of the fact that inconsistencies in the plot are evident. These, however, will be lost sight of in the action which builds well to the big scene, the robbery of the jewelry store. This also possesses a quality which many melodramas do not, in that the long arm of coincidence is not overworked. A logical reason is shown for pretty nearly every sequence, and there is none of the "just happened in the nick of time stuff."

We would say that any audience which likes melodrama will eat this picture up. There are no very big names in the cast, but it has been very well staged and as a production is especially meriting from the angle of the acting. If fault is to be found it would be with the basic story which in this case you have an alibi in the fact that it was a very successful story in America's most popular fiction magazine.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

IF we were going to bill this picture, we would throw everything else overboard and spend all our energies on the story, with the fact that it was one of the Post's best serials always in the foreground.

Of course if any of the players are popular enough so you think they will draw of themselves, play them up. That is something you will have to figure out for yourself.

In "Loot" you have a mighty good title especially when you can tie it up to the successful story. Get this title up in big letters everywhere. It is a good name on which to start a teaser campaign. Sounds interesting and mysterious and those qualities are the basis of all teaser methods of exploitation.

If you can hunt up some of the Saturday Evening Post numbers containing the story, it wouldn't be a bad stunt to use the various pages containing the serial, some of the paper prepared for your use by the exchange and some of the stills you can obtain, together with original matter like announcement of the engagement, for a window display.

On the strength of the fact that this is from a Post story, you would no doubt be able to secure some windows of the various stores which sell the publication every week. A display in a window of this sort would be effective as the very people who you want to reach are frequent visitors at the newsstand.

You also might be able to tie up with the numberless boys who sell the Post on the streets. It would be good advertising for them as well as you if they were to distribute a partnership herald exploiting both your theatre and their agency for the magazine.

For a lobby display we have nothing to suggest. It doesn't strike us as being a very good picture for a display, in as much as there is nothing spectacular about it and depends on its action for its interest.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

We suggest some catch lines for your use in newspaper display:

"His first trip to America proved a great adventure, for fate made him the central figure in the most gigantic robbery ever planned."

"He crossed the sea for a diamond necklace worth half a million but in addition he won a wife."

"Fate turned a supposedly peaceful ocean trip into an exciting melodrama."

For selling talk, something like this might be appropriate.

"This picture portrays the exciting adventures of a young Englishman and an American actress ending in a romance, when a gang of crooks choose to shape their destinies. The greatest robbery ever planned failed because of a girl. It is a thrilling story, an accurate visualization of the original, a Saturday Evening Post serial by Arthur Somer Roche. You remember it."

"An organized gang of crooks under the leadership of a master criminal, "The Shadow" planned to perpetrate the greatest robbery in history. Nothing was to stop them. Murder was but an incident, a means to an end. They almost succeeded but a girl who desired revenge for the death of her father spoiled all their plans. She won a husband too and went to England to live happy ever after. Remember the story in The Saturday Evening Post? It was a thriller written by Arthur Somer Roche."

"A slender girl, an actress in a Metropolitan theater is instrumental in bringing to justice the greatest gang of criminals ever banded together, renders negative the result of the boldest robbery in history and wins for herself a husband in this exciting picture from the story of the same name written by Arthur Somer Roche for the Saturday Evening Post."

Painted Sign on Pauline Serial Going Up

The first of the painted signs which Sidney Reynolds, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., who is now making the 15 episode serial starring J. Robert Pauline, is planning on using as a medium for advertising to the general public is to go up at West Forty-seventh Street and Seventh Avenue, in the very heart of the motion picture and theatrical district.

This is said to be the first painted sign to be done and is experimental with Mr. Reynolds. It is his intention to sound out a number of exhibitors and showmen in various branches on the effectiveness of this design in order to determine whether it should be the final model for signs to be put up all over the country, according to his statement

Fox Films Scoring in Far North

People Flock to the Towns Often Under Hardship

SOURDOUGHS of Alaska, after spending months in the hills looking for the elusive laystreak, return to the towns of the territory and forget for the moment the battle they have had with the elements by looking at the main source of amusement in Uncle Sam's richest territory. From Juneau, Cordova, Seward, Anchorage, Fairbanks and Nome, as well as the smaller towns such as Ruby, Iditarod, Innoko, Tanana, Fort Yukon, Copper Centre, Tin City, Chitina, Russian Mission, St. Michael come reports that Fox features and Fox Sunshine Comedies which have invaded that great territory are firmly established in the hearts of all Alaskans.

It is certainly a cosmopolitan audience that sees the Fox program in these settlements. In the Orpheum Theatre in Juneau, the capital of the territory, it is not an unusual sight to see the governor of Alaska, Thomas Roggs, Jr., seated next to an Indian. The former has come from his magnificent home on the hill overlooking the beautiful Lynn Canal and the surrounding country from which has been taken more than $75,000,000 in gold; the latter has paddled his canoe across the canal from his little hut on the shore, where he and his squaw work from twelve to eighteen hours a day, in the season, catching the big salmon in their primitive fish wheel.

There are two large theatres in Juneau, Alaska—the Orpheum and the Palace. Both use the columns of the local press to advertise their attractions. Recently the Orpheum carried a large display advertisement in the Juneau Dispatch, the leading paper of the territory, setting forth the fact that for Sunday and Monday the house has two super-attractions, Gladys Brockwell and a Fox Sunshine Comedy (including the famous Fox Sunshine Beauty Brigade).

Not only in the towns where the service of the steamers is such that a weekly shipment of films can be made from Seattle, but in the most inaccessible towns of the territory Fox films find quick response when advertised. A. R. Thorne of Fairbanks, the pioneer motion picture exhibitor of the North uses the Fox program.

William Code of Nome, who has recently purchased the famous Empress Theatre in Cordova from Captain Lathrop, uses the program; and Captain Lathrop, with theatres in Valdez, Seward and Anchorage, runs all the Fox features and comedies he can get.

These progressive exhibitors use the columns of the Cordova Times, the Valdez Miner, the Fairbanks News-Miner, the Nome Nugget, the Seward Prospector, the Chitina Leader and numerous weeklies to keep the people of the district informed as to the nature of the pictures. These papers find much interest evinced in the studio gossip, and all of them have Motion picture news columns. Press sheets are used by these exhibitors, and the editors use the cuts and mats for the news columns of the paper.

Travel to the theatres is difficult at times. It is not uncommon for a prospector to come ten miles with his dog team to see a moving picture show and then return to his cabin. Or he may use a boat, or hike in. The papers have organized a thorough system of circulation, and cover the district in which they are printed by means of carriers whose routes are often twenty miles in length. So the exhibitor depends for his trade on his power to properly word his advertisement, and he uses his press sheet because he realizes that it has been furnished to him by experts.

Pioneers Go Well in New England

The exchanges handling the Pioneer Attractions in Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Boston, report that the Pioneer productions are meeting with flattering success. Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece in Philadelphia is signing up "The Boomerang," "The Long Arm of Mannister" and "The Sins of the Children" with the majority of the first run houses in his territory.

"The Sins of the Children" which is controlled in Pittsburg by the Simlee Exchange has created such a demand that additional prints of the picture have been ordered to fill the first run bookings.

"The Girl From Nowhere in Pittsburg" is being exploited by the Apex, and additional copies have been ordered and are now working in every part of the territory.

Second Truart Comedy Is Under Way

Production on "Show Your Cards," the second Truart comedy starring Minta Durfee (Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle) is now well under way at the company's new studios at Providence. Chas. H. France, director-general, who also directed "Whose Wife," the first picture produced by the company, is personally supervising the production of the current film which is from an original story by Tommy Gray.

Every effort is being made by Bory Osso, General Manager of Truart Pictures, Inc., to speed up the production of his comedies as he does not intend to make any releasing arrangements for the pictures until several have been completed.

"The Band Box," the Louis Joseph Vance story which is being produced with Doris Kenyon starred, is to be released through W. W. Hodkinson Distribution

High Mark Given to "This Hero Stuff"

It is not often that the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures finds it possible to report "Excellent" on every one of the eight counts on which their screen opinions are based. A report that reads uniformly "Excellent" was recently rendered for one of the American Film Company's productions, "This Hero Stuff," starring William Russell.

This official seal of approval is being approved the country over by enthusiastic exhibitors, whose unofficial reports contain expressions like "Bully puller," "A regular clean-up," "Good for a return invitation next month," and others similar in tenor to these random quotations.

Winifred Westover and Mary Thurman, J. Barney Sherry, Harvey Clark, J. Farrell MacDonald and Charles K. French are in the unusual cast supporting Russell in this release.

Grace Davison Starts on New Production

Grace Davison, whose picture, "Atonement," is going over the top with flying colors under the Pioneer Exploitation System, announced yesterday that all the preliminary arrangements had been completed for the production of her next picture.

This photoplay, like "Atonement," deals with a great problem of modern domestic and social life, and offers a wide scope for Miss Davison's emotional powers.

Plans are now under way for the construction of a studio in the suburbs of New York for the use of Miss Davison, but it will not be completed in time for the next production. As now planned, one of the fully equipped studios in the city will be used.

Pioneer will handle the picture on the state right plan.

Preparing to Exploit "Lost Battalion"

W. H. Productions Co. are now preparing to exploit on a large scale the six-reel production, "The Lost Battalion," which has just completed a very successful two weeks' run at the Geo. M. Cohan theatre, and which W. H. Productions Co. is releasing on the State Rights market.

Film to Be Distributed Among 1,300 Lodges Prior to Its Release

THE Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in conjunction with the Federal Board for Vocational Education, held a private showing of "The Way Back," a five-reel feature produced by the National Elks War Relief Commission, at their headquarters (Number One Lodge) West 43d street, September 23d.

The picture is a contribution to the Government program for the vocational training of disabled soldiers, sailors and marines, and is to be shown throughout the country in the 1,300 lodges, the total membership of which is 600,000, previous to its being released for theatre distribution.

The money obtained from the picture rights will be turned over to the Government for educational purposes, $250,000 having already been contributed by the National Elks War Relief Commission.

The Commission is planning the production of fine pictures, two of which have been completed. "The Way Back" tells the story of two young crippled soldiers returning from the late war, one ambitious to take advantage of the vocational education offered by the government, the other being averse to it.

After their welcome home by the town folks the ambitious young fellow prefers the home, while his comrade drifts towards the saloon and its environment.

On the night of a party given for their benefit, the unambitious fellow is seen in his old haunts the "saloon," and arriving home late in a drunken condition goes to bed and has a dream in which he commits murder and is sentenced to death.

As he is being aroused by the jail attendants to be electrocuted, the picture fades into that of his comrade who summons him to breakfast. His delight in finding that it was "only a dream" everjoys him and he promises to go through with his training.

Although the story, direction and cast is of the average variety, it has its appeal, especially to those who have friends or relatives in the war.

William Hart and J. W. Lysons have charge of distribution.

Goldstein Makes a Purchase

Exclusive Features Buys Outright the Selig Production, "Heart of Texas Ryan"

J. M. GOLDSTEIN, president, Exclusive Features, Inc., which company has purchased outright the negative of Willilam N. Selig's big production, "The Heart of Texas Ryan," featuring Tom Mix and prominent supporting cast, announces that this feature, which was placed on the State rights' market last week, has elicited many responses from territorial buyers throughout the country. Mr. Goldstein said in his announcement that not since he has figured as an operator in the open market has he sold a feature that has been in such demand.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan" is a revival of one of Tom Mix's best Western dramas. At the time of the first showing of this feature, it was pronounced one of the best dramas of the Western and stunt variety ever shown on the screen. President Goldstein of Exclusive Features, has obtained the exclusive rights to this picture by arrangement with Mr. Selig, the producer. An extensive advertising and publicity campaign has been launched in the trade papers and Mr. Goldstein promises every co-operation with the territorial buyers.

One of the big features of this production is the scene showing a "hold-up" in which there are more than three hundred principals and "extras." Among the popular stars supporting Mr. Mix are Bessie Eyton, George Fawcett and Frank Campeau.

Pioneer Series Coming Soon

Release Date of "Facts and Follies" Shortly Announced; Finishing Up Six

THE film editorial staff of the Pioneer Film Corporation are busily engaged in putting the final touches on the first six releases of the Facts and Follies series. Following the usual practice of the Pioneer these pictures, which are to be released at weekly intervals, over a period of fifty-two weeks, will not be offered to the public until they are perfect in form and finish.

Wray Physioc, the director of the series, has been working in conjunction with the Pioneer Staff, and reported to M. H. Hoffman, chief executive of the Pioneer, that the first six of the series were ready for release.

"Professor Was Right," will be the initial offering, and will be followed by "Running Romeos," "My Kingdom for a Meal," "Camping By Proxy," "Back To Nature," and "In The Sweet Dry and Dry." Each of these subjects are satirical comedies, with a rich vein of humor, headed by Frank Bates and Helen Hart and for the most part composed of girls, recruited from the artists' studios of New York.

The Pioneer is meeting with very encouraging success in the marketing of the series. Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, immedaitely closed for the entire year's output, and will soon begin to exploit them in the New England territory.

George Sherwood, who has been playing leads with Bessie Barriscale and Texas Guinan, has been engaged by the Model Comedy Company to act as leading man.

Neilan Creates Part for Wesley Barry

Following the announcement some weeks ago from Marshall Neilan that he will use little Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced young artist, in "The Eternal Three," adapted from Randall Parrish's book "Bob Hampton of Placer," there has been considerable speculation as to what part the boy would play in that there are no child parts in the story.

In an interview with Mr. Neilan last week it was disclosed that he wonuld create a special character for little Wesley in "The Eternal Three" for the purpose of enhancing the human appeal of the photoplay.

Mr. Neilan said:

"In 'The Eternal Three' we will present Wesley Barry, in various scenes that will fit in with the story perfectly, without detracting in any way from the main theme of the plot. He will appear in a natural trend of the story and only at times when the psychological opportunity presents itself."

Screen Credit Given Director Barker

Realizing the importance of the director and believing that meritorious work should be recognized in every possible way, Samuel Goldwyn has decided to give Reginald Barker additional prominence by terming all of the pictures which he directs, Reginald Barker Productions, except in instances where the picture contains a star. This change goes into effect immediately and will be regarded in the introductory title on the screen, as well as in advertising matter relating to the pictures made by Mr. Barker.

National Film Men Are Given Promotion

In reward for past performance several of the National Film Corporation employees have been advanced by President Parsons. Mark Goldain has been promoted from assistant director to director of Capitol Comedies.

Another similar move was the placing of William Seiter now directing the De Havens, as director for the five reel comedy dramas featuring Billie Rhodes.

Jack Johnson Latest Screen Player

Jack Johnson, one-time champion heavyweight, is the newest aspirant to stardom in films. The Royal Films, of Barcelona, Spain, has starred the fighter in a twelve-reel feature, a print of which has been received in the United States by C. B. Price Company, Inc. The title of the picture is "Strength" and the story was written with a view to showing Johnson's talents to the best advantage. The film was made in Spain, and was a great success in that country. It has, in fact, been exhibited in every country with the exception of the United States and Canada.

The C. B. Price Company has not yet decided how it will handle the Jack Johnson picture. It may be released as a special feature or in serial form. Whether it will be handled through a distributing organization or sold on a state rights basis is also undecided.

Blackton's First for Pathe Books Fast

Under the impetus of the earnest efforts of the Pathe sales force, J. Stuart Blackton's initial production for Pathe, "The Moonshine Trail," is booking so rapidly that it very likely will surpass the records attained by some of his most noteworthy cinema contributions.

The red-blooded appeal of "The Moonshine Trail," with its stirring scenes in the heart of the Kentucky moonshine territory, which is here depicted in its more human light, is making the production a most popular issue among exhibitors.

Fire Proof Vaults in New Fox Building

Among the completed features of the $2,500,000 new William Fox building at Tenth avenue, 55th to 56th street, sixteen film storerooms or vaults represent the realization of an architect's ideal system for fire-proofing a film depository.

There are sixteen of these vaults, and every one of them has a separate and distinct outlet for air and a specially constructed channel for emergency purposes to absorb combustion if such a necessity ever should arise.

Initial Runs on War Relief Series

Ninety-one Per Cent. of Best Houses Have Booked Series

NINETY-ONE per cent of a possible one hundred per cent of theatres that are absolutely first run houses in key cities and which are located East of Omaha, Nebraska and Dallas, Texas, have booked the Stage Women's War Relief series of pictures being released by the Universal Film Company.

This is the unusual statement, and what is believed to be a record in picture selling, made by Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager.

William Howard, special sales representative of Universal returned this week from a three months' tour of the country in which he covered every large city east of Omaha, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. The result of his trip is almost astounding in that his record booking was accomplished in such a short length of time. The series of famous productions is now assured a nation-wide showing in the best houses in the country. It is also interesting to note that this series of productions are selling at the highest price ever asked for short subjects.

Regarding the series and its wonderful reception in the United States Mr. Baker said: "When Universal officials accepted the proposition of distributing the famous series of Stage Women's productions we had every cause to believe that the exhibitors of the country would be more than willing to pay a good price for the productions in that they are the most remarkable series ever produced. From my past experience I knew the public would appreciate them—would be anxious to see these stage personages and would appreciate the fact that the exhibitor in their territory booked the series.

"The New York office has just received a number of telegrams from exhibitors who have shown the first of the series and every one received has congratulated us on this series and has stated that the patrons of the theatres were highly pleased and entertained. It must be remembered that a number of the stars of this series have seldom played on the stage outside of New York City. But their names are known all over the country. People come to New York every year from all parts of the country to see them in plays and now it has been possible to introduce to the entire country all of the best known stage stars and even more, the famous playwrights and producers themselves—such as David Belasco, Daniel Frohman and Florenz Ziegfeld. This fact alone makes this series not only interesting but of great value to the exhibitor.

"All of the people who took part in this series gave their services free of charge to the Stage Women's Society. As they have always, the actors and actresses have donated their services to a worthy cause. No other profession existing gave more to the cause of the soldiers than did the actors. They put their souls into this work and the result is that excellent short dramas with all-star casts were produced. I can only say that any exhibitor who fails to take advantage of this series is short-sighted.

"Universal," Mr. Baker said, "considered itself fortunate in being given the task of distributing this series. We have prepared an enormous advertising and exploitation campaign in connection with it. It is a high class series of productions and it is necessary that they be handled in a high class way."

Notable Booking on "Westerners"

Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit Takes the Hampton Film

CONTRACTS were signed this week by James Q. Clemmer, president of the Northwest Exhibitors Circuit, and P. G. Lynch, Seattle manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, for a complete circuit wide booking of Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors' picture, "The Westerners," the film presentation of Stewart Edward White's famous novel.

This contract covers practically every key city in the entire length and breadth of the Seattle territory and will be inaugurated by a first run at the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, September 27th, followed by immediate first run in Portland, Tacoma, and Spokane. To cover a booking of this kind, the first big circuit contract ever signed in the Northwest by any of the larger motion picture distributing companies, the Hodkinson organization will lay down four or more prints in the territory for prompt fulfillment of immediate first run dates by the members of the circuit.

Other important first run bookings of "The Westerners" during the past week include a double booking for first run in Cleveland of this big production at Charles H. Miles Grand and Miles theatres, day and date, the first time in the history of either of Mr. Miles' theatres that he has played the same production simultaneously at his two theatres. This Cleveland booking follows the booking of the same production by Mr. Miles' Majestic and Orpheum Theatres, Detroit, for two weeks.

Contracts have also been signed for a day and date first run presentation "The Westerners" at the Columbia and Regent Theatres, Pittsburg. This situation of a big production having simultaneous first runs in two theatres in a city has been markedly one of the indications that big exhibitors in the large cities have realized that powerful productions do not exhaust even a small percentage of the available patronage at advanced prices by a single showing in one theatre for seven days.

"The Westerners" has played day and date first run showings under one ownership, or in theatres having separate ownerships and in the case of "Desert Gold" contracts have been signed in one city for a triple showing in three theatres under one ownership simultaneously.

Longer runs and duplication of runs simultaneously is only a matter of big pictures as "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and one or two other of the season's new productions are revealing.

"Yankee Doodle" Deal

Going further in its success of attaining a record-breaking business, Sol Lesser announces that his New York Exchange has closed bookings for the Poli Circuit of New England for "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and the Mack Sennett Bathing Girls. Ira H. Simmons, manager of the New York Exchange, closed the deal which includes week runs at the Poli theatres in the following cities: New Haven, Hartford, Waterbury and Bridgeport, Connecticut, and Worcester, Massachusetts.

"Six Feet Four" Taken by Loew Circuit

So favorable an impression has the American Film Company's new six-reel special, "Six Feet Four," made upon the big exhibitors of the East that it has been booked by the Loew circuit of New York City for playing dates covering a period of sixty-three days, starting October 6, at one of the highest prices they have ever paid.

The contract was signed by Mr. F. H. Mitchell, who expressed his pleasure in being able to treat his public to a picture of western life that departs from type and ranks as real screen literature. In the words of the New York Telegraph: "While it has all the ingredients of the usual western feature, it has a great deal more besides. It has by no means conventional twists of plot, and it has at least one punch in every reel."

The New York office of the Company reports that indications are its previous records will be exceeded by more than 100 per cent on "Six Feet Four" bookings.

Universal Work Stopped by Forest Fire Smoke

For the first time in the history of picture making at Universal City, California, the studio and location work was retarded one day late last week when the smoke from forest fires formed a smoke screen and obscured the sun from view. This fact was received in New York in a telegram from Charles Hertzman, Universal City, publicity manager. According to the telegram the forest fires were raging on the nearby mountains.

Another event of unusual interest at Universal City last week were the beginning of the photodrama "The Peddler" on the same day that the story started in The Saturday Evening Post.

Supporting Cast Named for Vitagraph Star

Vitagraph has completed the cast which will support Corinne Griffith in her next feature, "The Tower of Jewels," which was written especially for her by Lucien Hubbard. It will include Webster Campbell, Miss Griffith's new leading man, Henry Stephenson, Maurice Costello, Charles Halton, Estelle Taylor, Edward Elkas and Charles Craig. Tom Terris will direct.

Officials Endorse Fox News

Governors and Senators Follow in Wake of President Wilson on Big News Film

FOLLOWING closely the endorsement of President Wilson, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation and editor of Fox News, has received from five United States Senators and two Governors of states letters of endorsement for his superlative screen magazine and news service.

Unqualifiedly these representative Americans wish William Fox success. Governor Charles H. Brough extends to Fox News "the official welcome of the State of Arkansas to the advent of one of the greatest news films in the world." To Hon. W. L. Harding, Governor of Iowa, Fox News "enters the educational field at a moment when it is most needed."

To Hon. Morris Sheppard, United States Senator from Texas, the coming of the Fox News "is in line with the best part and progress of the times, and it is needless to say that I wish you unqualified success."

Senator John B. Kendrick, of Wyoming, says: "The progress of the world depends upon the dissemination of knowledge among all peoples, and no one, I think, will dispute the statement that the motion picture is one of the most wonderful agencies ever devised by men for spreading information." The advent of Fox News appeals to Senator Kendrick as "another step in the progress of the nation."

To Senator Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, "the motion picture newspaper is of greater interest to most motion picture audiences than any other part of the program. I want to congratulate you upon making it part of your service."

The senior Senator from Florida, Hon. Duncan W. Fletcher, says in his letter to William Fox: "You have launched a very ambitious enterprise, one full of possibilities for entertainment and enlightenment, and I wish you every success."

To Senator Gilbert W. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, Fox News, "can perform a most useful function so far as the public is concerned."

Alice Joyce Soon Seen Again

Vitagraph Announces "The Winchester Woman" Is Scheduled for Early Release

VITAGRAPH is soon to release "The Winchester Woman" with Alice Joyce in the title role. This announcement will be welcome to the many admirers of Miss Joyce who have not had an opportunity to see her on the screen since she appeared in "The Spark Divine."

Following "The Winchester Woman," Miss Joyce will be presented in "The Vengeance of Durand," the unusual story by Rex Beach, which will be the first of a series of superfeatures by twelve of America's foremost authors, and then will come "Pride," on which she is now at work. Miss Joyce benefited greatly by her month's rest at Hot Springs, Va., and has now caught up to her schedule.

In "The Winchester Woman," which was written by Charles Stokes Wayne and put into picture form by Arthur Edwin Krows, Miss Joyce has departed from the type of character by which she is best known. She is not "a daughter of luxury." On the contrary, she portrays a good looking young woman of fine breeding and instincts, who has become almost notorious in a small city through the murder of her husband, for which she is tried and acquitted. The story deals with her life in a rural village under an assumed name, and the blackmailing of a disreputable newspaper reporter who knows her past. She tries to live the quiet simple life of the village, adapting herself to her new surroundings—a character at variance with the roles with which she has been associated in the past.

Lucille Stewart Joins Fox

Popular Player Is to Support William Russell in "Eastward Ho" Now Filming

LUCILLE LEE STEWART, well known as a star, has been signed by William Fox to support William Russell in "Eastward Ho," which is now being photographed at the eastern studio of Fox Film Corporation.

Miss Stewart has had a varied and successful career on the screen. Since she was signed by David Wark Griffith for the old Biograph Company at an insignificant salary she has devoted all her attention to the silent drama, and by sheer ability has risen to stardom.

For more than two years she was a star with the Vitagraph company. Her most recent appearance was made in "The Perfect Lover," where she was the leading woman for Eugene O'Brien.

Miss Stewart was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., educated there at the public schools and Erasmus High School and after leaving school appeared for a short time in vaudeville. Mr. Griffith signed her to a contract, but later when he asked her to go to the Pacific coast studio, she refused. Her first appearance on the screen was made at the age of sixteen.

In "Eastward Ho," which Emmett J. Flynn is directing, Miss Stewart is cast as a society girl—a type of role with which she is familiar, and in which she has done the best work of her career.

Charles Giblyn, one of the best known of motion picture directors, whose most recent work was the production of "Upstairs and Down," with Olive Thomas as star, has been selected by Thomas H. Ince to direct Dorothy Dalton in her third Ince picture.

American's Officials on Extensive Tour

Walter Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation and Holmes C. Walton, sales manager of the concern, left New York this week on an extensive tour of the principal cities of the country. They took with them prints of the first two American Cinema productions.

Mess. Niebuhr and Walton will stop off at Chicago on the first leg of their journey. There they will confer with Watterson R. Rothacker of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, concerning the making of prints for the American Cinema productions.

In addition, they will select locations for billboard advertising in the Windy City. Already the names of the American Cinema Corporation stars are well-known to the frequenters of Broadway, and it is Mr. Niebuhr's plan to extend the scope of outdoor advertising in Chicago and other strategic points throughout the country.

Paramount-Artcrafts Ready Sept. 28

The Paramount-Artcraft releases for September 28th are "The Egg Crate Wallop," a Thomas H. Ince production with Charles Ray as the star, and "Widow by Proxy," a Marguerite Clark subject.

"The Egg Crate Wallop" is destined, according to Famous Players-Lasky, to score the biggest success of all the Charley Ray pictures to date.

Colleen Moore appears as Ray's leading woman and prominent character roles are portrayed by J. P. Lockney, Otto Hoffman, George Williams, Jack Connolly and others.

Nigel Barrie is leading man for Marguerite Clark in her subject.

Constance Binney Tours in Stage Play

Constance Binney, who will make her debut as a motion picture star in the Realart picture "Erstwhile Susan," adapted from the stage play of the same name, has gone on tour in the play in which she made her first appearance as a star on the New York stage, "39 East." "Erstwhile Susan" has been completed and will be one of the first Realart releases.

Universals Shown in Buckingham Palace

What is perhaps the most unusual recognition ever given a short American subject was the showing in Buckingham palace of three "Cyclone Smith" Universal western photodramas, starring Eddie Polo. The palace attache charged with selecting photodramas for the entertainment of the royal family, selected the three "Cyclone Smith" dramas at the Trans-Atlantic exchange, Universal's London distributing office. It was the first time that a short American photodrama has held the attention of Their Majesties and their guests.

The information that the royal family had seen and enjoyed the Universal photodramas came from two sources Sam Polo, a Universal player and a brother of the famous star, received the information in a letter from Eddie Polo, and Carl Laemmle, Universal's president received a cablegram from the manager of the Trans-Atlantic office, confirming the fact.

Seventh National Film Company Soon at Work

The National Studios are buzzing with activity under the able management of Production Manager Bernstein, six companies now working at top speed and arrangements made for a seventh to start as soon as a new director, who is now in the cast, arrives.

William Parsons, President of the National Film Corporation, has purchased the picture rights to three of the most popular fiction works ever written, namely, "The Kentucky Colonel," by Opie Read, "Hearts and Masks," by Harold McGrath, and "Mary Minds Her Business," from the story which is now appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal. He is now negotiating for the rights to one of the biggest of Broadway successes, which same will be used as a vehicle for Billy Rhodes upon the completion of the one now in the making, "Hearts and Masks."

Sam Wood, assistant director to Cecil B. DeMille, has been rewarded for his long service under the DeMille banner and will assume the duties of a full-fledged director at the Lasky studio within a few weeks.

McRae's Oriental Expedition

Great Mass of Equipment for Serial Production; Cost Will Be $400,000

THE equipment and material which the Universal company is shipping with the Henry McRae oriental expedition to make a serial production is stupendous.

Mr. McRae is directing Marie Walcamp in her current serial, "The Petals of Lao-Tze," which will be filmed in the Far East.

The estimated cost of the trip for the serial is $400,000. Eighteen people instead of nine persons as was previously announced are making the expedition which left Universal City on September 13. The company will remain in the orient for six months, and "The Petals of Lao-Tze" will contain the historical settings of many different lands.

The weight of the chemicals shipped with the expedition totaled over three tons, 1800 pounds of sulphite of soda, 200 pounds of hydroquinone, 2,000 pounds of hypo and numerous other necessary chemicals for a complete film laboratory are included in the baggage.

The electrical equipment weighs over 10,000 pounds and is a miniature motion picture plant in itself. All the light effects that can be obtained in the most modern studio will be available for the McRae expedition in the orient. Spot-lights, flood-lights, arc lights, and electrical matches, in fact every imaginable sort of electrical contrivance, make up the $15,000 equipment.

Five thousand pounds of fireworks and flares are part of the baggage required for the filming of the night scenic effects.

Four moving picture cameras and 175,000 feet of film were shipped from Universal City for the expedition.

All the baggage is securely packed in tin-lined cases, and he McRae company carries more than a hundred such receptacles.

Fox Staff Gets Able Writers

Scenario Department Plans Surprises for Season; Well Known Authors Join

NEW Plans, just completed, and already in part effective by Fox Film Corporation for broadening the scope of their scenario department, promise to make this important branch of William Fox's production activities absolutely the leader in its field, according to an announcement just made.

Many entirely novel and unique ideas will be inaugurated in the preparation of the coming productions, and it is freely asserted that the staff now under the direction of Hamilton Thompson, Fox scenario editor, will furnish Fox stars with stories of a character and quality hitherto unsurpassed and rarely equalled.

Eminent authors have already contributed to the Fox program. Zane Grey's story "The Last of the Duanes" is William Farnum's latest starring vehicle. Louis N. Tracy gave to that Fox star, "Wings of the Morning." William Macleod Raine's well known story, "Eastward Ho" is now in process of making with William Russell as the featured artist. Edgar Franklin furnished the story for the photoplay, "The Web of Chance" which Peggy Hyland has found well suited to her talents. The scenario of "If I Were King" was done by E. Lloyd Sheldon, and William Farnum now is at work on this deluxe production. Frank L. Packard is responsible for "From Now On" starring the athletic George Walsh. Forrest Halsey has just sold to William Fox an original story, "Flame of the Flesh."

Julia Burnham, a writer on the staff of Fox Film Corporation wrote the original story "Lure of Ambition," which Theda Bara recently completed.

Firm Stops Slapstick Comics

Bull's-Eye Will No Longer Produce the Rough and Tumble Brand of Merriment

NO more slap-stick comedies from Bulls-Eye.

On instructions from Milton L. Cohen, Bulls-Eye president, Nat Spitzer, west coast studio manager, has wiped the Bulls-Eye comedy slate clean of everybody and everything connected with the old-type of comedy. According to Mr. Cohen, his firm will hereafter produce and release only "situation" comedies. The change in the Bulls-Eye policy affects many of the personnel of this concern who have been in its employ since the firm was organized.

In a statement Studio Manager Spitzer said: "New studio; new comedies. We think there's nothing too good for the movie fans in the comedy line. For the past five years I have either been distributing or producing 'slap-stick' comedies. Year after year the public's interest in that sort of production has been on the wane, until today there are but a few of the so-called successful producers of rough-neck comedies, the most of whom are subsidized by dramatic producers, who release the comedies along with their regular features, usually at a loss. The public does not care for too apparent foolishness on the screen."

The change in the Bulls-Eye plans will not affect the other releases of that firm, stated Mr. Spitzer, which are: The Gale Henry comedies, the Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness, the Weakly Indigestion and the new Holly Comedies, production of the latter having already started.

O'Brien at Work on Third for Selznick

Eugene O'Brien, who has been ill at his home in New York for several weeks, has recovered and it is announced at the Selznick studio this week that he has started work on his third Selznick attraction, "The Broken Melody," by Ouida Bergere. This production will follow Mr. O'Brien's first two Selznick pictures, "The Perfect Lover" and "Sealed Hearts."

An important fact in the production of "The Broken Melody" is the announcement by President Myron Selznick that he has engaged William P. S. Earle to be Mr. O'Brien's director. Mr. Earle arrived at the Fort Lee studios from the coast late last week. Lucy Cotton will be leading lady.

Labor Heads Indorse "World Aflame"

Unique tribute to a motion picture was paid last week in Salt Lake City, when all the delegates to the annual convention of the Utah Federation of Labor marched in a body to the Empress theatre to review Frank Keenan's "World Aflame." The audience also included the Mayor, Chief of Police, members of the Rotary Club of Salt Lake, and a number of members of the state legislature.

Subsequently, the labor convention passed resolutions "subscribing to the sentiments expressed in the picture, and heartily indorsing the photoplay."

"The Miracle Man" at Moss' Broadway

How a patriarch credited with remarkable healing powers turned out to be a healer of diseased hearts as well, is the striking theme of "The Miracle Man," which moved from the Rivoli to Moss' Broadway theatre, September 21. Thomas Meighan and Betty Compson are the featured players in this unusual photoplay production, which was directed by George Loane Tucker.

"The Miracle Man," whose original run at the George H. Cohan theatre was under the direction of B. S. Moss, and which has just completed a two week engagement at the Rivoli, returns to the B. S. Moss management at the Broadway theatre.

"Title More Valued than Story"

Hampton Believes It Has More Box Office Power

"IF I were to define box office more emphasis on the title of drawing power, I would put the play than I would on the story."

So said Jesse D. Hampton, former pioneer book and tobacco exploitation expert, discussing the advertising possibilities of "A Woman of Pleasure," a Pathe Special, starring Blanche Sweet.

"That may sound like a revolutionary statement, but successful book sellers, and manufacturers of other trade marked products, whose names are household bywords, agree with it in toto. It is more a question of getting attention, because like names of books, picture titles either attract or repel by their appeal.

"This statement does not underestimate the star, author, or director, because I am taking for granted that the production is completed and the picture is ready for the exhibitor to exploit. This then is the time when the title becomes alive and active and plays its part in making the picture a box-office attraction.

"If the title has money making possibilities—and every title should be conceived by the wide-awake producer with that idea foremost in mind—then the exhibitor has something around which he can build his appeal. If the title is a winner, all advertising should focus around that title.

"In all fairness to himself, the exhibitor should never tell the story to his patrons in any of his advertising, or run an advance synopsis in his program. To arouse the interest and keep that interest at high pitch, is the exhibitor angle for bringing patrons into his house. Anticipating is always better than realization.

"Take some of the biggest box-office bets, and see if the name, the title, didn't play a bigger part in the first flush of success than the story.

"Of course, these successes had a good story to back up their title, or else they would never have lasted, or have been permanent successes. But the title is the lure, your snappy show window, your interest-arouser, the magnet at the box office!

"The biggest book sales that we ever had in history were of stories with titles that attracted, with names that just flooded the mails with orders. The same thing happened in a nation-wide campaign for a smoking tobacco, you may have on your desk this minute, or a cigarette you may be smoking. After the title did its work, the book, the tobacco did its bit in keeping the patrons sold.

"In 'A Woman of Pleasure,' the same double-actioned combination is in evidence. The title is one that exhibitors can exploit to the fullest, and the story guarantees the title. 'A Woman of Pleasure' written by James Willard, first made its success as a melodrama, running for three seasons at the Adelphi theatre, London. Besides the title, the story is a clean wholesome heart drama that mingles tears and smiles in a measure that has box office value stamped all over it."

Four World Features Scheduled

An Eye to the "Different" Apparent in the Variety

WORLD PICTURES announced to exhibitors the release of four stellar photoplays on the program for October. These four screen productions, "The Oakdale Affair" directed by Oscar Apfel with Evelyn Greeley as the star; "Woman of Lies," starring June Elvidge; "The Black Circle," with Creighton Hale playing the lead, and "The Arizona Cat Claw," starring Edythe Sterling, visibly show an effort on the part of World Pictures to produce pictures of a "different" sort with a vigilant eye to their box office value.

"The Oakdale Affair," starring Evelyn Greeley, is scheduled for October 6. It is an original story from the pen of Edgar Rice Burroughs, well known as the author of the "Tarzan" stories and has a complication so thrilling as to readily stand comparison with the best Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes' tales. One of the novelties in the picture is the employment of a trained bear. Among those supporting Miss Greeley are Corrine Uzell, Charles Mackay, Reginald Denny, Maude Turner Gordon, Ben Johnson, Eric Dalton, Albert Hart and a couple score more. Oscar Apfel handled the direction.

On October 13, "Women of Lies" follows with June Elvidge in the star role. Forrest Halsey, a prominent magazine contributor, wrote the story and J. Clarkson Miller composed the continuity. Gilbert Hamilton directed the picture. Earl Metcalfe, who has acted with distinction in previous World Pictures will play the leading role opposite Miss Elvidge. A notable supporting company includes Charles Mackay, Gaston Glass, Lillian West, J. Laffey, Mrs. Fannie Cogan, J. Arthur Young, Marion Barney and others.

October 20 marks the release of "The Black Circle" with the favorite, Creighton Hale in the star role. Raymond C. Hill wrote the original story and Giles R. Warren adapted it for screen production. Mr. Hale will have Virginia Valli playing opposite him and the remainder of the cast includes Jack Drumier, Walter Horton, Clarette Clare, Edwin Denison, John Davidson, Eva Gordon and others of like repute.

On October 27, a truly novel picture, "The Arizona Cat Claw" with Edith Sterling as the star, is scheduled for release. This is a western melodrama of an altogether new type and gives Miss Sterling, who is an equestrienne of unlimited talent, an opportunity to display her unusual horsemanship. Leon T. Osborne is presenting Miss Sterling. William Bertram directed the picture and Charles Mortimer Peck created the original story. Among those supporting Miss Sterling are Gordon Sackville, Pauline Becker, Steve Clementi, William Quinin and Leo Maloney.

St. Louis Exhibitor Takes Fox Output

Joseph Erber, progressive manager of East St. Louis's largest and most up-to-date theatre, has contracted with the Chicago exchange of Fox Film Corporation to handle all first run pictures of this largest motion picture concern in the world. According to F. White of the Chicago Fox office, Mr. Erber will show the films on the same dates as they play the Fox theatres in St. Louis. Four days of capacity business, from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. with "Checkers," the Fox special feature, as the attraction, introduced Erber to the Fox program.

Real Press Book for "Lightning Bryce"

The Arrow Film Corporation is having prepared an unusual press book on its new serial "Lightning Bryce." It is said that this press book will contain nothing but material that can be utilized by exhibitors in exploiting the serial.

The publicity department of the Arrow Film Corporation is also preparing a fifteen-page colored insert for the trade papers. It is intended to advertise "Lightning Bryce" in a bigger way than any other serial has ever been advertised. A special advertising campaign has been arranged by Arrow for each of the state right buyers who have bought the serial. Special service will be given each of these exchanges, a number of novelties have been prepared and an unusual line of paper is being made by the Otis Lithographic Company.

A good part of the United States territory has been sold by Arrow as well as practically all of the foreign rights.

Strikes Galore, Still Prices Go Up

A strike of street car men on suburban lines, a strike of trolley employees in the city, a strike of telephone operators, a policemen's strike and more rain in the last month than usually falls in a whole season—that's the hard luck which Walter R. Scates, a Realart branch manager, cites as having flaunted itself this summer in the faces of Boston exhibitors. But, Mr. Scates hastens to add, it has not dampened the spirits of the exhibitors or long affected their profits.

Even now, the Realart man points out, with Boston confronted by the prospect of a strike of all union labor in sympathy with the discharged police force, there is no indication of worrying on the part of the theatre men. Indeed, they have recently advanced admission prices very generally throughout the New England territory, and none of them, so far as Mr. Scates has been able to learn, has had occasion to regret the action.

Myron Selznick announces that he has purchased an original story from Ouida Bergere, entitled "The Melody of Youth," which will be used as a vehicle for Eugene O'Brien.

Real Life-Drawing Is Made by Hy Mayer

With the advent of a new and novel motion picture of fashions milady can now not only see the latest creations but learn about the materials from which they are made as well.

Hy Mayer, whose drawings have amused and interested you for these many years, has lately produced a motion picture called "Dame Fashion Decrees" which seems bound to tickle the vanity of womankind. In it he has managed to introduce the very latest fashions of Paris and New York in such an interesting way as to make it a film that the ladies are sure to rave over.

First Mr. Mayer draws on the screen a picture of a model clothed in some new and ultra fashionable garment, then the model is brought to life and the actual coat, suit or gown shown just as it would look when worn at the opera, the afternoon tea or during milady's auto ride.

Jack and Harry Cohn have made distribution arrangements through the leading independent exchanges.

"Volcano" Books Well

Proof that a Broadway first-run is not essential to the success of a production is advanced in the big list of Hodkinson contract bookings on Augustus Thomas' timely Artco production, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird, which has been played or is scheduled for early presentation in hundreds of the nation's most popular theatres. Particularly is this true of the New York territory, where the Hodkinson manager, Marx Nathan, succeeded in getting early play dates on "The Volcano" at Jack Springer's Symphony and 77th Street Theatres, A. J. Wolf's Adelphi and David Picker's Bronx enterprises, the Ellsmere, the Victory and the Spooner.

Goldwyn Branch Shifts

The organization of Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges that they may be in every way equipped to handle Goldwyn's rapidly growing business, has been perfected to a point where few more changes in the management are contemplated. R. D. Burdge, who went to the Pittsburgh branch the first of September, has been appointed permanent manager and Ben Fish, who has been in Pittsburgh, has gone to Denver temporarily.

Much Expected of Farnum's Film

Berst Tells of Bigness and of the Cast in Support

EXHIBITORS with their ears to the ground in anticipation of forthcoming productions of the "bigger and better" species will find a matter of more than usual importance in the increasing number of reports from reliable sources that have been reaching the east concerning the forthcoming production in which Dustin Farnum will star and which is said to be making rapid progress at the Louis J. Gasnier, Astra Studios, at Glendale, Calif.

Indications are not wanting that that popular star's next feature is to set a new standard of magnificence and massiveness of production for Mr. Farnum and that the story which it picturizes calls for settings, costuming and cast entirely out of the ordinary. Information is now to hand from Los Angeles from J. A. Berst, who recently made the Western trip to give his personal attention to the work on the production now being directed by Colin Campbell and supervised by Louis J. Gasnier. Mr. Berst enjoys a wide reputation for carefulness of action and conservativeness of statement and consequently value attaches to his present pronouncement on the forthcoming Farnum production, temporarily titled "The Honor of His Family."

"I am more than gratified," Mr. Berst states, "by the condition and progress of the new Farnum offering I have found upon my arrival, and from what has already been accomplished as well as from the skillful and expert provision made for the scenes still remaining to be filmed I feel not the slightest hesitation in assuring the members of United Picture Theatres and exhibitors in general that Dustin Farnum's production to follow 'A Man's Fight' will prove from very viewpoint, whether of story, settings, directions, or cast, ample repayment in artistic and box office value for the long thought out plans and large expenditures devoted to the forthcoming offering by the officials of United and its advisory board, for the result, it is certain, will be a photodrama of extraordinary magnitude and appeal and a new standard of excellence for the Farnum productions.

"It is a fortunate coincidence that our recent arrangement with Mr. Gasnier to make the United western productions at the Glendale studios we have at hand the ruggedly magnificent island of Catalina, which lends itself so opportunely to the filming of many of the exterior scenes called for in the story selected. We will be able within a few days to abandon the present working title of "The Honor of His Family" and announce the permanent title, which will at once connect the forthcoming production with the name of one of the most famous European authors, and when that announcement is made the peculiar suitability of Catalina to our story will become apparent."

The cast, now first announced and which will support Dustin Farnum in the feature, comprises Winnifred Kingston, in the leading feminine role; Andrew Robson, Ogden Crane, J. Palvez, Sidney Payne, Fanny Midgley, Evett Mitchel, Tote Du Grow, Pearl Levier, Madame Mastine, Charles Clary and Wedgwood Nowell.

Educational's Expansion Policy

Hammons Outlines the Production Plans Now Arranged

CLOSE on the heels of the announcement of the enlarged Educational Films Corporation of America, by merger with two other motion picture concerns, with capital increased to $2,500,000, comes a statement from Vice-President E. W. Hammons outlining the production plans which have been so far arranged. With the intention being to extend the supremacy of the Educational organization in the production and distribution of short subjects on a world-wide basis, new production has been planned to conform with the exhaustive study of market conditions which Mr. Hammons has conducted during the past twelve months.

There has been an undoubted shortage of single-reel material, and the arrangements which Mr. Hammons has completed will provide a continuous source of new film to meet this demand. Five cameramen, each with complete equipment, have been established in European cities, and are to be permanent additions to the Educational staff. These men are to devote their entire time to the production of short-subject negative, of scenic, travel and educational value, which will be edited and titled in New York, and distributed through the Educational organization. This new group of five men, in combination with the official Red Cross cameramen, and the Educational cameramen at work in the United States, constitutes the largest number of staff photographers now engaged in exclusive short-subject production for any single organization.

Mr. Hammons bears emphasis on the fact that while increased capital makes it possible to increase the volume of production, it is the unusual value of five years' experience in the making of single-reels that holds up the Educational standard of quality. He points to the Bruce subjects as an example, and states that the experience gained in the making of eighty scenic films during the past five years is of greater consequence in determining the quality of the new Bruce Scenics for 1920 than any amount of money available for production. In Europe, single-reel production has practically been at a standstill since 1914. In hundreds of European theatres, the Bruce Scenics and other "Educational" subjects are sold regularly on contract, and European audiences thoroughly enjoy scenic films of "Educational" quality. But European producers will find no short and easy road to the duplication of this quality, and can only attain it through hard-earned experience.

The policy of scenic film producers, who announce that from five to thirty thousand feet of negative is "shot" for the making of a single-reel, Mr. Hammons characterizes as "amateurish" and extravagant waste. "It is never necessary to secure such an amount of negative if the cameraman knows his business and what he goes after. We prefer to spend a liberal portion of the cost of this excess footage in the employment of unusually good men, who command good salaries, are thoroughly competent and can deliver results. Literally, the woods are full of the type of men who simply grind out so much film for a day's work, and we try to avoid that sort by a very wide margin. Our men in the field return negative that is 85 per cent usable—not only satisfactory, but of sufficient quality to command the very highest prices in the scenic and educational field."

Shifting Population at Universal City

Universal City, California, one of the film capitals of the world, probably has the most changeable population of any city on earth. Normally its inhabitants number about 1500. This includes the executive staff of the movie town, the technical department, which includes artists, architects, carpenters, electricians, and the many other mechanics and artisans employed in planning and building the "sets," the laboratory department, with its hundreds of film experts and sundry other attaches.

But each of three directors may require "mobs" on the same day. The call for the "extras" goes forth, and the next day several thousand new faces appear at Universal City.

Selznick Pictures offer Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," distributed by Select

Kay Laurel's Cast

J. M. Shear, Shear and company, producing a series of special features starring Kay Laurel, who was last seen on the screen as leading woman for Wally Reid in "The Valley of the Giants," and who was the featured member of the cast seen in Rex Beach's, "The Brand," announces the supporting members of the cast in Miss Laurel's first Shear production. Robert Elliott, E. Fernandez, R. H. Fitzsimmons, Olive West, Tom Burroughs, Miss Saville, James Hill and Fred Dalton are seen in the principal supporting roles. Jack O'Brien, who has directed such well known stars as Mary Pickford, Virginia Pearson and others, is personally directing Miss Laurel in her first picture for Shear and company. Larry Williams, formerly of Famous Players-Lasky, is cameraman.

Ben Grimm Goes to Select from Wid's

Ben H. Grimm, best known in film circles through his connections with motion picture trade publications, has been added to the publicity staff of Select. Mr. Grimm has had both editorial and advertising experience on daily newspapers. Grimm transfers his services to Select from the staff of Wid's Daily, of which he was associate editor. Before the war he was on the staff of the Moving Picture World. After serving in the air services, United States Army for a year and a half, he returned to the World and a short time later went to Wid's.

Selznick's National Ad Company

Contracts closed this week by Lewis J. Selznick place the Selznick Pictures Corporation in the front rank of national advertisers. The culminating move in the campaign to keep Selznick Pictures constantly before the theatre-going public of the United States was the placing of a large order for space in the three Curtis Publishing Co. publications, The Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal and Country Gentleman. This brings the total appropriation for the campaign for the coming year up to one of the largest amounts ever expended in a similar length of time by any company.

Comedian to Resume Work

Word Received from Coast Indicates Harold Lloyd Recovers from Injuries

THE first definite information reaching the Pathe office regarding the condition of Harold Lloyd, the noted comedian, since President Roach of the Rolin Film Company wired east that he was not seriously injured, was contained in a telegram received last week by the Home Office from Manager Carmichael of the Los Angeles Pathe Exchange.

According to Mr. Carmichael, Lloyd has now sufficiently recovered to warrant the statement that he will be able to resume work on his new $100,000 series of two reel comedies, within the next four weeks.

Mr. Carmichael's telegram, dated September 16, stated:

"Saw Lloyd today. He looks fine. His face not injured in any way. Eye doing nicely. Will not be affected. Worst feature loss of part of thumb and index finger which can be easily camouflaged. He expects to be able to work in a few weeks. Personally feel his future will not be affected in any way."

For several days it was feared that Lloyd would be out of the running, so far as screen work was concerned. It was thought that one eye would be lost, but the fears were unfounded, because there will not be a mark on his face.

Lloyd could delay his return to the screen until after the new year, if it were necessary, for he is now four months ahead of his schedule. The benefits of working ahead of schedule is manifested in the case of Lloyd, for he would have been placed in a dire predicament if he were not ahead of his work when he was laid low by an accident.

Pathe has already listed for release four of his new $100,000 offerings, which include "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth" originally known as "When Do We East" and "His Royal Slyness."

"The Brat" Breaking Records

Two Crandall Houses Report High Mark Exceeded; Take Entire Year's Output

"THE BRAT," the latest Nazimova production to be released by Metro, broke house records for attendance recently when it was shown in the Metropolitan and Knickerbocker, two of the seven big Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C. The showing at the Metropolitan, Washington's largest and finest motion picture theatre, commenced on Sunday, September 14, and the attendance was unprecedented.

An extensive publicity campaign had preceded the showing, and only part of the crowds that sought admission to the theatre would be accommodated. The day following, "The Brat" was shown at the Knickerbocker, and the results were quite as remarkable as at the Metropolitan. Special musical programs were provided in honor of the occasion, and box-office records in both of these theatres were completely demolished, while the box-offices continued to turn 'em away.

News of the gratifying results of "The Brat's" presentation was communicated by Harry M. Crandall, proprietor of the Crandall theatres in Washington, to George W. Fuller, manager of the Metro Exchange in the National capital. Mr. Fuller, in turn, forwarded the message to the home office in New York. The result of the showing demonstrated anew the great drawing power of the Nazimova productions, and indorsed the soundness of Mr. Crandall's judgment in recently booking the entire Metro output for 1919-20 for his chain of seven Washington theatres.

Carewe Head of Organization

Lines Up with Pathe; Soon Leaves for France; "Right to Lie" First Picture

EDWIN CAREWE, for many years one of the foremost directors of motion pictures, has formed his own producing unit, and will distribute through Pathe, according to an announcement from the Pathe offices this week. In his five years as director for Metro, Mr. Carewe recorded some of the best known screen achievements of the period, and his association with Pathe is expected to result in further triumphs for him.

The certificate of incorporation of the Edwin Carewe Productions, Inc., names Mr. Carewe as president and Harry Cahane, of New York, as treasurer. Mr. Cahane has become prominent in motion picture production affairs recently through his association with the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc.

Mr. Carewe plans to produce no more than four big special features yearly. He is going to Europe shortly to produce Paul Potter's famous stage play, "The Girl of the Moulin Rouge," which very likely will be third of his series of independent releases through Pathe. Dolores Casinelli will be the star, and Mr. Carewe proposes to take an entire technical staff on his trip.

Already through Adolphe Osso, who is now abroad looking after the foreign division of the Cahane interests, Mr. Carewe has made all plans for his European trip. Upon his arrival in France, Mr. Carewe will be guest of the French Society of Authors and Composers.

"The Right to Lie," Jane Murfin's most successful work since "Lilac Time," the play in which Jane Cowl made a hit several seasons ago, will be Mr. Carewe's first production for Pathe. Dolores Cassinelli, the noted "Cameo Girl" beauty, is star of the special production, which Pathe will release in seven reels as one of its biggest specials of the year.

Mr. Carewe's studio staff, including Assistant Director Wallace W. Fox, Cameraman Frank Zucker, Assistant Cameraman George Hommel and Technical Director Jack Shultz, will accompany Mr. Carewe on his trip abroad.

Campaign to Exploit "The Vigilantes"

The Arrow Film Corporation will shortly start an advertising campaign to exploit the seven-reel feature, "The Vigilantes." This picture was made by the D. W. Griffiths associates, and has already been released. "The Vigilantes" is to the West what "The Birth of a Nation" was to the South. It is said to be a massive production, with wonderful scenery and direction and excellent photography. Arrow is state righting this picture, and a good part of the country has already been sold and in some territories the picture has had successful runs.

Bessie Barriscale a Doctor in Her Latest

Bessie Barriscale in her latest photo-play, "Kitty Kelly, M.D.," a Robertson-Cole production released through Exhibitors Mutual, is seen in the role of a woman doctor in a small mining town in the West and the situation developed when the whole male population of the town suddenly decides to become ill creates a real screen comedy. Epidemic after epidemic hits the male element until all the women in town are wondering what can the matter be. "Kitty Kelly, M.D.," is the reason of course.

Robertson-Coles on Five St. Louis Screens

Robertson-Cole productions distributed by Exhibitors Mutual completely held St. Louis, Mo., on a recent Sunday when five of their features were playing in the theatres there and all of them were heavily advertised. The showing occurred without any special drive or effort although a glance at the amusement pages of the St. Louis papers of that day would lead one to believe that it was the result of a big Robertson-Cole campaign.

Players Re-engaged by B. A. Rolfe

Four of the players who appeared in "The Amazing Lovers," the first B. A. Rolfe production to be presented through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., have been re-engaged to play important parts in "The Red Virgin," which the Fischer firm is now casting for immediate production. They are Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe and John L. Shine.

The engagement of this quartet indicates the calibre of the cast that will enact the newest Rolfe production. With additions to be made the cast will be in the nature of an all-star assemblage.

An Exceptional Feature with Pearl White

As proof that a serial can thrill, mystify and grip the interest of the public without once resorting to physical "stunts" and what has justly become known as serial trickery, Pathe pointed to its release on November 9th, "The Black Secret," based on the novel, "In Secret" by Robert W. Chambers, and starring Pearl White.

"The Black Secret" is a modern story of love, romance and adventure and mystery, and is entirely free from such serial "kokum" as master crooks, supernatural beings, mysterious bands of conspirators and "the papers."

Fineman Goes West

B. P. Fineman, president of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, which releases the Katherine MacDonald productions through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and the Burlingham Travel Pictures through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left last Tuesday for Los Angeles, accompanied by Henry Herzbrun, secretary, counsel for the Attractions Distributing Corporation.

Rothacker Scenics Sold for Scandinavia

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company is in receipt of a cablegram from its foreign agent, David P. Howells, at Stockholm, Sweden, that he has disposed of the Scandanavian rights to the Rothacker scenics "Outdoors."

Big Battle Scene in Neilan Film

Historical Moments Relived in "The Eternal Three"

AN elaborately staged screen spectacle of Custer's Last Fight, known historically as the famous Sioux Massacre of 1876, will be one of the big moments in "The Eternal Three," Marshall Neilan's adaptation of "Bob Hampton of Placer," the story by Randall Parrish, which will be Mr. Neilan's initial release through First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Custer's Last Fight is one of the best descriptive parts in Mr. Parrish's story. The heroic battle offers Mr. Neilan a great opportunity for visualizing, as an adjunct to his dramatic narrative, one of the most important events in the westward march of civilization.

"It is my ambition to stage a screen version of this famous battle that will be a genuine accomplishment in motion pictures," said Mr. Neilan. "Although it is only one of many features in 'The Eternal Three,' every modern facility in motion picture production will be employed in this effort, including the taking of views from an aeroplane.

"As stated by the author of the book himself, however daring the pen, it cannot but falter when attempting to picture the events of three hours of victorious defeat. The wonderful description of this battle, by Mr. Parrish in 'Bob Hampton of Placer,' proved one of the most popular topics of discussion in speaking of the merits of the book. If the motion picture is truly more effective than the printed word, and every facility of staging motion pictures can bring it about, this visualization of the last gallant stand of the Old Seventh should prove the most fitting description ever accorded that great dramatic event in American history."

The story of Bob Hampton is conceded to be the best work of Randall Parrish, whose many popular books have placed him among the foremost writers of western stories. Among his other works are "When Wilderness Was King," "My Lady of the North," "My Lady of the South." "Sword of the Old Frontier," etc. Laid in Montana and Wyoming at the time of the Sioux uprising in 1876, the action of the plot culminates in the dramatic description of the Custer Massacre, where Bob Hampton, after fifteen years of exile, receives his great opportunity of "fighting with the Old Seventh" and straightens out a tangle of many years' duration which brings happiness to various persons whose future he has shadowed.

Thousands of people will be used in these big scenes which will be staged in the locale of the story. In the cast will be such well known artists as Marjorie Daw, Lewis Stone, Mahalon Hamilton and Wesley Barry, Mr. Neilan's little freckle-faced actor. Other players are now being cast for the various characters of the story.

Mr. Neilan has just returned to his studio in Hollywood, after spending a month in New York.

Big Expedition on Way to Wilds

Famous-Lasky Working with Museum of Natural History

TELEGRAMS recived by W. O. Hurst, production manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announce that the expedition, including Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., which the Educational Department sent into British Columbia to film rare animals for the Paramount-Magazine, has arrived at Banff, Alberta, and is ready to start on the second leg of its journey into an unexplored part of the Canadian Rockies. In sending the expedition Mr. Hurst is working in co-operation with the American Museum of Natural History, which is trying to obtain motion pictures of several rare animals of which it has no specimens in its collection.

From now on, for the next month, the party will be beyond the reach of civilization except by courier. They are going through a part of the Canadian Rockies which has never felt the foot of a white man, and will have to depend on the instinct of their guides rather than on definite data regarding topography and direction. It is in this section, which is in the heart of the big game territory of the Canadian Rockies, that the party expects to find the rare animals for which the American Museum of Natural History is seeking. The party is expected to be gone six weeks, it is said.

Despite the enormous cost of the expedition, which will entail the employment of numerous native guides and assistants, beside a big pack train, Mr. Hurst planned the expedition because of the unusual entertainment and educational value which lies in pictures of rare animals and in unexplored parts of the earth. It is estimated that the expedition will cost $50,000.

"The Paramount-Magazine," said Mr. Hurst, in outlining his plans, "has long been looked upon as the standard in the magazine type of motion pictures, and in sending this party into the unexplored wilds of the Canadian Rockies we are merely pursuing our policy of obtaining the very best photographic material possible. We have staff camera men stationed all over the world, shooting interesting scenes for the magazine, and the pictures we hope to procure on this expedition will be along the lines we have laid down in making the magazine—to obtain unusual, interesting and entertaining subjects wherever they may be found."

George H. Sherwood, acting director of the American Museum of Natural History, is enthusiastic over the rich scientific data which the party plans to obtain.

The expedition is headed by L. W. Hutchins, who has established a reputation for the successful conduct of parties into the obscure places of the earth. It was Mr. Hutchins who headed the famous Lorenz expedition in its search for the buried treasures of the Incas, in the mountains of Peru. He is an experienced motion picture man and has made a number of pictures for scientific and governmental bodies, and on this expedition will act as director in the motion picture work.

Young Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., is going with the expedition as a reporter for the New York Herald, this being one of his first assignments.

Fox Film Corporation declares William Farnum has another great character part in "The Last of the Duanes"

Pathe to Release "Twin Pawns"

THE list of features scheduled for fall release by Pathe, has been augumented by the addition of "Twin Pawns," a drama in five reels, starring Mae Murray.

"Twin Pawns" was produced by the Acme Pictures Corporation and directed by Leonce Perret, the noted French director—the same combination responsible for "The Thirteenth Chair," a production now breaking all records for Pathe distribution.

The latest Pathe attraction, adapted by Mr. Perret from "The Women in White," Wilkie Collins' famous novel, is thoroughly Americanized and modernized, and contains numbers of costly big scenes and elaborate interior sets.

The advertising accessories arranged for "Twin Pawns" are the most elaborate any exhibitor could desire on a screen production. The campaign book is recommended by Pathe as a model and is assuredly one of the most attractive ever issued on any Pathe picture. The frontispiece is the work of a master artist, showing Miss Murray, as the sister of wealth, with a beautiful Russian wolfhound at her side looking into a mirror.

Commensurate with the largeness of this production, Director Perret surrounded Miss Murray with the finest type of supporting cast in which Warner Oland, the "prince of screen villains" has a prominent part. J. W. Johnston, cast in many popular features, and Henry G. Sell, favorably known by his fine leading work in serials, are others who have leading roles.

Miss Murray, who at times has been referred to as "the maid of many moods" exhibits all of them in the production of "Twin Pawns." The attractive young star plays a dual role, delineating twin sisters whose respective environments are totally diversified. Throughout the drama the roles call for characterizations which run almost the entire gamut of the human emotions.

Mr. Perret's direction is a noteworthy feature of "Twin Pawns." Since coming to America he has directed many spectacular productions, such as "The Unknown Love," "Lafayette, We Come" and "The Thirteenth Chair," the latter being the crowning achievement of his career in the United States.

Locations and settings in "Twin Pawns" are effective in their versimilitude to the scenes demanded by the story. Costly draperies and furnishings are said to be used with a lavish hand in the wealthy steel magnate's home. On the other hand, the soridness of slum dwellings is accentuated in the poverty-stricken flat in the first part of the story.

Acme Production Dated for Program of Sept. 28

Dillon to Direct Bert Lytell's Next

Jack Dillon, who has had a varied career on the stage, before the camera and as a director, has been chosen by Director General Maxwell Karger to direct Bert Lytell's next Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Right of Way," by Sir Gilbert Parker. "The Right of Way" follows Bert Lytell's characterization of Tito Lombardi, the man modiste in "Lombardi, Ltd.," by the Hattons.

Ovey Comedy Is Ready

The first release of a new brand of Gayety Comedies, featuring George Ovey, has been completed. The first comedy of the new brand is entitled "Dropped Into Scandal" and was written and directed by Craig Hutchinson, who is in charge of production for all comedies made by the new corporation.

George Ovey is supported by Lillian Biron and a feature cast.

Where Stage and Screen Part

Holubar Points Out That in Scenic Requirements They Are Widely Separated

"ALTHOUGH the stage and the screen may be closely allied in some of their phases, such as relate to plot and dramatic action, they are as far removed as the poles in the matter of scenic requirements. The stage attempts to create an illusion, while the screen faithfully mirrors nature.

This statement was made by Allen Holubar of Universal who is one of the directors in the motion picture world who have achieved the highest success.

"Since Edward Gordon Craig introduced the new impressionistic art to the theatre there have been many theories—some sensible and others pure buncombe—advanced and tried out in connection with stage settings and lighting effects. Some have proved practical for the theatre and others were quickly discarded. Some of the innovations appealed to the theatrical producers because of their economy of construction and transportation, while they pleased an audience because of their absolute simplicity—a relief from the elaborate productions to which the managers of the realistic school had accustomed them.

However, none of these innovations apply to the motion picture production, for, as I have before pointed out, the screen and the stage differ fundamentally so far as the settings are concerned. Stage settings for the spoken drama must convince only the human eye, which may be easily deceived. A certain combination of lights on certain plain backgrounds may create an illusion that will satisfy in the theatre. Canvas and paint may be made to give the effect of reality. But the stage setting for the motion picture must be made for the camera lens, which is a thousand times more keen than the human eye. Nothing but Nature, pure and unalloyed can be employed for the motion picture. Anything else would be so palpably unreal as to excite laughter instead of admiration.

Rippling lights will never suggest Niagara Falls on the screen, nor a deep shadow a forest. If we must have a cataract on the screen, it must be the real article or an actual reproduction. No half-way measures will deceive the eye of the camera.

First Picture of Formosa Ever Made

The September 28th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, titled "Taihoku, the Metropolis of Formosa," is said to have the distinction of being the first motion picture of Formosa ever issued. The views were taken by Herdord T. Cowling, Mr. Holmes' chief cinematographer, who returned early this year from a long trip to out-of-the-way corners of the Orient.

Pathe Offers "Gay Old Dog" October 2

Pathe Exchange has fixed upon Nov. 2 as the date of release of "A Gay Old Dog," a feature for which great popularity is confidently expected, offering, as it does, four names with undisputed drawing ability.

John Cumberland, Hobart Henley, Mrs. Sidney Drew, and Edna Ferber, the writer, are those whose names are counted on to make this production go over big.

Corinne Griffith's feature, following "The Climbers" by Clyde Fitch, which is now nearing completion, will be "The Tower of Jewels," written especially for the Vitagraph star by Lucien Hubbard.

Two latest Prizma pictures in nature's colors are "Eden of the Pacific" and "The Hell of the Yukon."

About New Pictures

Darrell Foss is the first actor engaged by Maxwell Karger, Director General, for May Allison's support in "The Walk-Offs," to be picturized by Screen Classics.

Constance Talmadge's second First National picture, which like "A Temperamental Wife," is an Emerson-Loos production, has been definitely titled "A Virtuous Vamp" instead of "The Bachelor," as it was originally called.

V. P. Whittaker, general representative of Select Pictures Corporation, is making a tour of some of the western exchanges in the interests of the sales department.

Mary Miles Minter, director William D. Taylor and the entire company which supports the star in her initial Realart picture, "Anne of Green Gables," returned to New York City last week. They have been away for almost two months, making exterior scenes.

William Seiter, who for the past eight months has directed Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in their many comedy successes, has been selected by William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, to direct Billie Rhodes in her forthcoming production, "Hearts and Masks," from the novel by that name by Harold McGrath.

Ann Little and Jack Hoxie, co-starring in "Lightning Bryce" at the National Studios, are shooting the final scenes of the eighth episode, under the direction of Paul Hurst.

World Pictures will have ready for distribution this coming week a new Prizma natural color picture, entitled "The Last of the Seminoles."

Alice Joyce is making rapid progress on "Pride," the story by William B. Courtney, in which she again assumes the "daughter of luxury" type of character.

"In Honor's Web" offers Harry T. Morey the last opportunity he will have to portray the successful business man and society gentleman for some time to come. In his next feature, "The Darkest Hour," he has a dual role of a society man and a lumberjack.

Tom Moore, president of Moore's Theatres Corporation of Washington, D. C., has fund in "Evangeline," the William Fox big special production of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal poem, one of the greatest presentations of the year.

"Bird Cliff Dwellers," a study of bird life, has the lead-off position in the Goldwyn Bray Pictograph to be released through the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges, October 2. Other subjects in what promises to be an exceptional issue, are "Nicea-da-Banan" and "The Origin of the Shimmy, or Getting a Story."

"A Misfit Earl," Louis Bennison's latest Betzwood-Goldwyn photoplay, is now finished, and prints have been shipped to the twenty-two Goldwyn distributing branches throughout the country for release October 1.

Harrison Ford, Famous Players-Lasky leading man, has been selected to play the lead opposite Marguerite Clark in her next production, which will be made in New York.

Colin Campbell is to direct the new Dustin Farnum screen drama for United Picture Theatres, according to an announcement by J. A. Berst.

Billie Rhodes Knew Her Right Field

Three marked Billie Rhodes successes in a row would seem to indicate that the little ingenue star knew just what she was doing the day she walked into the sanctum of William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, after completing work on her last Christie comedy, and announced to the producer of "Tarzan," with whom she had signed to appear in comedies, that henceforth big feature productions were to be her specialty.

"Billie Rhodes is successful because she's so different," remarked Louis William Chaudet, who has directed the dainty star ever since her transition from the two-reel comedies to the big production field.

Work on Harold MacGrath's "Hearts and Masks," Billie Rhodes' second production for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is progressing rapidly at the National Film Corporation's Studios at Hollywood, California.

Strike No Hindrance to Universal Activities

Despite the fact that many of the West Coast studios are or have been held up from production because of the studio workers' strike Universal at the beginning of this week had by actual count eighteen separate companies working at Universal City. Eleven of these companies were working on super-productions and feature photoplays. The remainder were actively engaged in producing short subjects and serial dramas.

Perhaps the greatest activity centered around the newest Priscilla Dean vehicle "The Beautiful Beggar" which was formerly called "The Virgin of Stamboul," from the story by H. Van Loan. The story which has an Oriental atmosphere will require many massive and elaborate sets and within the past few weeks the studio carpenters have practically completed the sets. Tod Browning is directing Miss Dean.

R. William Neill, who has just finished the actual work of directing "The Bandbox," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series of pictures being produced by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., and released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is now devoting his time to the final cutting and finishing touches.

New York is the Film Center

Realart Officials Finding This True Decide Not to Open Foreign Branches

AN investigation conducted by Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, has convinced him that New York has been so thoroughly established as the center of the world market for photoplays that it will be unnecessary for Realart to open foreign branches this year. The foreign business of Realart will be handled exclusively through the general offices.

As John S. Woody, Realart's general manager, states the case: "New York now is virtually only 100 miles from any part of the film world. It has long been regarded as the center of picture activities on the American continents, and as a consequence of the war its sphere of influence has been vastly broadened. For many months the United States have had little or no competition in picture production. Buyers have turned to this market because it was the only one available, and there has developed here as a result a strong buying organization which competing nations, even after they have resumed production, will have much difficulty in uprooting.

"Practically every foreign dealer in motion pictures is now represented in New York. Branch offices, personal agents and general agents are employed. In several instances we have been approached regarding Realart productions by banks which desired to buy for foreign accounts."

Business arrangements can be conducted here, it is pointed out, with the same speed as through representatives in the foreign field. The financial side of the transaction can be carried through in its entirety in New York. And many details can be settled much more promptly right here in the home offices than would be possible in doing business through a foreign branch of the producing organization.

When a picture is ready to be shown to foreign buyers, it is pointed out in the Realart statement, the producer can reach practically every foreign field in half an hour. All that is necessary is for him to use the telephone.

Further than saving time, money and trouble, Realart officials argue, its plan with regard to foreign sales will react to the benefit of the purchaser. Naturally there will be eliminated the large expense of maintaining many offices in all parts of the world.

Samuel Goldwyn Returning

Spent Two Months at Coast Studios on Plans for Production Enlargement

AFTER a stay of nearly two months at the Culver City Studio, Samuel Goldwyn left California last week bound for New York. The head of the Goldwyn Producing and Distributing Corporation may make a few stops for conferences on the way East, but they will not be of long duration, and unless his plans are suddenly changed he will be found in his New York office before the close of this week.

Mr. Goldwyn went to Culver City soon after the Shubert-Woods-Selwyn deal had been consummated, and the capitalization of the corporation increased from three million to twenty million dollars. He was at the production headquarters to supervise the enlargement of the plans of the company, to confer with Rex Beach, Rupert Hughes and Mary Roberts Rinehart in the presentation of Eminent Authors' Pictures and to supervise the starting of the other elaborate photoplays scheduled to follow the fall series, the subjects in which have been completed.

During Mr. Goldwyn's stay on the coast, the studio space was enlarged so that now there are nine fully equipped stages kept in constant use. Jack Pickford arrived to start work on his first Goldwyn Picture, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom," new directors were added to the working force, and the repertory company, that is proving of great value in the maintenance of superior casts for all of the productions, was enlarged.

Adventure Scenics Passed

Well-Known Men in Northwest in the Corporation; First Four Approved

JESSE G. SILL and H. H. Brownell are two important figures that have supplied the dynamics to the production of "Adventure Scenics" the unique out-of-door pictures recently contracted by Robertson-Cole. The personnel of the "Adventure Scenics" corporation also includes John Rantz, one of the most progressive exhibitors of the Pacific Northwest and owner of the picture palace at Brementon, Washington.

Thirty-one-reel pictures have been arranged for by Robertson-Cole of these registered and trade-marked "Adventure Scenics." The reviewing committee states that for thrill and transcendent beauty, it would be hard to surpass them.

All are graphically titled, so that the essential features, which could not be elucidated by mere display of scene alone—by the law of suggestion, are clarified and happily anticipated by the audience.

Mr. Rantz, who has also won his spurs as a scenario writer, is now at the University of California, busily engaged at working on the preparation of the scenarios. The novelty of "Adventure Scenics" is indicated in the interrelation of a compelling story and pertinent to these visions of hitherto unknown regions. These specially prepared scenarios epitomises the verities by showing man in harmony with Nature.

The reviewing committee of Robertson-Cole are emphatic in their approval of the first four of the releases which include "I and the Mountain," a picturization of the grandeur and enchantment of the Oregon ranges; a graphic illustration of the thrilling shooting of the rapids of the Salmon River, in the State of Idaho, and entitled "The Forbidden River" and "Just Over Yonder," revealing the romance of the Oregon trails; and "The Last Resort," a glowing panorama of the clouded heights and the serene spaces in a National Reserve of this zone.

Vitagraph has purchased the book "Pegeen" for a Bessie Love production

Sales Made by Hodkinson Export Dept.

Foreign sales made during the past week by the Hodkinson Export Department include that of "A White Man's Chance," J. Warren Kerrigan's first in his series of ten Robert Brunton productions, for Brazil to J. De Aragon, representing one of Rio de Janeiro's big capitalists and Brazilian agent for a score of European banking houses.

The Hodkinson organization also announces the sale of Mr. Kerrigan's newest Robert Brunton production, "The Joyous Liar," to Mr. De Aragon. The Gaumont Company of London, which recently obtained "A White Man's Chance" for Great Britain and Ireland, has also purchased the rights to "The Joyous Liar" for the United Kingdom. The negotiations were made through F. G. Bradford, Gaumont manager for America.

Prints of "A White Man's Chance" have already been received at the London Gaumont office.

Improvements Made in Bull's-Eye Studios

An enclosed stage measuring 2,400 square feet, fully equipped with powerful lights and effects mechanisms, is one of the features of the new Bulls-Eye comedies studios on Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. Besides being one of the largest "dark" stages in Hollywood the new Bulls-Eye acquisition contains an elaborate series of cooling vents, making the stage the most comfortable working platform in filmland, according to Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls-Eye.

Chicago Acclaims a Universal Picture

Reports from Chicago indicate that Universal's production, "The Right to Happiness," opened to a complete success at the Olympic theatre there on Saturday night, September 13. Without one exception the larger Chicago daily papers praised this production as few pictures are spoken of.

A number of the prominent women and men of the city were present and Mr. Laemmle after the performance was congratulated by many of them.

According to many of the photoplay critcis this presentation was the best Chicago has ever witnessed. The Chicago press comments are listed in part as follows.

Lloyd Lewis of Chicago Herald Examiner says, "The acting of Dorothy Phillips in the dual roles of both daughters is superb. In fact her work as the spitfire leader of the reds is by far the best emotional acting she has ever done on the screen. The picture as a picture is forceful and appealing and it will prosper."

MacLinee, critic of the Chicago Daily Tribune, said about Dorothy Phillips—"This time you will admit she does good work, thoughtful work, and in several instances almost inspired work."

Genevieve Harris of the Chicago Evening Post said—"Here is positive proof that D. P. is a great actress and that Allen Holubar is a great director. Here we have an original story up to the minute, based on a vital theme, and presented in such a way that you can't help enjoying its story. The picture is going to be very popular I predict because it appeals to the emotions without insulting the intelligence. It has an unusually dramatic and stirring denouement. Director Hol has handled this story most artistically. Very interesting and well staged are the scenes which begin the story. The work of Dorothy Phillips will delight her admirers and be a revelation to those who haven't considered her especially talented. If you enjoy good pictures you can't afford to miss this."

Select in New Haven; New Branch Heads

In order to relieve the congestion in the New York and New England territories, Select Pictures Corporation announces that October 6 it will open a new exchange in New Haven. Morris Safier, who until the present time has been a salesman attached to Select's Boston branch, has been appointed manager of the New Haven office.

The New Haven branch will be located at 19 Port Sea street, opposite the new Union Station.

General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select, this week announces that new branch managers have been appointed for two other Select exchanges, G. C. Reid is now manager of the Select branch at Kansas City, succeeding A. H. McLaughlin, resigned, and Ben Rogers, formerly manager of the Fox exchange in Washington, beginning next week will be manager of Select's Boston branch. Mr. Rogers succeeds D. J. Selznick, who sails for Melbourne.

F. P. Signs DeHaven Team

Series of Sixteen Comedies Planned for Them; Augments the Large Comedy Program

STARTING probably in November, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release a series of comedies starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. Announcement of the signing of the contract with the De Havens was made during the week by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President in Charge of Production. There will be sixteen comedies in the series, each two reels in length, and they will be known as Paramount-Artcraft Comedies.

The De Havens for some time have been recognized as one of the cleverest comedy teams on the screen. Before going into pictures both enjoyed great popularity in vaudeville and musical comedy, Mrs. De Haven in her independent appearance being known by her own name, Flora Parker. It was at the outset of his career that Mr. De Haven organized the Carter De Haven Vaudeville and Farce Comedy Company and a short time later the De Haven Trio. Following an engagement with Weber and Fields, Mr. De Haven was featured in "The Girl in the Taxi."

Mrs. De Haven, meawhile, was featured as the queen in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

The addition of the Paramount-De Haven Comedies makes a total of seven comedy series to be distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the coming year. These include the Mack Sennett, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Ernest Truex, Al St. John and De Haven comedies, of two reels each, and the Briggs and "So This Is America" series of single reelers. Moreover with the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, Paramount Magazine and Burlingham Scenics, all of single reel length, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is enabled to offer to exhibitors the choice of no less than four series of short subjects, a sufficient number, it is pointed out, to supply the entire needs of houses of all classes in this line of productions.

"Turn of Road" is Drawing

King Vidor's Production for Robertson-Cole Reported as in Wide Demand

EXPRESSIONS of approval as indicated in the desire of a multitude of exhibitors to repeat "The Turn in the Road" for return bookings, is evidenced by the multitude of letters, daily received by Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual through whom the picture is released.

"The Turn in the Road," one of a series of successes of that youthful writer and producer, King W. Vidor carries an especial appeal, not only to the regular patron of the screen, but also to that varient in amusements, the lovers of a story redolent of the soil. While there are intense moments of big drama in "The Turn in the Road" and a succession of strongly, contrasting situations, its emotional quality and perspective of the homely and human currents of the average life are the factors that are the indication of this, plays wonderful attraction worth. All these simple and delightful touches to this story are so deftly projected that there is no line of demarkation between the tears and laughter so fast they follow. These are brief hints to the wide range of the salient points of this play.

That there is an insistent demand for the screen play which reflects the quest of the soul for solution of the vexing problems that beset it, especially if the setting and background make for beauty, reality and hint of hope and promise, is evidenced in the record of this subject.

Cosmopolitan Advances Art

Acquisition of Noted Artists for Poster Work a Distinct Achievement

ONE of the most important of recent announcements comes from Cosmopolitan Productions, Inc., which for some time has been negotiating with famous artists, colorists and painters to obtain their signatures in order that they execute all of the art work of Cosmopolitan Productions.

The names of Howard Chandler Christy and Penrhyn Stanlaws, artists of international repute, head Cosmopolitan's list.

Mr. Christy has already executed for Cosmopolitan Productions an exquisite art accompaniment for their first feature, covering everything from posters, 4-sheets and panels to a vividly beautiful painting of Marion Davies, star of the production illustrated.

Mr. Stanlaws, too, has completed already a de luxe art accompaniment to another Cosmopolitan Production, the name and stars of which have not yet been disclosed.

George Kerr Baker and Henry B. Eddy, celebrated colorists, are mentioned among the artists of renown who have placed their signatures to long-time contracts with Cosmopolitan Productions. Mr. Eddy is an honor graduate of Harvard University. In the Fine Arts course there he specialized in Aesthetics, and more particularly in the theory and practice of color.

It is the idea of Cosmopolitan officials to use in important theatres paintings by famous artists of the star of the feature, and to photograph these master pieces of art so that exhibitors in small and large cities may use them in their lobby displays, an aid to exhibitors which has never before been attempted.

The art work alone on the initial Cosmopolitan Production, which bore Mr. Christy's signature, ran into several thousand dollars for a single painting, the benefit of which is reaped by exhibitors and showmen throughout the country.

The signing of these artists is a distinct step forward in the exploitation of feature productions, and one which has already attracted the most enthusiastic attention.

Two House Organs for Kansas City Doric

Adolph M. Eisner, manager of the Doric Theatre at Kansas City for the Curtis interests, announces the publication and installation of two widely different "organs."

The first is a "house organ" of twenty pages, handsomely illustrated and with a highly calandered cream cover in two colors. In addition to many newsy items about the stars and coming attractions, Mr. Eisner has secured some commercial advertising which helps the cost of each of the weekly editions.

But the second "organ" is solely for musical purposes and is now being installed at the Doric at a big expense. It is heralded as an exceptional musical instrument in tonal qualities.

Manager Eisner declares that the season opened big with Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American."

Cody on Second of Trio of Society Satires

Having completed "The Beloved Cheater," the first Lew Cody production specially made by Louis J. Gasnier studios, preparations are being made for the second of the three society satires dealing with the romantic phases of sex relationship.

The first Cody special was written by Louis J. Gasnier, the producer, in collaboration with his star. The second Cody picture, one proposed story for which has been discarded as not being of the "new idea" standard set by the premier production, also will be a Cody-Gasnier plot, according to present indications.

Joseph A. Debray will be chief cameraman, with Denver Thompson in charge of lightings and William Howard, head of the property department.

Third Perret Feature Through Pathe

Leonce Perret, the French director, has contributed his third big success to the list of Pathe features in "The Twin Pawns," a five-reel melodrama starring Mae Murray in a most becoming characterization. Mr. Perret's features have appeared twice before on the Pathe schedule, "The Thirteenth Chair" and "The Unknown Love" being the predecessors to "The Twin Pawns."

This production will introduce Mae Murray to Pathe patrons, and, judging from the interest being manifested in "The Twin Pawns," as indicated by the heavy bookings on the picture, the introduction will be most successful. The play is an adaptation of Wilkie Collins' celebrated novel, "The Woman in White."

Unique Drive on W. H. Feature Picture

One of the most unique exploitation campaigns ever devised for any motion picture is now being launched by W. H. Productions Co. on their six reel production, "Everybody's Business," now being sold on the State Right market.

Upon reviewing the picture, one of the officials of the American Legion communicates as follows:

"I want to thank you for the opportunity afforded me recently to review 'Everybody's Business.' Above all I believe it will do much to accomplish one special purpose, namely to enlighten the public on the methods pursued by the Bolshevists in their efforts to create lawlessness, disorder and unrest among the working classes. I sincerely hope that you can arrange to have it produced in every motion picture house in the United States, and you may count upon us for our hearty co-operation in every way possible."

There is not a home in the country which does not hold a veteran of the war—a member of the American Legion. Through this gigantic and powerful organization which will be composed of approximately four million men every home in the United States will hear and learn and want to see this production, because it is everybody's business to be enlightened on the insidious powers at work on the very roots of society, and it is everybody's business to recognize as poison the foul tricks employed to undermine their homes and their happiness.

Not only the American Legion is standing firmly back of this photoplay, but every patriotic national civic organization, every school, college and community center is pledging its help. These organizations are arousing a great interest in "Everybody's Business."

In addition, H. C. Witwer's novelization of the story which will appear in serial form in the newspapers will also give nation-wide publicity to the production.

Author Likes Adaptation of His Story

"One of the most delicately performed operations of transplanting I have ever known," is the way Pelham Grenville Wodehouse describes the Albert Capellani picturization of his novel "A Damsel in Distress," soon to be released by Pathe.

Rather against his inclinations, Mr. Wodehouse attended a private screening of the comedy at the Pathe office. "You see," he explained afterwards, "while I had confidence in Mr. Capellani as a producer—I must have had, else I should never have consented to allowing the story to be adapted for the films—I was just a trifle perturbed as to what might happen in the process, not only of picturizing the tale, but in replacing the locale into America. Now, I am delighted to say that I think Mr. Capellani has done splendidly. He has caught the spirit of every character and preserved carefully in the transformation from England to America.

The Fern Theatre at New Orleans is described as typical of the most comfortable suburban theatres. It is said to be very cool during the summer months and also capable of being heated during the winter

Woman Makes Notable Trip

Eleanor O'Keefe of Chester Beecroft Firm Back from Central Powers Trip

ELEANOR O'KEEFE, who is scheduled to arrive from Copenhagen this week, has achieved a feat of travel altogether unique. Miss O'Keefe, who has been recognized as one of the most brilliant minds in the films world, went abroad early in July in the interests of the firm of Chester Beecroft of 501 Fifth avenue, New York, in which she is a partner. She left ostensibly to visit the Scandinavian Film Agency at Copenhagen, but advices just received by Mr. Beecroft show that she has been successful in carrying out a carefully laid plan to go through Norway and Sweden and then from the Danish Capital to Hamburg, Berlin, Vienna and Warsaw.

It is doubtful if this extraordinary journey through Germany, Austria and Poland has been accomplished by any commercial traveler, male or female, since the Central Powers declared war. It is more important to us to note however, that Miss O'Keefe is unquestionably the first representative of the motion picture industry to make it, and her return, with the story of her adventures and the invaluable information she has acquired, is being awaited with the keenest eagerness by her associates.

"It has always been our policy," Mr. Beecroft told a representative of the NEWS yesterday, "to conduct our business on first-hand knowledge of conditions which prevail in the countries in which we operate. In the summer of 1917 I visited England, France, Scandinavia, Finland and Russia in order to study the special difficulties under which the film market of Europe was being operated while the war was at its height. Immediately upon my return I started, in conjunction with the Scandinavian Film Agency, to lay the pipes for a general distribution of American films. With the greatest care we selected a line of representative subjects that we knew were especially keyed to our market. When I returned to Europe last winter, we had acquired the European rights to six big special pictures, about twelve special productions of more than average merit, a serial, four series of comedies, a series of Scenics and a selected series of ten of our greatest stars, such as Hayakawa, Barriscale, Warner, Barrymore, etc., and to this list we have been constantly adding until we now have the greatest variety and the most formidable array of high-class American film ever selected for European distribution, much of which is now available to buyers for the various open territories.

"Our personal studies and strong connections are making it possible for us to place this film to the utmost advantage in the Allied and Neutral countries, but we believe that we have scored a remarkable feat with regard to the Central Powers.

"Our next campaign, which we will be ready to launch soon after Miss O'Keefe arrives, will be the extension of our territory to include world rights on big productions, and possibly the organization of a producing plant of our own."

Confers in Chicago

William L. Sherrill, President of The Frohman Amusement Corporation returned to New York on Monday, September 22d, stopping off in Chicago where he met Mr. Goldburg, General Manager of the Corporation. A conference was held at the Congress Hotel at which time the enlarged policy of The Frohman Amusement Corporation was determined, and it is expected that Mr. Sherrill will shortly announce a program of releases that will be the most pretentious ever attempted by an independent motion picture producing organization, but sufficient information was gathered to publish the fact that the contract with Texas Guinan was renewed for a second series of thirteen two reel productions to be made upon a still larger scale than the first thirteen, that the Mack Swain Comedies will be continued and a regular staff of writers engaged to write original stories to fit the unusual and peculiar abilities of that comedian.

There is a serial now being produced at the studios of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, and in addition to this it is gleaned that no less than five super-features will be produced and released during the year 1920.

Prior to his leaving for Chicago Mr. Goldburg closed contract with Lee L. Goldburg, General Manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Louisville, Kentucky, for the Texas Guinan two reel Western and Mack Swain single reel comedies for the State of Kentucky. This contract closes out every state rights territory in the United States excepting the West Coast.

Buys Robt. W. Chambers Tales

Isaac Wolper has secured the exclusive modtion picture rights to all the available novels and stories by Robert W. Chambers. There are forty-four books now, and the contract secures him the picture rights to Robert W. Chalmbers' future literary output; also "Slayers of Souls" now running in Heart's Magazine. Isaac Wolper says:

"I am very happy to have consummated this deal which I consider the biggest contract in these days of famous authors' pictures. I am now organizing the Robert W. Chambers Production Corporation with Mr. Chambers taking active part in the corporation and it is my intention to make no more than five productions per year. I will adhere to my policy of making the biggest and finest feature productions that brains and money can create and I want them to be productions which exhibitors will insist on playing for long runs.

"I will also adhere to my policy of giving the director who will be in charge of these productions absolutely free hand in all matters pertaining to the making of each production, from the continuity to the finished product on the screen. I will place no cost limit on any Robert W. Chambers picture. This will also be a matter in full control of the director.

"Furthermore, I will place no time limit whatever for the completion of each picture, because a director cannot do justice to the production and himself unless he can forget the time element altogether. The reasons my policies are successful are that I have always given a director unlimited financial support and his own organization. I have as yet made no final choice of a director but I am of course negotiating. It is obvious that a director with such tremendous responsibilities placed upon him must be an exceptionally big man.

"There is a rumor that a certain producer has advertised that he controls the picture rights to the Robert W. Chambers' stories. I am quoting on the authority of Mr. Chambers when I say that this producer has only the screen rights to four short stories of Mr. Chambers.

Ricord Gradwell Out of World Film

It was announced this week that Ricard Gradwell has resigned as president of World Film, but remains a member of the Board of Directors. Milton C. Work is to succeed him, it is stated.

Briton Busch, in addition to his duties as treasurer, will assume the position of general manager.

Famous-Lasky Enters Canada

Distributing System Extended and Six Branch Offices Are Planned

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will immediately extend its distributing organization to Canada, it was announced last week, and the formation of a company for this purpose has already been completed, the concern to be known as Famous-Lasky Films, Ltd.

Six branch offices will be established covering all districts of Canada and these exchanges will operate along the same lines as employed in Famous Players-Lasky offices in the United States. The personnel to be placed in charge of the Canadian activities of the company, together with other details concerning the new organization were given out last Friday evening by E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, as follows:

"The formation of the Famous-Lasky Films, Ltd., makes it possible for us to distribute throughout the Canadian territory, the product of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in a manner similar to that employed by us in this country, giving the same high calibre of service and establishing the same amount of good will among exhibitors there as we enjoy in the United States.

"With the organization of our own exchanges, operated along the standardized lines now in use here and under the direct supervision of the home office distributing executives in New York, we will be in a position to assure this service to the exhibitors of Canada.

"Six branch offices will be established in Canada. They will be located at Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Calgary, Winnipeg and Vancouver. Selection of offices will take place immediately in these cities and they will be in full operation as soon as it is possible to equip them.

"The same releasing schedule and plans in operation in this country will apply to the Canadian field and exhibitors will be in a position to start right in with our selective booking productions as well as previous subjects. Activities involving the preparation of films and accessories to be used by the new branch offices are already underway and by the time the exchanges are arranged for, the material will be ready so that no time will be lost in starting actual bookings.

"It is with great enthusiasm that we welcome this opportunity of serving Canadian exhibitors in the presentation of Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

"In charge of the Canadian organization will be George W. Weeks, who leaves his post as manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange at St. Louis, Mo., to become general manager for Canada. William A. Bach of the home office will be second in command. R. E. MacIntyre, special representative, will install the systems and standardize the work of the offices. M. Milliken will be in charge of the Calgary branch."

"With Money No Object—"

Exhibitor's Touching Confidence Is Shock to Certain Producing Company

THE man at the desk fell back into his chair dazed. Two pieces of paper slipped from his limp fingers and fluttered to the floor. "Save them," he gasped. "Save them!" Then he lapsed into unconsciousness.

Just when he recovered is not apparent, or important. But he did recover, despite the shock he had received, and it is as a result of the recovery that this amazing story, unparalleled in the annals of motion picture journalism, has come to light.

The man sent the two mystic scraps of paper by registered special delivery mail to New York—and then, strange to say, the scene in his own office was practically re-enacted. The second recipient denies he fainted, but there is reliable authority for the statement that he wasn't "quite right" for the rest of the day.

The third man into whose hands these mystic papers fell is the author of this story, and the manner in which he is writing it probably gives the best evidence of the effect the papers have had upon him.

The story has its beginning in Orange, Texas, but the first chapter as herein noted is based upon an incident in the office of Diaz Callahan at Dallas. Mr. Callahan is an energetic, enthusiastic booster for a certain brand (name deleted by modest producer) of motion pictures which just now are being introduced to the exhibitors of America under a trade mark consisting of a tube of art paint and an artist's palet.

The man in New York who recuperated on a golf course in Connecticut is Arthur S. Kane, president of the aforementioned producing organization which has a trade mark consisting of a tube of art paint superimposed by an artist's palet bearing the words R..... P.....

One of the two scraps of magic paper was a check for $25—and the other was a letter, explaining the check. The check was made payable to the concern using the tube-palet—Realart Pictures trade mark, was drawn at Orange, on the Orange State Bank, and bore in the corner the inscription: "a/c Brady, Minter, Liberty Theater, Orange, Tex." This inscription was taken in Realart circles to indicate an emphatic desire on the part of the exhibitor to insure for his theatre first call on the pictures of the stars named.

But the knockout was in the letter.

"Gentlemen, enclosed you will find check for $25, for which I am asking you to hold contracts open until I can see you Sunday—and then if we fail to trade, you may use the $25 if you care to for any inconvenience I might have caused you.

"Thanking you and hoping to see you Sunday, I am, Respectfully, J. A. Stewart, Liberty Theatre."

Metro Gets Heavy Bookings

The countrywide response by theatre circuits and individuals exhibitors to Metro Pictures Corporation's policy, recently inaugurated, of "fewer and better" pictures has come in the expected but none the less gratifying form of more extensive and longer bookings, according to Metro officials.

Telegrams daily from Metro exchanges and from exhibitors themselves reveal the fact that not only is the first Nazimova picture, "The Brat," being booked, but also the initial trio of Screen Classics, Inc., specials, "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana; "Lombardi, Ltd.," with Bert Lytell in the stellar role; and May Allison's first under the new policy, "Fair and Warmer." In addition, motion picture managers and owners are coming into the branch offices to contract for the entire Metro output for the coming year.

Among the latest of progressive concerns to book the entire product of the Nazimova Productions and Screen Classics, Inc., studios released through Metro, are the Turner and Dantin Circuit, in California, which has picture theatres in Sacramento, Stockton, San Francisco, San Jose, and Berkeley; the Family Theatre, Jackson, Mich.; the Regent Theatre, Muskegon, Mich.; and the American Theatre, Oakland, California.

Fischer Organization Is Very Active

As may be judged from the manner in which it is acquiring screen material, A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., will have a busy production season. The firm now owns a number of stories by Robert W. Chambers for picture purposes, and having just arranged for a supply of original scripts by Charles A. Logue, well known scenario writer and one of the founders of the corporation, an active schedule will be needed to absorb the material secured.

Though only one company is now operated consideration is being given to plans for the formation of another company. If these plans materialize, as they doubtless will, one company will probably be engaged in converting the Chambers stories into film form while the other will be devoted to filming the Logue 'scripts.

The Fischer organization is well prepared for such expansion. The former Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., renamed the A. H. Fischer Studios and Laboratory after being purchased by Mr. Fischer, afford ample space and equipment for an additional company with the two improved stages. As a matter of fact the facilities are adequate to accommodate the needs of three or four companies.

The firm is concentrating its efforts on the production of special features, which are being put on in accordance with the principles of showmanship under the personal direction of B. A. Rolfe, who is sponsor for the company's output. These principles call for the production of pictures of exceptional drawing power and artistic merit. As being the basis of such pictures, the Chambers and the Logue stories were acquired.

BIG FOUR DENIES RUMOR OF GOLDWYN RELEASE

LAST week rumors had it that the product of United Artists Corporation—the "Big Four"—would be handled through the Goldwyn Distributing Organization.

When this report was called to the attention of the United Artists Corporation Home Office, it was stated that absolutely nothing was known of such a move.

Nevertheless, at the instance of several of the more conservative trade papers, who had heard the story and who naturally wanted absolute verification before publication, the Home Office wired to Hiram Abrams, who is at the Coast, to ascertain if any semblance of truth lay back of the report.

Mr. Abrams has wired back an unqualified and absolute denial.

name in print that he just cannot refrain from "telling us all about things?"

We have not been at any time and are not now prejudiced against this gentleman or the product of the producing concern he represents and would buy from him as readily as any other individual or organization any time we are convinced that he has something we need and will sell it at a price that is fair and equitable.

We merely reserve the privilege of crediting ourselves with knowing what we need, when we need it and how much it is worth to us.

I again proclaim and maintain that the Northwest has at least one duly constituted, properly organized, progressive and prosperous independent exchange.

Luna Amusement Co. Spreading Interests

The Luna Amusement Company, Herbert H. Johnson general manager, is fast becoming an exhibitor power in Indiana, according to report. It operates the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., and has now purchased the Lyric theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind. Mr. Johnson will be in personal charge of the house.

The company is to increase its capital to $500,000 and is negotiating for the purchase of several large theatres in the State.

Theatre Helps Salvation Army Drive

A unique stunt was put over by the Strand Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D., when doughnuts, made from the recipe used by the wife of the captain of the local Salvation Army at Verdun, were dispensed to patrons of the theatre, to add to the home service fund for the Army being raised in South Dakota. Over two hundred and fifty dollars was raised in this manner.

C. W. Gates is manager of the Strand and in charge of Salvation Army relief work for his block.

"Lombardi" Shown In West

Premier of Metro Release Featuring Bert Lytell at California Theatre

"LOMBARDI, LTD.," Bert Lytell's first Screen Classics, Inc., special production released by Metro under its "fewer and better" pictures policy, had its pre-release showing at the New California Theater in Los Angeles, during the week beginning September 22. It is the second Metro special to be accorded this distinction, as "The Brat," starring Nazimova, recently had a pre-release run of a week at the New California, where the picture established a new attendance record for the house, despite the fact that while it was the attraction there, the city was in the throes of a transportation strike that paralyzed all its transit lines.

"Lombardi, Ltd.," is also the second of the four Metro productions which Fred H. Miller, president, and Harry Leonhardt, productions director, booked "sight unseen" for the highly discriminating audiences that patronize the California. Besides "The Brat," the other two are "Fair and Warmer," the Avery Hopwood farce starring May Allison, and "Please Get Married," the Morosco stage success by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, starring Viola Dana. Other succeeding Screen Classics, Inc., productions are to show at the California as they are released by Metro.

Thirteen weeks of arduous, unremitting labor was required to complete the production of "Lombardi, Ltd." Of the 70,000 feet of film photographed in the entire period a little less than 6,000 feet were finally selected by Director General Karger for the completed picture. Five persons were present in the dark projection room at the big studios in Hollywood when the final work was first shown.

The five present were: Bert Lytell, the star; Maxwell Karger, Director General; June Mathis, adapter of the stage play by Francis and Fanny Hatton and scenario writer; Col. Jasper Brady, film editor, and George A. McGuire, chief cutter. After the final work had been approved, only the lettering of the subtitles remained, and then the completed negative and a positive print were shipped to the home office in New York City immediately.

Eminent Authors Films Ready

Release of "Cup of Fury" and "The Silver Horde" to Be Made Next Month

EMINENT AUTHORS PICTURES, INC., announce that the first two productions by Rupert Hughes and Rex Beach have been completed at the Goldwyn studios. They are "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes, and "The Silver Horde," by Rex Beach, produced under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter and Frank Lloyd.

Heralded by a great advance publicity campaign, the Eminent Authors have made remarkably rapid progress in production. With three new directors and additional stages at the gigantic Culver City studios, the Goldwyn forces have surpassed expectations. New actors of distinction have been secured for leading roles, and five of the Eminent Authors have travelled from New York to the coast to cooperate. Mary Roberts Rinehart and Basil King are now at work in the studios. Gertrude Atherton is returning to California for her second production. Rex Beach and Rupert Hughes were there when "The Silver Horde" and "The Cup of Fury" were in process.

Betty Blythe, Myrtle Stedman, Curtis Cooksey, Hector Sarno and Robert McKim are all members of the company Frank Lloyd has directed for the Rex Beach picture. Forest fires were encountered in the state of Washington, but some of the greatest fighting scenes ever shown were shot at Lummi Island and at Seattle. The silver horde of salmon add their fascination.

In "The Cup of Fury" are Helene Chadwick, Rockliffe Fellowes, Florence Deshon, Herbert Standing, Sydney Ainsworth as the leading members in a cast personally selected by Rupert Hughes.

Following the completion of the two Eminent Authors productions now ready for titling and editing, come Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," Gertrude Atherton's "Perch of the Devil," Leroy Scott's "Partners of the Night," and Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Dangerous Days." The first production by Gouverneur Morris will be announced later, when he goes to the Goldwyn studios for the winter. The second productions by Rex Beach and Rupert Hughes are said to have been decided upon, but no announcement will be made until the return of Samuel Goldwyn from the coast.

Herrington Makes Few Predictions

The exhibitors of Pennsylvania are in good financial position and organized strongly according to word received from F. J. Herrington, secretary of the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Virginia and West Virginia. He adds:

"I hope to see the day in the near future when we will hold a convention of, for and by the exhibitors without any interference from the producer or distributor, and when that time comes it will be the exhibitor that will set the scale of prices that they will pay for service. At that time we will be in a position to call the distributors into conference to take up for consideration a scale of prices as adopted at an Exhibitors' Convention, and not as it is today, the producer and distributor set a price and tell the exhibitor that if he does not accept the terms they will give it to his opposition, or they will open up a theatre in his town and if possible put him out of business."

Community Picture Bureau Shifts Quarters

Southwest headquarters of the Community Motion Picture Bureau were shifted, on September 1, from San Antonio to Dallas, Texas. This is an organization that supplies films of an educational nature to churches, schools and colleges, and does not enter into competition with the exhibitor. W. E. Paschall, who recently left the service of the A. E. F., and who was a lieutenant, is director. The office in Dallas will handle the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Arizona and New Mexico.

Star, Buffalo House, to Run Photoplays

The Star theatre, for almost a half century Buffalo's principal theatre, has been purchased by Buffalo and Rochester theatrical interests, prominent among whom are J. H. Michael, manager of the Victoria and Regent theatres and A. A. Fennyvessy, owner of several big houses in the flower city. The sum involved is said to be in excess of $350,000. The policy of the house for the first six weeks will be feature photoplays to be followed by a regular policy of popular vaudeville and pictures. It is reported that one of the large producing companies is negotiating for an interest in the house.

United Picture Corp. Stock on the Curb

Unusual interest was manifested in the introduction on the curb of the United Picture Production Corporation stock, which is the production factor for the United Picture Theatres of America. This is the first film stock to be brought out since the introduction on the curb some time ago of Famous Players-Lasky.

"Cherub Devine"
By Sewell Ford

Character of Story: Comedy drama.

Theme: Reputation.

Characters: "Cherub" Devine, rich young Wall Street operator; Countess Vecchi, who came with the house; Mr. Hewington, her father; Nick Walloway, stock broker and society man; Francois Cunetto, blackmailer; Eppings, the butler; Timmins, the head groom; Rimmer, Wall Street pirate; private detectives, neighbors and others.

The Plot: "Cherub" Devine, who has fought his way to fortune at an early age has been endowed with the nick-name of "Cherub" by his associates because of his unfailing good nature and with a riotous reputation by the Sunday press which delights to relate imaginary exploits upon his part and dress up the real ones beyond recognition. Cherub is approached by a real estate agent who offers to sell him a forty-room house, estate and all appurtenances on Long Island. As he has been wondering what to do over week ends, he accepts the offer off-hand and much to the astonishment of the agent, hands him a check for fifteen thousand to bind the bargain. The first night he goes to the new place he finds everything in order but the house seems lonely. In the library he thinks he sees a skirt swish out of the door and finds a handkerchief on the floor—a woman's handkerchief with the initial "V" upon it. Next day he encounters a handsome young woman in the garden. The butler, under pressure, explains that Mr. Hewington, the former owner, is still in the house because of the illness of his sister and that his daughter, the Countess Vecchi is with him. The Countess has had a brief matrimonial experience with a Count whom her father selected and who choked her two hours after the ceremony because she refused him gambling money. The Count is supposed to be dead. The Countess drops in on Devine at dinner and explains matters with some condescension and further explains that owing to Devine's reputation as a spendthrift and general gay dog, her father feels that she should have nothing to do with him; besides he does not seem to them to be quite a gentleman. Devine is at first amused and then picqued. Hewington is an impractical visionary who never earned a cent in his life and who does not yet realize what it means to be without money though his house has been sold over his head. Devine invites Nick Walloway, ambitious to become Devine's broker, to come to Sunday night supper and bring a visiting Bishop whom Cherub has met abroad as well as other aristocratic neighbors; this to show Hewington that he has some respectable friends. It has no effect. The Countess endeavors to slip out in the night with the intention of running away from the place, but Cherub insists on going along and carrying her suit case. They get soaked with rain and finally return. Countess Vecchi accuses Cherub of being a gambler and he stays away from Wall Street for three days while Rimmer raids his railway interests. The Countess learns he is doing this to please her and insists that he go in to "smash" his enemies. He does so. Some stock which he handed him to sell turns out to be the very stock needed to win the fight for Cherub. Cherub learns that Nick loves her and generously gives Nick his chance, sending him back with a check for the stock and an offer to sell back the estate for less than he paid for it. The Countess insists upon seeing Cherub. He returns and confesses his love but she, while touched, tells him it can never be. As he is leaving he encounters a man who claims to be Count Vecchi bent on blackmail and locks him in the ice-house. Further complications ensue but it develops that the real Count is dead and this man is an imposter. The Countess and her father have been paying him blackmail under the impression that he was the real Count. Released, the Countess decides that the Cherub is enough of a gentleman to love.

Locale: Long Island estate and Wall Street.

Picture High Lights: Good comedy situations numerous; love scenes good; entertainment in big house; fight in Wall Street; capture of Count; escape of Count.

"Tracing the Shadow"
By Carolyn Wells

Character of Story: Detective; murder.

Theme: Mystery.

Characters: Amos Gately, financial magnate, who is shot in first chapter; Tom Brice, lawyer; Norah McCormack, Brice's stenographer; Jenny Boyd, Gately's stenographer; Olive Raynor, Gately's ward; Amory Manning, hero; George Rodman; Chief of Police Martin; Foxy Jim Hudson; Pennington Wise, expert detective; Zizi, his assistant; Mrs. Vail, Miss Raynor's companion; Sadie Kent, telegraph operator; Mr. Talcott, Mr. Mason, Minny.

Plot: Tom Brice sees two moving shadows behind the ground glass of an office door, hears a pistol shot, a woman's scream, and upon entering the office to investigate, finds it entirely empty. Later a private elevator is discovered leading to a secret door behind a map in Gately's office, and his body is found in it on the ground floor. It develops that Gately was engaged in forwarding code messages, intercepted by Sadie Kent, to the German Government, Amory Manning, a special agent in the secret service, was detailed to hunt down a certain branch of the spy system in New York, went to Gately's office for positive evidence against him, found him guilty of the blackest treason, and in order to prevent his escape, shot him, intending only to wound him, just as he rushed into the secret elevator. The elevator automatically descended and while Manning was hunting for its entrance on the first floor, which was through another building, Brice and Chief Martin had discovered the body. While on his way to report to the Federal Bureau in a blinding snowstorm, Manning stepped into an open manhole and awoke to find himself in Bellevue Hospital with his memory entirely gone. As he had been wearing a makeup which absolutely disguised him while working on the case, and which was washed off during the time when he was floated out to the Hudson River, no one recognized him, and not until his memory returns, is the mystery solved. He has been in love with Miss Raynor from the first and she then accepts him.

Locals: New York, practically all interiors.

Picture High Lights: Unusual twists to the story.
